TALK is cheap. Anybody can buy advertising space and fill it with "Talk."

It takes merit, however, real merit, to book Comedies at The STRAND Theatre, New York's Finest Moving Picture House. When the comedy situation at this big House needed a tonic to boost business The STRAND immediately booked "SPIKE'S BUSY BIKE," "THE END OF A PERFECT DAY" and "NABBIN' A NOBLE."

ALL the advertising talk that you could read from now till next Xmas wouldn't mean a hundredth part as much to you as the fact that New York's Finest Picture Theatre selected these L-KO Comedies in the face of the fact that any number of comedies were offered simultaneously to the Strand. If the critical Strand can use L-KO'S, any House in the world can to immense advantage. WATCH for the big things COMING.

BLUEBIRDS HAVE A

FOLLOWING are extracts from a few of the hundreds of letters we are constantly receiving from enthusiastic Exhibitors who have found in BLUEBIRD Photoplays the perfect entertainment that attracts and pleases their patrons, and proves profitable in every sense of the word. Read them. They are from men who, like yourself, are in business to make money:

I have noted with much interest the steady improvement in QUALITY and the ever increasing POPULARITY and PRESTIGE of the BLUEBIRD Program. I have paid more than ordinary attention to the PROGRESS of the BLUEBIRD Program because in the Spring of 1916 I staked my judgment on its WINNING QUALITIES against the advice and opinions of a number of Film Men who were in a good position to be qualified judges of a Program's possibilities, and have seen my judgment verified. The fact that the BLUEBIRD Program has lived up to and exceeded my expectations, explains my unusual interest.—WM. E. POWELL, Columbia, Pa.

We find them uniformly clean, meritorious, well played and all the productions are excellent. This is not my personal opinion but that of our patrons also, as we endeavor to ascertain from them from time to time their likes and dislikes, and cater to their tastes.—JOHN POPULIAS, Steubenville, Ohio.

BIRDS RIVED

BLUEBIRD features rank among the very best film productions on the market in every respect. I have run quite a number of BLUEBIRD features in my house, all of which have pleased my patrons immensely. To a number of my patrons all I have to say is "There's a Bluebird Coming" and regardless of the title of the subject they turn out in large numbers knowing that they will have the pleasure of witnessing a good picture.—C. E. BERNARD, London, Ont.

I am proud to give place on the Circle screen to "THE MYSTERIOUS MRS. M."—S. BARRET McCORMICK, Indianapolis, Ind.

If there are any houses in this neck of the woods you are unable to put BLUEBIRDS in and I can assist you in any way to accomplish this, I will only be to glad to help, as "I am strong for BLUEBIRDS" (Why?) Because "BLUEBIRDS" are strong for me, having won a home with my patrons.—A. A. ULM, Randolph, Neb.

Must say in all my eleven years' experience of operating and managing houses, "THE THREE GOD-FATHERS" is the Greatest and Best Picture I have ever had the pleasure to witness.—H. M. MASON, Newman Grove, Neb.

Why gamble with flivver features? BLUEBIRDS are sure winners. The finest feature films on the market today. You can get your share of the wonderful BLUEBIRD popularity by communicating with your local BLUEBIRD Exchange, or

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPlays

A Little Philosophy on Bluebird Photoplays

What is the object of moving pictures?—Entertainment.

For whom is this entertainment created?—The Public.

Who pays for all this entertainment?—The Public.

Who knows best what character of entertainment is desired?—The Public.

Who then is the first and last judge of what it wants to see?—The Public.

Is it reasonable then to suppose (guided by the foregoing facts) that people who pay good money to be entertained are best versed in judging what they spend their money to see? Yes.

Then, read what Mr. A. E. Sewell, of Minneapolis, Minn., says about BLUEBIRD Photoplays and bear in mind that Mr. Sewell is one of thousands who have written to BLUEBIRD Photoplays expressing appreciation of BLUEBIRD productions.

"The writer is one of those people who prefers to shop in one particular store, eat in a particular restaurant, and patronize a particular barbershop. Therefore, I would prefer to have at least a favorite theatre—a theatrical home as it were. I have never been able to decide on the latter because I have never been able to find one that satisfied me. But last Saturday night I think I found it. I am convinced that it will be that theatre that shows BLUEBIRDS regularly." (Signed) A. E. SEWELL, Minneapolis, Minn.

Mr. Sewell reflects the judgment of millions of people throughout this and other countries, who know what they want, and who gladly pay for the kind of entertainment that really entertains.

BLUEBIRDS HAVE ARRIVED in every section of this country. BLUEBIRDS HAVE ARRIVED TO STAY. . . BLUEBIRD Photoplays are the answer to the great National demand for better pictures—for entertainment that really entertains.

Some exhibitors are jealous of the success of their competitors. Other Exhibitors haven't time to be jealous or to wonder how the "Other fellow" gets the money—the profits and the prestige. The wise Exhibitor learns what is winning Nationally and nails the "Winner" for his House. That's why hundreds and hundreds of shrewd Exhibitors have thrown out the thread-bare mediocre of "features" and are holding fast and boosting hard for BLUEBIRDS.

How about you?

MARJORIE RAMBEAU MAKES FILM DEBUT IN "GREATER WOMAN"

MARJORIE RAMBEAU, famous star of "Cheating Cheaters," makes her screen debut this week. In the first of the releases from the studios of the Frank Powell Producing Corporation, Miss Rambeau appears as Auriole Praed, who falls in love with an artist. Despite the fact that this is Miss Rambeau's first appearance before a motion picture camera she performs with all the ease, grace and lack of self-consciousness that marks her work upon the speaking stage. To see her act one would imagine that she had been working in the studios for some time.

A Broadway Beauty.

Miss Rambeau brings both beauty and brains to her work. On Broadway she has risen to fame as one of the most radiant beauties of that famous thoroughfare. In her playing of various roles she has demonstrated time and again the amount of study she has put in in creating them. The first of the Rambeau-Mutual Photoplays is an adaptation of the famous European success, "The Greater Woman," from the pen of Algernon Boyesen. It is in five acts. It is lavishly staged. Miss Rambeau is surrounded by a cast that includes many players of note. The lighting effects and stage settings are unusual to say the least.

Heart Interest Story.

A real heart interest story is unfolded as the film progresses. A woman's fight for her husband's love is vividly depicted. When the wife discovers that another woman is attractive to her husband, she sets out to prove herself the greater of the two. The working out of the story will hold audiences spellbound. "The Greater Woman" is released the week of February 26. Bookings can be made now at any Mutual Film Exchange.

American Signs

New Players

Within the past few weeks the American Film Company, Inc., has added several players of note to its roster. George Fisher, until recently connected with the Ince studios, was engaged to play opposite Mary Miles Minter. Jack Vosburgh, another newcomer, has a strong role in William Russell's next picture—"My Fighting Gentleman," and still more recently Lucille Younger was signed to play a heavy role opposite Russell in "High Play."

Work on the first of the Mutual-Emple All Star Corporation's productions has begun at an eastern studio.

WORK PROGRESSING ON MUTUAL SERIAL— "RAILROAD RAIDERS"

Work on "The Railroad Raiders" is progressing nicely at the Los Angeles studios of the Signal Film Corporation. "The Railroad Raiders" is the big new chapterplay starring Helen Holmes. It will be released through the exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation. It is a tremendously powerful story of railroad life. It is based upon a remarkable railroad story from the pen of a man who has spent years of his life in actual railway circles. Many of the incidents are based on real happenings on certain western railroads. Some of these incidents are spectacular in the extreme. "The Railroad Raiders" will set new speed records when the throttle is opened and the right of way signal finally given. Reservations can be made at any Mutual Film Exchange. The new chapterplay is in fifteen chapters, each two reels in length.

"Girl Reporters" Opens New Theater

For the opening attraction of a new Ohio theatre, the management selected the Mutual's big serial of newspaper life—"The Perils of Our Girl Reporters." Turnaway business resulted. Earl Metcalfe, Helen Greene and Zena Keefe are continuing to attract crowds. Nothing exactly like this thrilling series of newspaper stories has ever before been screened. Exhibitors are loud in their praise of its novelty. Any Mutual Exchange can arrange bookings. Each story is complete in itself—each is an actual incident from real newspaper life.

"DAMAGED GOODS" NOW AVAILABLE FOR BIG THEATERS

MUTUAL Film Exchanges all over the country are reporting a tremendous demand for the New Edition of "Damaged Goods"—the big seven reel Mutual Special Feature, starring Richard Bennett. Exhibitors everywhere are taking advantage of the opportunity offered them for showing this big feature attraction which has played some of the biggest theatres in America at admission prices of 50c or higher. This play, revised, re-edited—with a new prologue and a new conclusion, has just been released anew. It is an attraction that has been endorsed by some of the most famous divines, physicians and social uplift workers in the country. It features Richard Bennett—one of America's foremost male stars. It is a production that has been nationally advertised. Full week showings in big cities throughout America are now being contracted for. Full details regarding prices, open dates, advertising helps and lobby displays on "Damaged Goods" can be obtained from your nearest Mutual Exchange.

Chaplin Scores Hit With "East Street"

"Easy Street," the newest of the Chaplin-Mutual Specials, has been a riot since the first day of its release. Theatres all over the country have "stood 'em up" with the latest Chaplin-Mutual release. The public has hugely enjoyed it. It isn't a promised success—a picture that is likely to be a hit—but a success accomplished—one that has already been proven to be a money maker. The exhibitor booking it is taking no gamble. He is certain of its drawing powers. Now available at all Mutual Exchanges are "The Floorwalker," "The Fireman," "The Vagabond," "One A. M.," "The Count," "The Pawnshop," "Behind the Screen," "The Rink" and "Easy Street." All of them are Chaplin-Mutual Specials. All of them are playing to capacity business wherever shown. Some theatres have played them over and over again, the re-booking proving more profitable than did even the first run on the same subject.

The sequel to "The Diamond From the Sky," many theatres report, has drawn even bigger houses than the original story. Its photography, direction, stage-settings, story and enactment all are of high calibre. It is a splendid attraction whether you played the original serial or not. Booking now at Mutual Exchanges.

Get a GAUMONT ticket for TOURS around the WORLD

When the old man passes in his checks and the heirs get their hands on the yellow boys, what happens? You know; it happens in your town just as it does everywhere else. The widow and the children rush right down to the steamship office and buy a yard or two of tickets. It's human nature to want to go some place. And if you can't go, you like to read about the places and see pictures of them.

Now just let this sink into your thought factory. You will make big money being a benefactor of every person who enters your theater when you show Gaumont's "Tours Around the World." You show the owner of the yen, the shekel, and the mazuma just where they can plant them abroad, and you show us poor stay-at-homes the places from which our rich relatives send us post cards. Just take a slant at the ticket down the left-hand side of this page. It shows a few of the places to which you can travel NOW with Gaumont. Any Mutual Branch will map out your tour for you. Once a week you can take your patrons on an "arm-chair journey to foreign lands." They will come back for more the next week, and every week. This reel, is not a "filler;" it's a one-reel "feature."

Toot! Toot! The whistle's blowing. Get aboard NOW and book your theater for the season.

Gentlemen;

It gives me great pleasure to advise you that I have done a record business in my five theatres that are running the SEVEN DEADLY SINS.

On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week I showed ENVY to capacity houses throughout the day and evening, and in five of the houses could not accommodate the people who desired to get in.

I can say with entire frankness and without hesitancy that the SEVEN DEADLY SINS are the biggest money getting pictures I have ever put out.

Wishing you the very best of luck, I am,

ENVY

"The series gets a flying start in 'Envy'—Snappy Stuff—Miss Murdock delightful—Shirley Mason could hardly be improved upon—Other manufacturers should envy the McClure Company—Should be eagerly watched for by exhibitors."

—THE CRITICS.

PRIDE

"Twice as good as 'Envy'—A great bit of work—The audience is sure of plenty of thrills—Many dramatic moments—Photography faultless—Wealth of fast 'snap-snap' action—If the McClure people can keep up the pace they have set in No. 2 for the rest of the seven, they should find a ready market."

—THE CRITICS.

GREED

"Particularly impressed with 'Greed'—Moulded in the form most popular with the fans—A fine full-grown punch—The maximum of dramatic surprise and thrill—Holds one's interest from beginning to end—For a play containing ingenuity of plot, accumulative interest, we recommend 'Greed.'"

—THE CRITICS.

SLOTH

"Will bring applause, especially at this time—A timely release—Charlotte Walker puts fire and sincerity into her interpretation—Liberal use of the flag—Designed to arouse patriotism—Shirley Mason a convincing and well graced figure—Plenty of that McClure cardinal virtue—action."

THE CRITICS.

"THE GREAT SECRET"

Metro Serial Is Breaking All
Box Office Records.

Metro's new serial, "The Great Secret," in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are co-stars, is already breaking box office records and achieving a tribute rarely accorded a motion picture—that of receiving audible praise from its audiences. Exhibitors are unanimous in reports of the way in which this new screen novel has been received by their patrons.

A sample indication of this general appreciation is shown at B. F. Keith's Greenpoint Theater, where Manager Massaud says he is playing to capacity and is regularly sold out by 2 o'clock on each day that "The Great Secret" is on the bill.

Besides the human appeal in this screen novel of fifteen chapters there are sufficient thrills and stirring scenes to awaken the interest of the most jaded theatergoer. William Christy Cabanne, who adapted and produced "The Great Secret," is known as "the wizard of the screen" and was for years chief of staff to D. W. Griffith.

Sworn Testimony For the New York Legislature

SAMUEL GOLDFISH, President of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, testifying before the New York legislative investigation committee, said:

"Goldwyn will have spent $1,000,000 for productions before its first picture is released.

"Goldwyn believes that the story is the important factor and that it will become constantly more important. But, pending such a development, Goldwyn is combining the greatest stars with the greatest stories.

"Our artists under contract include Mary Garden, Maxine Elliott, Mae Marsh, Jane Cowl and Madge Kennedy. These great personalities are worth every dollar we pay them."

Commenting editorially on this, the New York Sun says: "Mr. Goldfish is right." Hundreds of newspapers and thousands of exhibitors will indorse the sanity of this Goldwyn policy.

MAE MARSH

Every great newspaper authority praises her dramatic power, her youthful appeal, her sincerity and points to her constantly growing popularity.

Here are some of the things the critics say:

ASHTON STEVENS, Chicago Examiner: "Mae Marsh is the first actress in my experience to possess a mental magnetism translatable to the celluloid."

W. N. HARDY, Boston Post: "Mae Marsh is a girl of smiles and tears—a remarkable figure in the screen world."

RANDOLPH BARTLETT, Photoplay Magazine: "Mae Marsh possesses the biggest thing in the creative world—SINCERITY. A star of the first magnitude at twenty."

NEW YORK TIMES: "Mae Marsh is the Maude Adams of the screen."

LOUELLA PARSONS, Chicago Herald: "Mae Marsh is the best actress on the screen."

R. G. MCCOY, Pittsburgh Leader: "Mae Marsh is 'The Girl of 1,000 Faces'—every one of them appealing."

CHARLES DARNTON, N. Y. Evening World: "Mae Marsh is a vivid, electric actress."

HARRIETTE UNDERHILL, New York Tribune: "There is only one Mae Marsh."

CHICAGO DAILY NEWS: "Mae Marsh is the BERNHARDT of the films."

ROB REEL, Chicago American: "Mae Marsh is becoming the most popular star in America."

Exhibitors do not have to be told of the Value of a Star who thus appeals to the best brains of the American Press

"We presented your feature 'SKINNER'S DRESS SUIT.' In my estimation, it is destined to rank high among photoplays of renown. It is entertaining and enjoyable from the first moment to the last. It is pure, clean and sweet. In it Bryant Washburn surely comes into his own and gives a characterization that is truly splendid.

"I listened to the comments of the patrons and it was the unanimous verdict that the picture was fine. Even the House Manager, usually blase and unresponsive, had a smile from ear to ear and exclaimed, 'It's a bear.'"

A Good Title is Half the Battle

You can't expect to make money with poorly titled pictures

A DAUGHTER of DARING

Series of One-Part Railroad Dramas ought to pack them in on the strength of its name alone.

But it has more to recommend it than a good, catchy title.

It has Helen Gibson for its star—

It is produced in Kalem's thorough style—

And each episode tells a complete story.

Short Length Features

These one-part dramas by contributing authors familiar with the technique of Railroading, are just as truly features as productions six times their length.

And we urge you to say so in your local advertising.
We also want you to see the first episode—

"In the Path of Peril"

featuring HELEN GIBSON

Your General Film Exchange will be pleased to make an appointment to suit your convenience.

"THE HAZARDS OF HELEN"

Now that we are marketing a New Series of Railroad Dramas featuring Helen Gibson, do not lose sight of our original Railroad Series—the one that ran more than two years before we brought it to a close. If you have never played any of the "Hazards," you have a money-making treat coming to you. Complete One-part Dramas.

"THE GIRL FROM FRISCO"

There are twenty-five of these, complete two-part Western dramas, adapted from Robert Welles Ritchie's stories originally published in "Short Stories" magazine. You never ran any better two-part pictures no matter who made them. Featuring Marin Sais and True Boardman.

"GRANT, POLICE REPORTER"

Does it mean anything to you that we are continually receiving letters from exhibitors to continue this Series indefinitely? Big stories they are, each complete, written by Robert Welles Ritchie, featuring George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby. They'll remind you of the one reel epics of days gone by; packed with action and thrills of the kind that pull people out of their seats.

HAM COMEDIES

Ham and Bud have become indispensable to hundreds of wide-awake showmen. Their comedy is always clean and put over in masterful style. Your patrons will thoroughly enjoy the antics of this funny pair.

Facts and Comments

WHATEVER may be the popular opinion of the usefulness of legislative investigating committees close observers of the work being done by the Wheeler committee, which is investigating motion picture industrial conditions, are unanimous in the belief that no such committee has ever worked harder or more conscientiously or has secured more genuine information on the subject under investigation. This is saying much for a legislative committee and, if true, we may look with confidence for a safe and sane conclusion of the whole matter.

In investigations of this sort it too often happens that the ultimate action of the legislative body as a whole has been previously mapped out and determined and that the "investigators" are merely looking for such information as will substantiate the final action when taken. The lamb has been marked for the slaughter, and the justifying evidence must be manufactured. There are indications in this case that a different course is being pursued. It is not that we believe the motion picture industry is to go scot free, but we do believe that a tax if imposed will be so placed that the burden may be equitably divided among the different branches of the industry.

On this point a strong inference has been given that there will be no tax placed on small exhibitors. If it is true that exhibitors are not to be taxed directly there is much ground for hope. It is true, and the MOVING PICTURE WORLD believes that the Wheeler committee cannot fail to make the discovery, that every exhibitor is already overburdened. The demand made upon him in almost every municipality in New York State is greater than any other industry has ever been asked to meet. So insistent and persistent have been these assaults that exhibitors, either singly or collectively, have never been able successfully to defend themselves. Many have been forced out of business thereby and others are on the verge of bankruptcy. To add another dollar to that burden would be the height of injustice and would border upon confiscation.

THIS is the open season on censorship bills. In a score of states measures have been introduced looking toward regulation of motion pictures incidentally, and toward providing a few more "jobs" for political henchmen mainly. In many of the states where the industry has been threatened with censoritis the exhibitors are out "gunning" in full force, but in others there is a lack of interest that may permit some obnoxious legislation. A case in point is that of Kansas, where the exhibitors' indifference allowed a very bad example of censor bill to become a law. The same is true of Pennsylvania. There should be no censorship laws by default.

In this connection there have come to our attention complaints from exhibitors to the effect that the various exchanges in states where censorship is pending have refused to lend their assistance in the fight. Whatever has been the practice in the past the exhibitor should not depend upon the exchange to help him out of his troubles. For the most part the manager of exchange branches is but a hired man. If there is to be any outside assistance it should come from the home office of the distributing company, or from the producer of pictures. Theoretically the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is supposed to handle censor bill contests and, while that organization is doing all that its resources will permit, there is a painful lack of funds which prevents it from prosecuting a vigorous campaign in every state. Hence, it remains for the exhibitor to get busy and make the best fight he can put up.

APROMINENT Southern exhibitor controlling several high class theaters heartily endorses the MOVING PICTURE WORLD for its article on this page two weeks ago refusing advertising on films that we considered harmful to the industry. He pertinently says that without publicity these abominations of the screen would soon die out. Unfortunately there are a few men in the exhibiting end of the business as well as in the producing and renting end who will rush to get such pictures, and the more we tell of their unfitness the more they desire to get them. In this way the one per cent. counteracts all the good intentions of the ninety-nine per cent. and so the demand for censorship secures ample excuse for its existence.

Making a Hit

By Louis Reeves Harrison

DID it ever strike you that the audience makes the hit? What do any of us know about it anyway until we hear from that uncertain quantity the common people, damned by every weakling director and impotent playwright in the land? Of course the author must burn with ambition as he writes his story—it is about all he has to keep him warm—and the director must be saturated with egotism to put on the stuff he elects to visualize, or we would not be floating serenely on in the general flood of mediocre production toward higher salaries for our star performers. Nearly all the wealthy families of the future will be descended from movie stars and munition makers according to present indications.

Did you ever hear of a director insisting, in his contract or verbally, that he must be given good plays to put on? Never. He thinks that his brass will be taken for pure gold. Until a few comet actors suddenly lighted up the movie skies, the director took anything that came along and smeared it over with his own personality and pet theories and declared that it would outshine the stars themselves, to say nothing of a few little half-burned candles, the hack scenario scribes. To the producer he said, "You don't need plays; you don't need actors; all that you need is me. I am the whole orchestra from leader to drummer."

You will find that the director who is modest enough to acknowledge that he did not "make" Frohman and Belasco is one of a line long enough to stretch from Times Square to the Battery who "made a hit on Broadway." As a gentleman of dextrous insincerity he can make the average Hamfat turn green with envy. No director ever made a hit on Broadway, inside of a theater or out on the pavement. Now and then, author, actor, director and stage carpenter have united in a harmony of purpose and evolved a play which the people in front have discovered to be a work of art.

"Let's do another like that," suggests the producer with enthusiasm. Each one of the factors in production swells up and honestly believes that he did the whole thing. "It was my play," says the Author. "Where would your play have been without me?" says the Director. "And me," says the Actor, the Camera Man, the Art Director, and the Stage Carpenter. The unvarnished truth is that the complete production, like a human being, is the creature of Heredity, Environment and Circumstances—through others of its kind.

Odd as it may seem at first glance, it is that impression which counts. The main object of nearly everything expressed in language and pictures is the effect it makes on the imagination or memory of those to whom it is addressed. The effect of a light screen presentation may be temporary, or of a strong one permanent—on the effect; on the impression it makes on the public, depend both its artistic and its financial value.

This may seem like trying to enforce the obvious, but the very fact that an idea is self-evident, that it is easily seen by all, often causes it to be overlooked. There it stands in plain view—it is the impression we are after—yet it is continually disregarded. For the sake of trivial economy, subtitles are rarely made effective by illustrative designs in harmony with what is imprinted on the screen, though they excite both attention and feeling when skilfully done.

How few directors give consideration to the common sense of an audience! Almost invariably they place a portiere where a door should be, so that an important conference, or a vital conversation may be easily overheard by the villain.

Shown in one of the Broadway theaters the other evening was a scene in which the villain was thrown over a cliff after an exciting struggle on the brink. We saw the dummy that was supposed to be him plunge down some five hundred feet, and were then given a view of him lying motionless at the base. Imagine our astonishment, two or three scenes later, on beholding him get up, dust his clothes and walk away. The entire audience burst into a scornful roar of laughter.

That episode was seen by the director dozens of times. It was seen by the producer. It may have been seen by the purchaser. With them it was great. With the audience an unbroken fall of five hundred feet to the base of a cliff means death or serious injury. Which is right, producer or audience?

A man does not have to be rich, or great, or well-dressed to grasp certain very simple things. A very large number of those who go to the picture show have had experience—even a small boy knows something about how far he can fall without doing himself serious damage. To oppose elementary common sense in the treatment of a story, as is done in thousands of moving pictures, indicates that the directors are more stupid than the audiences they address. Army officers confer about the plans of battle in a room where there is a portiere wholly unguarded. Officers of highly trained intelligence stick a record of these plans in an outside pocket, or in a table drawer, anywhere they will be exposed to theft. A wife receives a letter which she does not wish her husband to see—it may arouse his suspicions. Does she burn it at once, or does she drop it where he may find it without trouble?

Then we have the short-weight playwright, who is too weak in resource to avoid the arbitrary, the accidental, the unbelievable. How often does he present the common ordinary facts of life as the rest of us see them? He shows that he cannot—it is beyond his ability—when he deliberately avoids contemporary life as a background for contemporary action, just as much as when he forces his characters to do the impossible and transgress any sane conception of what they should be under natural influences from without and from within. There is a failure of conviction when a character goes beyond what it is reasonable for us to expect, and a play that is not convincing will never make a hit.

To make a hit, the play must have a theme, a purpose, character, mood and an address to the eye in harmony with its mood. It must have greater depth than the solution of a mystery, or the gratification of curiosity as to how it will turn out. Suspense is essential in most cases, but as a means to an end, that end the lasting impression made. It is part of the playwright's work to evoke the interest of expectancy—the spectators must be made to desire what is to be set before them. All this can be destroyed by lack of truth in portrayal.

Between authors who are careless about structure and motive and directors who are stupid about treatment there are very few real hits made during an entire season. Nearly any competent critic can put his finger on the weakest spot of screen production, the lack of logical conception and presentation. To make a hit, the complete product must be unobjectionable to the common sense of the average audience. To make the right impression, it must be consistent in all its parts, its entire form a reasonable guarantee of its validity.

A House Divided By Sam Spedon

EVERYBODY in the industry recognizes the power of organization, but some have had a keener appreciation of it than others. For this reason a few well-intentioned men, good organizers, started the National Exhibitors' League of America. It promised great things for the advancement of the motion picture industry and it was heralded as the right move in the right direction. One of the men who started it was made its president, had high ideals and started to put them in operation. After a while he saw great possibilities of power, used it for political preferment and fell by the wayside. From that time history seems to have repeated itself and the league has been cursed with cliques and politics.

The National League has the nucleus of a strong organization for the accomplishment of great good and we agree with Mr. Trigger that it requires a man as its leader who is "an organizer with ability and force, well balanced and truly square." Such a man might bring together the different branches of organized exhibitors under one head.

Every week we read in our trade papers that different bodies of exhibitors in different states are organizing separately, independent of the National League to meet local conditions as they exist in their territories, to handle their own affairs, calling themselves Exhibitors' Associations. It is a good sign and shows they are alive to their own interests. It indicates, however, that these associations, while not inimical, are not in harmony with the National League.

There is no reason why they should not organize locally under whatever head they see fit, if it serves their interests best. There is no reason why these associations should not have representation in the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, for the sake of harmony. And for the same reason we would like to see them represented at the National Convention of Exhibitors at Chicago, next July. Their absence would mean a greater division.

Since writing the above we are in receipt of the following communication from F. J. Rembusch, president of the Exhibitors' Protective Association of Indiana:

"If we need a National Organization at any time let the different States work together. I have been in it seven years and I can't see where a national organization is really necessary, but I do see where a state organization is necessary. They have never used the National Organization except to give balls, expositions and conventions, all of which has been charged to the overhead of this industry and a few exhibitors made money out of it. Here we are, in the midst of a crisis in Indiana. We have asked the National Association and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, both of them, to help us with a donation. One of them says it cannot and the other does not even pay any attention to us. Why should we belong to a national organization? We have paid our per capita tax and worked for the national organization for seven years and got nothing, but we will never do it again.

"I was down in Kentucky and those boys say 'Nothing doing.' They will never belong to this national organization. Neither will any of the States and I am going to do my utmost if I have any power at all to disrupt the present national organization, and every trade journal should jump in and help."

We cannot see why the National Exhibitors' League of America should be disrupted. We advocate its reorganization and a different get-together policy to make it what it was originally intended to be, the representative head of all the bodies of organized exhibitors. If something isn't done pretty soon we cannot see, if all we read and hear is true, how a house so divided against itself can possibly stand.

An expression of opinion, without animus, is always deserving of consideration. We respect Mr. Rembusch's statement as far as his experience and knowledge are concerned and we must agree with him that the evidence is largely in support of the dissatisfaction he registers. When an organization, or any body of men, takes money from affiliated members for the accomplishment of things for the good of the exhibitors and does nothing to that end it not only deserves to hear what others think of it, but it invites criticism, that in the future it may correct the mistakes of the past.

Film Junkmen

By SAM SPEDON.

THE film junkmen breeze in upon the exhibitor, or prospective customer like a cyclone. Solomon in all his glory was never arrayed like one of these. "Believe me," the junkman says, "I'm a regular fellow and everything I've got to offer you is a clean-up." Then he whips out a one or three sheet poster printed in all the colors of the rainbow, showing a female dressed like Eve in the garden of Eden. "That's the stuff that will pack 'em in. Of course the picture isn't as bad as the poster or the title suggests, but believe me it's what you need in a slow town to put some pep in 'em and make 'em stand up and take notice."

You've met this genus homo. He never fails to tell you what he doesn't know about the "show" business isn't worth knowing. He doesn't tell you that his knowledge of the "show" business was gotten from attending burlesque shows and frequenting questionable cabarets. He doesn't tell you that his status in society has been derived from his associations with those who knew less about it than he does. He doesn't tell you that his knowledge of psychology and character was gained from a study of human weaknesses and tendencies, to which he must always appeal. He doesn't tell you his knowledge of the rest of the world is confined to the place where he was born and brought up. Take it from us, what he doesn't know about motion pictures and a whole lot of other things would fill a public library. Take it from him and he will convince you that you are a fool and he is a regular Solomon, and when you wake up you will admit it. He is after the nimble six-pence, not the slow shilling.

How do they do it? On their nerve! They believe in the distorted golden rule "Do unto others what they would do unto you, but do them first." They presume, as most of us do, that the majority of people are honest, but they believe that we are all after the dollar, honestly if we can, but we want the dollar. They put us to the test, they are willing to take a chance at anything once and they think you are just as willing to take a chance, too. If they are right and you fall for the junk, you have no comeback.

Every new business has been the mecca for a lot of undesirables, and the motion picture industry, with its get-nab-quick and easy money tales, is not an exception. Cripple Creek and the gold fields of California were never so alluring. It will take time to get rid of the junkmen and their junk, no time like the present.

Grilling the Promoters

New York Legislative Committee Looks Into the Operations of the "Get-Rich-Quick" Concerns

THE claims of enormous profits to be made in the film business spread broadcast in circulars by prospective sellers of motion picture stocks came to the attention of the State Legislative Committee, which is investigating the industry as to its taxability, when the committee resumed its hearings at the Murray Hill Hotel, New York, on Wednesday, February 14. Testimony in this connection was given by J. T. Morrison.

Joe Engel on the Pan.

Joseph W. Engel, treasurer of the Metro Pictures Corporation, was under question-fire of the committee on Wednesday. Mr. Engel, according to the committee, had been subpoenaed to appear as a witness on the Friday preceding, but had failed to do so. Mr. Engel's legal representative, J. Robert Rubin, protested against any citation of his client for contempt of the State Legislature, declaring that as far as he knew Mr. Engel had not received a subpoena. Chairman Wheeler stated that the charges would stand.

During the course of Mr. Engel's examination Senator Hinman several times charged that there were inaccuracies in the financial statements of the Metro Pictures Corporation, as submitted to the committee. Senator Hinman queried Mr. Engel as to the latter's personal information regarding many points. Mr. Engel gave answers with the aid of C. K. Stern, auditor of Metro.

In an apparent desire to place any blame for any alleged inaccuracies Senator Hinman called Mr. Stern to the stand. He told the committee that he had no knowledge as to why there had been a lapse of eight days between the completion of the statement and its receipt by the committee. Asked whether his written answers or the copy of his dictation to the stenographer, who prepared the formal report, had been preserved, the witness said that he doubted that any such papers had been kept. He said that he would, however, make an effort to find them. Chairman Wheeler took exception several times to what he termed were Mr. Rubin's efforts to coach Mr. Engel when the latter was on the stand. Mr. Rubin said that his actions were entirely misunderstood—that his replies to Senator Hinman's questions were in no way meant as hints to the witness.

J. E. Brulatour, a dealer in raw stock, manufactured by the Eastman Kodak Company, was the chief witness in the afternoon. He testified that he sold the raw film for what profit he could get, and not on a commission basis. He agreed to furnish the committee with a list of his stock holdings in various moving picture producing and distributing organizations. He refused to tell the committee the amount of raw stock he sold annually or the total output of the Eastman company. Mr. Brulatour said that he considered such figures valuable business information, and for that reason did not feel at liberty to give them.

Albert E. Smith, head of the Vitagraph Company, was recalled to the stand to verify the written report of his firm's financial condition, which had been submitted to the committee.

Investigating the Get-Rich-Quick Promoters.

On Thursday J. T. Morrison, head of the J. T. Morrison Company, was the chief witness. He told the committee that he was a broker dealing in investments and securities. In answer to Senator Hinman's question the witness stated that the only film securities in which he dealt were those of the American Standard Motion Picture Machine Company. He identified for the committee two circular letters, and said that they were duplicates of letters that had been distributed throughout the city. These circulars were intended to stimulate the sale of the stock of the American Standard company. In glowing terms they told of the big profits that could be made in motion pictures.

"You state here," said Senator Hinman, reading from the prospectus, "that the film industry is worth $500,000,000. Where did you get that information?"

"The figures were compiled from Government statistics—at least I believe they were. Let me explain that all the figures contained in the circulars were furnished me by the American Standard Company."

"Have you made any attempt to verify any of these figures?"

"No, I have not. That is none of my business."

"You say in the circular that a certain film concern returned $500 in dividends for every dollar invested. Is that true?"

"I couldn't tell offhand, but I suppose it is."

At this point the witness again explained that the figures in the circular had been furnished by the American Standard company, and that he was merely a broker selling the stock.

"It is also stated here that it was reported that $3,000 had been bid for a certain stock, whose par value was $100 per share. Have you any personal knowledge of that report. Do you know of any such stock?"

The witness stated that he "really didn't know" of any such stock, and again explained to the committee that the figures had not been obtained by him.

Senator Hinman then quoted excerpts from the circulars. He read passages in which it was stated that Marcus Loew has risen from a poor man to a millionaire in twelve years through the motion picture; that William Fox was making more than a million a year; that J. Stuart Blackton and Albert E. Smith had made fortunes, had received millions in dividends and in addition owned a corporation now worth $25,000,000, and that the Universal company were paying big dividends.

"Do you know that all this is true?" asked Senator Hinman.

"Yes," replied the witness in a confident tone.

"How do you know it?"

"Because I assume that the figures and statements supplied by the American Standard company are correct."

"Would it surprise you if you were told that the Universal Film Manufacturing Company had not paid a dividend in some time?"

"Yes, it would."

"But your company asserts doubtful things as facts," said Senator Hinman. "I will read again from the circular: 'We particularly call your attention to the fact that stock of the American Standard Motion Picture Machine Company is owned by many lawyers, corporation heads and bankers.' Can you name a lawyer who owns stock?"

"No, sir."

"A corporation head or banker?"

"No."

The witness once more explained where the statements had come from, and Senator Hinman came back with:

"The circular states that the officers and directors of the company have been vouched for by a large number of influential bankers. Did they vouch for them to you?"

"No," was the answer.

"Can you name anyone you know who vouched for them?"

"No."

The witness was requested to bring further data before the committee on the morrow. Others who testified Thursday were Walter W. Irwin, who certified to the correctness of the financial statements of V-L-S-E.; Arthur S. Friend, treasurer of Famous Players-Lasky, who did likewise; Walter N. Seligsberg, treasurer of Triangle, who gave similar testimony, and M. J. Gerson, an exhibitor of Whitestone, L. I.

Mr. Gerson was also a witness on Friday, and gave the committee some insight into the problems that confront the smaller exhibitor. The witness conducts two houses of less than 500 capacity each.

In answer to the Senator's questions he said that the exhibitors could not stand a tax at the present time. He said that he could speak for a lot of other exhibitors beside himself. He told the committee that the high cost of living had cut into his receipts, and into many other exhibitors' receipts, to a great extent. He said that, whereas a family used to go to a motion picture show several times a week some time ago, their allowance gave them opportunity to go only once a week now. He said that he had been getting his information from personal talks with his patrons.

Mr. Gerson told the committee that the exhibitor's chief complaint was the exchanges. He said that the exhibitor had to pay for everything—slides, stills, paper and the like. He also averred that the smaller exhibitor was often forced to accept a print of a picture that was in very poor condition.

Mr. Gerson was followed on the stand by C. K. Stern, auditor of Metro, who on Wednesday had promised to look up the original notes, from which the answers to the committee had been made. He had brought these notes with him, and submitted them to the investigators.

C. P. Butler, also of Metro, was asked routine questions regarding several companies producing for the Metro program.

J. T. Morrison, the witness who had been on the grill the day before, was again called. He told the committee that the figures they had looked over the previous day had been obtained by investigation by "attorneys." He refused to tell the committee who the attorneys were, or anything about them. He sharply gave it as his opinion that such information was out of the pale of the committee. He was directed by Chairman Wheeler to answer the question as to who had made the investigations upon which the statements contained in the circulars were based. Again he refused, adding: "All these statements are true and I can back up what I say." The atmosphere waxed warm with a wordy duel, and the witness finally qualified his refusal with the statement that he would give the information only if he was given a written order to do so, or if his counsel agreed that the committee had a right to the information.

"This investigation is hurting my business," he said, "and this is my own personal business. The committee has no right to pry into my business."

Assemblyman Schimmel said that it was not the endeavor of the committee to pry into any person's business. He also called the witness to book for his belligerent attitude, and told Mr. Morrison that there was more than one way to refuse to answer a question. More speeches along this line served to assuage the witness somewhat, and after he had cooled a bit he was asked if he would be willing to furnish the committee with a list of names of persons who had bought stock in the American concern.

Mr. Morrison "absolutely refused" to furnish any such list, stating that no broker could even be expected to give a list of his clients. Mr. Morrison agreed to appear before the committee again.

A short afternoon session brought testimony from Joseph Schenck, president of the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation, and head of the booking department of the Marcus Loew enterprises. Mr. Schenck verified the financial statement of his corporation. He said that the officers of the corporation received no salary as officers as yet, but that they expected to.

Verbal fireworks were set off in the committee room on Saturday during the examination of M. D. Koepple, attorney for J. T. Morrison. The attorney was very belligerent in his attitude toward the committee. He refused to answer several questions put by Senator Hinman, and earned the displeasure of the entire company, which took material form in the shape of rebukes from Assemblyman Schimmel and others. In fact, Assemblyman Schimmel's statements were more of a warning than anything else.

Senator Hinman had considerable difficulty in getting the witness to answer questions regarding the extent of the latter's knowledge of the flowery claims of motion picture profits contained in the circulars sent out by the Morrison company. Almost invariably the witness would counter with a query as to what business it was of the committee's.

"This matter has a great bearing on this investigation," said Senator Hinman. "Many of the statements in the circulars are absolutely opposite to the testimony given before this body by more than fifty men high up in the motion picture industry. Either the testimony of these men is untrue, or the statements in the circulars are untrue; either the statements are misleading, or the testimony of these men, given under oath, is untrue, and this committee wants to know which is right?"

The lawyer did not answer directly, but began another argument. He said that the figures concerning the Vitagraph company he had obtained while at luncheon with "Mr. Rock" of the Vitagraph company. He said that he had luncheon with "Mr. Rock" about eight months ago. Senator Hinman endeavored to pin the witness down to a definite date on which the lawyer had seen "Mr. Rock, who organized the Vitagraph company" but was unable to do so. Upon reflection and after many questions the witness stated that he was positive he had seen "Mr. Rock" in 1914. Mr. Koepple said he did not know "Mr. Rock's" first name.

The witness refused to allow the committee to see a paper which, the witness said, bore statistics from which much of the matter that comprised the Morrison circulars had been obtained.

Assemblyman Schimmel, addressing Mr. Koepple, said that the witness's attitude was not decent, gentlemanly, or courteous. Chairman Wheeler also told the witness that his refusal to allow the committee to see the paper from which he had read some figures was a discourtesy.

The witness calmed somewhat, and was willing to continue his testimony, but Senator Hinman told him that there was nothing more—that his "attitude was enough."

During the morning session Walter W. Irwin was again a witness. His testimony was more general on Saturday. During the course of his examination he said:

"The motion picture industry should be the last one to be taxed. The motion picture is the greatest social medium in the country today. It keeps more people out of insane asylums than any other one thing—especially farmers' wives, whose minds so often weaken as the result of their monotonous lives. Any police commissioner will tell you, too, that the motion picture is the strongest enemy of the saloon. If you tax the industry you will hit hardest the public which has not hitherto found motion pictures above their means."

"How about all the $50,000 salaries in the motion picture industry? Do you know of any other where there are so many high salaries paid?" Mr. Irwin was asked.

The witness stated that he did not, putting to the committee this question: "Do you know of any other industry where there is the necessity for such steaming up and creative ability as there is in this business?"

John J. Wittman, an exhibitor who controls two theaters in the Bronx, told the committee that when his Eldorado theater seated only 299 he was making more money than when the seating capacity had been increased to 600. He said that the price of entertainment had caused the narrowing of the margin of profit. He stated that with the lesser seating capacity a shorter show was given and that the house could be filled so many more times a day than now.

At the close of the session Senator Wheeler stated that the committee would, late in the week, continue their investigations up-state. He said that such cities as Rochester, Buffalo, Utica and the like would be investigated. He intimated that most of the testimony from these cities would consist of that of exhibitors, adding that the committee would be most thorough in its investigation. He said that the committee would probably resume its hearing in New York in about two weeks.

Small Exhibitors Safe From Tax

Chairman Wheeler, of New York State Legislative Committee, Says They Will Be Given No Additional Burden.

THE small exhibitor of New York State need not fear that he will be made to pay a burdensome tax. That is the gist of an interview given a representative of the Moving Picture World by Assemblyman Herber C. Wheeler, chairman of the legislative committee, which has been investigating the motion picture industry in New York with a view to ascertaining whether or not the industry is a fit subject for State taxation.

"The committee has not yet decided whether any tax shall be placed on the industry," said Chairman Wheeler at the conclusion of Saturday's session. "That question will not be decided until after the committee has gone over and considered every bit of evidence in its possession. We have collected a mass of information and it will be some time before we can make our report to the Legislature. But you can take it as an assured fact that no burdensome tax will be placed upon the small exhibitor."

"Is it meant by that," the Chairman was asked, "that there will be no tax placed that will cause an increase in the price of admission to the great mass of people to whom the price of admission to a motion picture show means something—in fact, means that if it were increased at all they could not afford to go to a show?"

"That is about the meaning," answered the Assemblyman; "there will be no tax that would cause that. Should the committee decide to recommend a tax that would in any way affect the small exhibitors it would be so light that it would not prove burdensome in the least."

"It has been stated in some of the informal hearings of the committee by a certain member that he would not be in favor of a tax of any kind being laid upon a theater seating three hundred or less, and in no case a tax on any theater charging ten cents or less. Of course, no such form of taxation would be considered by the committee, but it just goes to show what at least one of the members thinks.

"We are very much gratified at the manner in which the whole motion picture industry has acted during this investigation. With one or two exceptions the witnesses have given us every assistance that was within their power. I believe that the committee as a whole is at present better informed regarding the industry than any one man in it. We have been given the inside facts in confidence and these facts disclose the whole inside workings of the industry. They are facts that have never been given to an outsider."

The Outlook In Albany

Suggested Tax on Tickets of Admission—Not Strong for Censorship.

UNLESS Assemblyman Wheeler, chairman of the legislative committee, which has been busy for some few weeks past investigating the question of a proper taxation of the motion picture industry, returns from New York with some plan that is the outcome of the hearings, it now seems probable that the legislators will favor Assemblyman Coffey's bill in relation to a tax on amusements and entertainments. The bill was introduced on January 30 and referred to the Committee on Taxation and Retrenchment.

Both Senators and Assemblymen today expressed the opinion that as a measure of taxation on the motion picture industry it was one that appeared to meet with almost universal favor. Under the provisions of the bill a tax will be collected on the sale of tickets of admission to all places of amusement or entertainment open to the general public. The bill provides that the tax on each ticket be fixed as follows:

Admission of 25 cents or less, the tax will be $\frac{1}{4}$ of 1 cent; admission of more than 25 cents and less than 50 cents, the tax shall be $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 cent; admission of more than 50 cents and less than 75 cents, the tax shall be $\frac{3}{4}$ of 1 cent; admission of more than 75 cents and less than \$1, the tax shall be 1 cent; admission exceeding the sum of \$1, there shall be an additional tax of $\frac{1}{4}$ of 1 cent for each additional 25 cents, or fraction thereof, charged for admission.

The bill further provides that adhesive stamps shall be prepared by the State Comptroller in various denominations and sold to persons giving entertainments. These tickets in the proper denominations must be attached to the tickets of admission.

Failure to comply with the law becomes a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500, or by imprisonment of not more than six months, or both fine and imprisonment. The bill provides for the cancellation of the stamps, penalty for illegal use of same and likewise gives the State Comptroller the right to examine all books and papers and tickets of admission of any person, firm or association giving entertainment. If the bill becomes a law the moneys accruing from the taxes imposed shall be applied to the general fund.

The bill is very explicit in its definition of places of amusement and entertainment, including shows, side shows, circuses, theaters, motion picture shows, baseball games, foot ball games, bowling, basketball, boxing and wrestling, horse racing, foot racing, automobile racing, bicycle and motorcycle racing, aquatic sports and dances.

State and county fairs, private affairs held for the benefit of any church, church societies or secret societies, lectures for the benefit of school or college, or entertainments by lecture bureaus and private dances are exempt.

Up to the present time very little talk is being heard in either the Senate or Assembly towards the establishment of censorship in this State. A person close to Senator Elon R. Brown made the assertion today that in view of Governor Whitman's attitude towards a censorship bill last year, it was very doubtful if any attempt would be made at the present session to force censorship matters when the same executive was occupying the position he does.

In the Assembly, while it is known that Speaker Thaddeus Sweet favors censorship, little talk is heard along these lines, the principal conversation centering on the possibilities of taxing the motion picture industry in some way or other that would be just and likewise assist in bettering the State's financial condition.

Prominent leaders in the Assembly were emphatic today in their assertions that Assemblyman Coffey's bill appeared to meet the situation, unless unexpected developments would be the result of the present New York hearings.

The committee, with its extension of time to March 15, will be busy for the next two or three weeks in continuing its hearings and in framing its bill and report which will be presented in both houses next month.

New Pathe Serial

"Mystery of the Double Cross," Written by Gilson Willet and Produced by the Astro Company.

FOLLOWING the widely discussed reports concerning Pathe's big production, "Mystery of the Double Cross," it is now definitely announced that this serial will be released March 18. "Mystery of the Double Cross" is characterized as something entirely new in serials. It has adventure, thrills and an absorbing mystery which will bring audiences back week after week.

This mystery is an inherent part of the story and therefore cannot fail to stimulate a cumulative interest, which will make anyone who has seen the early episodes anxious to see them all. J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, considers it "different" and therefore better than any mystery serial that has preceded it.

Mollie King is the heroine and she is supported by a cast of unusual excellence. William Parke is the man, under whose direction, the serial is produced by the Astra Film Corporation at the Pathe studio in Jersey City. It is a photodramatization by Bertram Millhauser of Gilson Willet's original story. The words, "Double Cross," are not used in a slang sense. The sign of one cross superimposed on another is the well of mystery of action and thrills.

Mollie King is seen as Philippa Brewster, the heroine. Sister of Charles King of the famous team of Brice and King, she has attained success on the stage, but her charming personality on the screen has made her particularly suited to important parts in a number of motion pictures which have served to increase her reputation and give her name a box-office value, which her splendid work can only heighten. The part she plays in this feature-serial gives her full opportunity to display her beauty and ability.

Pathe's advertising and publicity campaign on serials can always be relied upon to develop unusual ideas and to build business for exhibitors. "Mystery of the Double Cross" will be no exception in this regard and announcement will soon be made of the unprecedented campaign on this serial.

Louis R. Fuster Missing

Fearing that Louis R. Fuster, a motion picture photographer, has met with foul play, his wife has asked The Moving Picture World to endeavor to locate him. Fuster has been missing for about eight months. Mrs. Fuster, who is the mother of a thirteen-months-old baby, is almost prostrated with grief over her husband's long absence. She writes that she left her husband in San Francisco to come to visit her sick mother at No. 25 Convent avenue, New York City. Fuster was to follow his wife here, but nothing has been heard of him by his wife since she left the Coast. She will appreciate any information regarding him sent to her in care of Mrs. P. Silvester at the Convent avenue address. Fuster's likeness accompanies this article.

Louis R. Fuster.

MAJESTIC SUES FAIRBANKS.

The Majestic Motion Picture Company has commenced an action against Douglas Fairbanks to recover damages to the amount of $250,000 for violation of contract. An injunction pending the trial of the suit is asked to prevent Mr. Fairbanks from making pictures under auspices other than the Majestic Company.

Philadelphia Exhibitors Entertain

Give Dinner and Dance at Hotel Bingham Roof Garden.

S NOW outside and good cheer within marked the dinner entertainment and dance held last Thursday evening, February 15, on the roof garden of the Hotel Bingham, Philadelphia, by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. The affair was a success from start to finish and the officers of the league and the committee on arrangements were showered with well deserved congratulations.

Stars of the film lent the effulgence of their presence to the entertainment and addresses were delivered by high officials of the city and stage government. President John O'Donnell, as toastmaster, was the first to rise and make an address of welcome, felicitous alike in spirit and phrasing. As he spoke a huge American flag over his head unfolded and scattered hundreds of smaller flags which were eagerly grasped as souvenirs.

State Senator Samuel Salus, the first speaker, delivered an address on the growing popularity and importance of the silent drama and the permanence of its place in the community. He deplored the tendency of iron clad combinations of an illegal nature and assured the members of the league that the legislature and legislative commissions at Harrisburg are eager to consider any plans that may be formulated for the betterment of the industry. Dr. E. J. Cattell, City Statistician, made his usual favorable impression as a speaker, and while furnishing much interesting and informative data concerning Philadelphia and its industries, kept his audience interested and amused by flashes of wit.

During the progress of the dinner dancing was indulged in intermittently and a bright cabaret show, which included much of the best talent playing at local theaters, divided interest.

Two diminutive stars furnished the first surprise of the evening, little Emmy Gorman and Madge Evans. Both delivered winsome addresses.

The big feature of the evening was the arrival of J. Warren Kerrigan, the Universal, Red Feather and Bluebird star, who announced that he is about to produce his own pictures, on the West coast. He plans to remain in Philadelphia and visit several theaters, of which the first to be so distinguished will be the Overbrook, where Mr. Kerrigan is expected on the 23rd.

Violet Mersereau and Claire Mersereau, the dainty Universal and Bluebird stars, accompanied by their mother, were present through the courtesy of V. R. Carrick.

The committee in charge, who were responsible for the success of the affair, were: John O'Donnell, Sam Blatt, chairman; C. H. Goodwin, secretary; A. Fisher, Harry Green, Harry Berman and Ben Shindler.

Among those present were: Herbert Ziven, N. R. Carrick, H. Osborne, B. R. Talmas, Louis Bache, David Starkman, Wm. Schwalbe, Charles Klang, P. Glenn, G. Dunbow, Mr. and Mrs. Allen May, M. Fishman, G. W. Pierce, George Kline, C. Looby, C. Calchuff, L. Bloomfield, W. C. Smith, Samuel Spedon, Mr. and Mrs. F. V. Armato, Samuel Blatt, C. H. Goodwin, A. Fisher, Harry Green, Harry Berman, Benjamin Shindler, Morris Spieres, Albert Brown, E. Warren Smith, W. S. Boyd, R. Bloomgarden, John Smith, George Naudascher, John Bagley, C. Conway, H. Kruper, G. W. Pierce, Robert McCurdy, F. Hill, Jack Rosenthal, Harry Katz, W. G. Murray, Jerry Shaw, Miss Myrtle Talley, Miss Tilly Shapiro, Miss Gladys Kinkaid.

Maritime Exhibitors Meet

In Session at St. John, N. B., They Take Action on Contracts and Serials.

IN THE first semi-annual session of the executive board of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the Maritime Provinces, held in St. John, N. B., last week, the board went on record as favoring the Federal plan of censorship, and loudly voiced its protests against signing contracts for serial photoplays and against signing contracts for features, without first having the signature of the head office of the film company. The board also voiced its disapproval of the percentage plan for big features.

All sessions were held in the office of the president, Walter H. Golding, manager of the Imperial theater. In addition to Mr. Golding, those present included N. V. Gastonguay, Orpheus theater, Halifax, vice-president; W. W. Winter, Empress theater, Moncton, N. B., vice-president for New Brunswick; F. G. Spencer, proprietor of several theaters in the provinces, and vice-president for Prince Edward Island; S. C. Hurley, of the Lyric and Unique theaters, St. John, secretary of the league, and G. J. B. Metzler, Empire theater, Halifax, treasurer. R. J. McAdam, vice-president for Nova Scotia and manager of the Casino theater, Halifax, was unable to be present on account of illness.

Many of the exhibitors throughout the provinces have complained of the methods employed by some of the exchanges in auctioning off special features, after the exhibitor's signature had been affixed to a contract. It is alleged that an exchangeman before sending the contract to the head office in Canada for ratification would use it as a weapon to get a higher figure from another exhibitor for the same feature, and would tell the original party to the contract that the managing office had been able to secure a better figure for the same picture. To abolish this practice, the executive board passed a resolution requesting that no member of the league sign a contract until it has first been signed by an official of the head Canadian office.

The resolution to cover this, moved by Mr. Winter, and seconded by Mr. Spencer, is as follows:

Whereas, the present system of signing contracts for features is not in accordance with good business, inasmuch as the exhibitor must affix his signature to said contract and then it must be sent to head office of the film exchange for approval before being signed by the exchange representative, and

Whereas, such a system does not allow protection to the exhibitor because of the fact that there is nothing binding or holding the film exchange until the contract is signed by both parties, he it

Resolved, that no contracts be made by any exhibitor of the Motion Pictures Exhibitors' League of the Maritime Provinces unless the contract is signed by both parties at one and same time, or first signed by the representative of the head office, and be it further resolved that a copy of this resolution be sent to the film exchange doing business in the Maritime Provinces and to the members of the league.

Another contract evil that has made the path a far from rosy one for the exhibitor is the binding nature under which agreements are made for serials. If an exhibitor after signing a contract finds that the serial is not up to expectation he has no choice about continuing the remainder of the installments—he is obliged to do so. With hope of eliminating this, the board voted the following resolution, moved by Mr. Metzler and seconded by Mr. Spencer:

Whereas, the signing of contracts for serial photo-plays endangers the interests of the exhibitor if the serial does not come up to his expectations, be it

Resolved, that the secretary be instructed to prepare an agreement asking for the signatures of all exhibitors to refrain from signing contracts for serials.

Since the organization of the Maritime Provinces League similar associations have sprung up in Ontario and Quebec, and there has been urging from some quarters that an effort be made to affiliate the three leagues as a step towards the formation of a national body. To further this, a motion was made by Mr. Winter and carried, that a letter regarding affiliation be sent to the secretaries of the Ontario and the Quebec leagues, asking their opinion on such a combination of interests.

Although the present system of censorship, with each province having an independent board, has not worked great hardship on the local exhibitors, it is felt that a Federal plan would be a great progressive move, and with that end in view the board passed this resolution:

Resolved, that this league go on record as favoring the Federal plan of censorship, that such a plan is considered beneficial to the interests of both public and exhibitors, and that it is more apt to preserve the story value of a production when one general censoring board passes judgment upon it, as against manifold excisions made by various provincial boards throughout the land, and that this league considers it unfair to the Canadian public to have its pictorial entertainment endangered and oftentimes spoiled by the methods now employed wherein the film is exposed to the dictates of so many and varied opinions.

The question of excessive percentages asked for special features was considered for some little time, and it was finally decided to go on record as opposing this plan, which was deemed unfair to the exhibitor.

Following the close of the business session, the board went into a "social session" at the Victoria hotel, where, with the St. John officers acting as hosts, a banquet was served. Mr. Gastonguay left at once for Halifax, and Mr. Winter went to New York the next morning. Mr. Metzler remained over in the city for a few days.

Michigan Exhibitors Get Busy

Pending Censor Bill Is Stirring Them Up to the Need for Organization.

MOVING picture exhibitors of Detroit and the State of Michigan are doing everything they can to oppose the Eaton censorship bill. Hundreds of letters by exhibitors have poured into the capitol building at Lansing for the State Affairs Committee, and in addition many letters have come from the theater patrons themselves. A leader in this regard has been Elwyn M. Dimons, of Adrian, who was the first to get up a petition and who landed in the neighborhood of 500 signatures. The Detroit Exhibitors' League is taking up funds to fight obnoxious legislation and is getting the hearty support of all exhibitors in the matter.

There was a hearing on the Eaton censorship bill Wednesday evening last at Lansing before the Committee on State Affairs. Both sides were represented. A number of women spoke in favor of the bill, representing some women's clubs, while those who were there to oppose the bill were William H. Shiek, of Detroit, secretary, and F. A. Schneider, president, of the Detroit Exhibitors' League; Arthur Mitchell, representing David W. Griffith, and A. J. Moeller, secretary of the Michigan Motion Picture League of Exhibitors.

The censorship bill has proven to the exhibitors of Michigan the great value of organization and the proper co-operation, and a better feeling along those lines is being indicated by the increased memberships in the State and local organizations.

Fred J. Herrington, national organizer, arrived in Detroit on Feb. 12 and called a meeting of exhibitors at the Bryant Hotel, Flint, on Feb. 14. Letters were sent to about twenty-five exhibitors in that particular locality and the meeting was well attended. Mr. Herrington expected to spend at least a month in Michigan doing work for the National as well as the State organization.

The Detroit Motion Picture Exhibitors' League has decided to resume weekly meetings instead of holding meetings monthly on account of the important matters now before the association in the way of censorship, carrying of film, etc. A special committee is now negotiating for permanent meeting place.

BRONX EXHIBITORS JOIN THE "UPLIFT."

At a regular meeting of the Cinema Exhibitors' Association, Bronx Local No. 2, M. P. E. L. of A., the following resolution was unanimously passed in reply to a request for co-operation of the members of the association with the Clean Picture and Play League of America, Inc.:

"Be it resolved this association, composed of the motion picture exhibitors of Bronx County, go on record as being honored and pleased to co-operate with the Clean Picture and Play League of America, Inc., in its efforts to place the exhibitor and manufacturer of motion pictures on a higher plane, by the exhibition and manufacture of good, clean pictures, and that every member of this association must conform in every performance in his theater or theaters to the highest standard of education and morality."

All Set for Brooklyn Ball

There Will Be a Big Time at Stauch's Palace, Coney Island.

WHAT promises to be one of the most successful events in the history of the trade will be the movie carnival and ball of the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn and Long Island, to be held at Stauch's Palace, Coney Island, on Wednesday, February 21, the evening before Washington's birthday. Great interest has already been evidenced by the picture fans of Greater New York in the first public appearance of Douglas Fairbanks, undoubtedly the most popular screen artist in the country today. With Anita Stewart, the favorite Vitagraph star, Mr. Fairbanks will lead the grand march.

The publicity departments of the various producing companies are busily engaged planning novel surprises to be sprung during the progress of the carnival and some startling results may be looked for in that direction. Handsome loving cups will be presented to the king and queen of the carnival who are being chosen in the contest conducted by the Brooklyn Eagle.

Boxes have already been engaged by the following companies: Paramount Program, Arcraft, Vitagraph, Universal, Bluebird, World, Selznick, Pathe, Metro, Art Dramas, K-E-S-E, Triangle, Mutual, General Film, Flora Finch Co., Picture Playhouse Co., Morning Telegraph, Motion Picture News, Exhibitor's Trade Review, Moving Picture World, Screen Club, Manhattan Local Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, the Cinema Club of the Bronx and others.

Trains will leave every few minutes during the evening from Brooklyn Bridge and Municipal Building, landing in Coney Island just one short block from Stauch's. There has also been provided sufficient parking space for 1,500 automobiles.

Arkansas Exhibitors Organize

Meeting Held at Little Rock on February 6—Fifty Theater Men Present—Producers Represented.

FIFTY motion picture theater men from every part of the state of Arkansas met at the Hotel Marion, Little Rock, on Tuesday, February 6, for the purpose of organizing a motion picture exhibitors' league for that state. The new league selected as its president S. S. Harris, well known theater man of Little Rock, and A. Laskin as secretary and treasurer. The meeting was adjourned until the first Monday in May.

The league agrees to co-operate to keep out any and all pictures that are not approved by its members. All of the new members present were heartily in accord with the movement. Twenty different pictures were sent by the manufacturers and not a single scene in any one was found objectionable by the members.

The representatives of the following companies attended: J. A. Cress, of Clara Kimball Young Company; Hoyt G. Morrow, Mary Pickford Company; C. R. Scott, Universal Film Company; Nat Barach, World Film Corporation; Charles Wuerz, Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Company; G. C. Reif, Fox Film Company; W. R. Wilkerson, McClure Pictures; E. C. Leavis, Essanay Company; William Byrd, Art Dramas, and T. F. McTyre, Paramount Company.

MARYLAND LEAGUE DISCUSSES DANCE.

On Tuesday, February 13, six members of the board of directors of the Maryland Exhibitors' League again met in special session and the principal topic for conversation seemed to be the arrangements for the big dance which they wish to hold. It was decided that the committee appointed was too small to take care of the situation and so two other directors were appointed additionally. The dance committee now includes J. Louis Rome, A. E. McCurdy, Frederick C. Weber, L. A. DeHoff and Frank A. Hoernig. The method of these men in handling the situation will be to interview several exhibitors of his acquaintance and see if they are interested in the project and whether they will render aid, financially and otherwise, toward the affair. As a working fund is necessary to start the thing in motion several will be asked to pledge a certain amount to it. Another matter which was discussed was regarding the stars to be invited and it was decided that the best plan to arrange this matter will be to have the public vote for these they wish to have on that occasion through the daily papers and run a contest for this purpose. Tuesday, February 20, has been set as the next and last meeting of the board of directors before the regular meeting on Sunday, February 25, at 2.30 p. m., and a report will be made before that time.

NORTHWEST EXHIBITORS' CORPORATION MEETS.

The advance deposit system was the main topic discussed at the last meeting of members of the Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest at Minneapolis, February 6. Exhibitors presented their side of the argument and W. K. Howard of the Vitagraph, and J. R. Levy of the World exchanges, were admitted to the meeting to present the exchanges' side. Owing to the fact that President Gilosky has been unable to attend every meeting and that the Minnesota vice-president of the league is not a Twin City man, nominations for a St. Paul or Minneapolis vice-president were made, but the matter did not reach a ballot. Fred Upham, Minneapolis; W. H. Deeth, Minneapolis, and W. B. Watson, Minneapolis, were nominated for the office.

The application of Edward Counsell for membership was accepted, and applications of several other exhibitors discussed. T. J. Hamlin was voted an honorary member of the corporation. Letters from exchanges urging the co-operation of exhibitors in regard to the leaving of films outside of exchanges in the evening and various other matters were read at the session. Following the meeting the convention committee met with Chairman David G. Rodgers and plans for the forthcoming annual gathering of members were discussed at length.

E. K. Lincoln Wins Trophies

Many Prizes Awarded to His Blooded Canines at 1917 Dog Show.

PROBABLY no man rides a hobby more enthusiastically than does Edward K. Lincoln, who has just finished his work in the leading role of the Monmouth Film Corporation's sixteen-episode serial, "Jimmie Dale, Alias the Grey Seal." Mr. Lincoln is a dog fancier of the first water, and has just annexed several awards at the Westminster Dog Show, which was held at Madison Square Garden, New York, from February 20 to February 24. He had seventeen of his more than 150 pedigreed dogs entered in the show.

The actor's Greenacre Kennels are located at Fairfield, Conn. It is there that Mr. Lincoln may be found most of the time when he is not in front of the camera. The chow dogs bred at the Greenacre Kennels are known nationally to be among the purest-blooded canines of their kind. The photograph accompanying this article shows Mr. Lincoln and one of the Westminster prize winners—an animal of which the actor is especially fond.

Mr. Lincoln has played leading parts in many big productions and has been a motion picture actor for several years. Among some of the pictures that Mr. Lincoln has appeared in are "Shadows of the Past," "A Million Bid," "The Littlest Rebel," "The Almighty Dollar" and "The World Against Him." His screen career has included work for Vitagraph, Lubin and World.

Mr. Lincoln has a 4,500-acre estate in the Berkshire Hills near Lenox, Mass., and a summer studio at Blandford, Mass. The Lincoln studio at Grantwood, N. J., is at present being used by William Fox.

George Stuart Christie

GEORGE STUART CHRISTIE, well known to patrons of the drama and light opera, will make his screen debut as leading man for Emmy Wehlen, in her forthcoming Metro production, "The Duchess of Doubt," exterior scenes of which are being made in Florida under the direction of George D. Baker.

Mr. Christie will play the part of Walter Gray, who masquerades as a ribbon clerk to hide the fact that he is the possessor of vast wealth, and the doing of which brings him into amusing and dramatic contact with the character played by Miss Wehlen. The photoplay is George D. Baker's screen adaptation of the story by John B. Clymer and Charles A. Logue.

Mr. Christie is well known to the patrons of drama and light opera throughout this country. He was born in Philadelphia and his first stage experience came shortly after leaving the public schools there, when he joined the Girard Avenue Stock Company, and later with the George Holland Stock Company in that city, in which he played character parts and juvenile leads.

He toured the large cities with Richard Mansfield, when Mr. Mansfield's repertoire consisted of "Richard III," "The Merchant of Venice," "Beau Brummell," "A Parisian Romance," "Prince Karl" and "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." This tour took Mr. Christie through the principal Eastern cities and as far West as Kansas City.

He was in Henry Miller's original production of "The Only Way," in which he played the Fop. Later, as Jack Negly, the crazy boy, he scored in Effie Ellsler's Academy of Music production of "Barbara Frietchie."

When Julia Marlowe went on tour with "When Knighthood Was in Flower," Mr. Christie played Sir Edward Caskoden in this famous production. Later he appeared with Minnie Maddern Fiske in her Manhattan theater production, "Mary Magdala." In this play Mr. Christie appeared in an important juvenile Hebraic role. His next appearance was with Bertha Kalisch, who made an extended tour of America in "The Kreutzer Sonata," in which he played Sammy Friedlander, the sewing machine salesman.

In becoming a screen player, Mr. Christie says he is following in the footsteps of his most successful stage associates, and only the persuasion of Director Baker, with whom he has been friends for years, coaxed him away from the footlights.

DREAMLAND AT MCKEESPORT, PA., SOLD.

One of the most important transactions that has taken place in amusement circles of McKeesport, Pa., in some time was closed February 10, when the Dreamland theater was purchased by Frank Panopolis and George Lambru, well-known exhibitors, from A. H. Berg, of the McKeesport Amusement Company. The Dreamland has been closed for the purpose of remodeling by the new owners. It is hoped to have the work completed for reopening by March 1. Mr. Berg, who has achieved much success as an exhibitor for the past seven years, still conducts three up-to-date picture houses, the Altmeyer and Orpheum theaters in McKeesport and the Avenue theater at Duquesne, Pa. The firm of Panopolis and Lambru owns and operates the Lyric theater, a handsome thousand-seat house, at 515 Fifth avenue, McKeesport, of which Mr. Panopolis is manager. He will also manage their latest acquisition, the Dreamland, and having shown the latest and best film productions with much success in the past at the Lyric he plans to set a high standard in every respect.

George Stuart Christie.

"Beefsteak" of New York F. I. L. M. Club at Healy's, February 14, 1917.

New York F. I. L. M Club Dines

Celebrates St. Valentine's Day With a "Beef Steak" at Healy's Log Room.

THE F. I. L. M. Club of New York City held a beefsteak dinner in the Log Cabin Room of Healy's restaurant on Wednesday night, February 14. About sixty persons were in attendance and a general good time was enjoyed by all. The affair was not only one of good fellowship but it was indicative of the growth of the organization, which is an institution in almost every city of the Union. The statement of E. M. Saunders, who acted as toast-master, that every member had paid his dues up to date and the club had not been obliged to bring any complaint to a court of law was evidence of the efficiency of its purpose.

The speakers were Wm. A. Brady, C. R. Seelye, H. E. Friedman, J. E. Chadwick, W. W. Irwin, Sam Spedon, A. M. Goff, John Cadwin, Joe Brandt, W. F. Rodgers and H. H. Buxbaum.

Those who were noted as being present included the following: S. B. Kramer, Bluebird; S. Eckman, Jr., Triangle; E. H. Goldstein, Joe Brandt, R. H. Cochrane, Universal; C. R. Seelye, Pathe; A. Reinlieb, Pathe; E. M. Saunders, Metro; W. E. Raynor, K-E-S-E; W. F. Rodgers, General Film; J. J. Schmertz, Variety Film Corp.; H. H. Buxbaum, General; M. G. Felder, Variety Film Corp.; Leon J. St. Louis Operators Dance

Moving Picture World Correspondent Reports a "Bully" Time at Big Social Event.

TO EVERYONE connected with the film industry in St. Louis, February has three red letter days. They are: birthdays of G. Washington and A. Lincoln, and the date of the Moving Picture Operators' Ball. Way back in November, when the insurance and railroad companies came around with the new calendars, film folks turned to February and set a big red mark against Thursday the 8th, which had been selected as the date of the big event. And from that time on there was talk of nothing else.

Long before the date set the various arrangement committees were busy. A very artistic souvenir program was issued, filled to the very last of its thirty-two pages with classy advertising and the names of the officials, who helped to make the ball the success it was.

We missed the ball last year, but we said we were going this time, and we went. And although both of our feet are of the Methodist persuasion and we have never danced a step in our life, we had what the Colonel would call "a bully time" watching the other people.

The ball was held at the new Club Hall, 13th street and Chouteau avenue, and although most of the projection booth boys could not get there before their shows closed, the place was crowded to the brim and almost running over early in the evening, with exhibitors, exchange people and others who knew from previous experience where to go to have a good time.

Simply everybody connected with the film business was there—with wife, sweetheart, brother, sister, father, mother—and some even brought the kids.

Dancing was continuous, of course. There was an abundance of refreshments, both solid and fluid, and upstairs and downstairs, everywhere, the crowd was having the time of its life. Even the wallflowers enjoyed themselves. We know, because we were a wallflower, and we had the most enjoyable evening of many a day.

It would be impossible, of course, to give a list of names of those who attended the ball without getting out a special edition of the paper, but judging by the crowd, every operator in St. Louis must have been represented, and the ball was a huge success, from a social as well as a financial standpoint.

NEW COMPANY AT RICHMOND, VA.

A new motion picture producing company has been incorporated in Richmond, Va., with a capital stock of $100,000, all paid in under the title of Jefferson Motion Pictures, Inc. The leading spirit of the new company is E. M. Stearnes. Ground has already been broken for the studio, which is to be complete in every detail, and on grounds covering over one hundred acres of land. The company has already started on its first production and is negotiating with some well known stars of the profession.

E. M. Stearnes, director general, when interviewed, stated that the Jefferson Company will produce high class comedies and features. Mr. Stearnes is making his headquarters at the Jefferson Hotel in Richmond while the studio is in course of construction.

WILBUR BATES GETS IN THE GAME.

Wilbur M. Bates, for many years the manager of publicity for the theatrical syndicate and the dramatic productions which toured the country under its direction, has at last come over onto the side of the motion picture. He will give his services and experience to the productions of the Arrow Film Corporation. At a recent luncheon in the Astor Grill Mr. Bates was introduced to the members of the motion picture trade press. With all the big actors and actresses getting into the picture game it will be hard to keep the big press agents from taking a hand. Here's to Bates' success.

SHALLENBERGER ON WESTERN TOUR.

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, left New York on Monday, Feb. 19, for an extended trip through the West in connection with states rights release of "The Deemster." His first stop will be at Battle Creek, Mich. From there he will go to Chicago to arrange for a special trade showing of "The Deemster" for western states rights men. After this showing he will visit St. Louis, Cincinnati, and Indianapolis.

Quotes.

WRITING on the use of quotation marks, L. F. Guimond, of the Lyceum, Monticello, N. Y., makes a good point when he suggests that sometimes the use of the inverted commas, is overdone. He is more than right. It is almost an insult to the intelligence of the reader to enclose in quotation marks colloquialisms, and sometimes the overuse of these is a drawback to otherwise good copy. The quotation is properly used when the desire of the writer is to call attention to the use of borrowed material, such as an extract from a poem or prose writing, but to quote the current phrases is to suggest that the person addressed doesn't know enough to realize that the phrase is borrowed. Take a paragraph like this, for example:

Give this the "once over." We are not "throwing the bull" when we tell you that next week's show is the "limit." We are going to have the "best ever" bill and "dontha lettum tell ya different." We are going to give an "all star" program from "soup to nuts," and every item will be a "corker."

About a page of that and the reader gets tired. Anyone knows without the quotes that the writer has been making an effort to be colloquial, and rather resents the excessive use of the quotation marks. Be sparing with the quotations, and since it is a matter of choice, do not quote titles. The fact that they are capitalized is sufficient. It is one of the small things, but it is important out of proportion to the face value.

A Color Scheme.

A recent program of the Lehigh Orpheum reminds us that you can get a nice effect with a canary yellow and a brown ink. Ever try it? It looks well and stands out.

Compact.

F. F. Lowry, of the Princess, Salem, Ill., seems to have hit upon a new idea for the checked card scheme. He uses plain white book paper for a four-page program four by five inches. Perforating rule is run in the center and the third page can be torn off and mailed or turned in at the box office. This is about the simplest scheme yet to get Lights for Dark Days.

Jimquin, of L. A., has been hiking around with a State Rights feature and has been seeing a lot. He writes from San Francisco:

Today being a dull day, atmospherically speaking, I looked around to see how many exhibitors figured the usefulness of lights in the daytime. It is surprising how many exhibitors figure that niggardliness with lights is economy. I contend that lights (and not necessarily a great number) are more effective on a dull day or any day save when the lobby is in the direct glare of the sun, than at night. If they are on a flasher, so much the better. It should come under the head of "lobby display" and not "waste." Lights at night are customary and necessary, therefore they fail to attract great attention unless in unusual displays, but any lights in the daytime are surprising and therefore interest impelling. And here's an idea I have meant to speak of. In L. A. I constantly used a slide that read to the effect that we appreciated the fact that our pictures were so engrossing that patrons were apt to forget their bundles under the spell of the drama. It was suggested that they take stock of their effects before leaving the seat. On the exit door I had a sign which read: "Have you forgotten anything?" It was large enough to be seen and it really resulted in a lot of people remembering a lost article before they left the house and not after they arrived home. I figured out that a little mark of attention on the way out was as much appreciated as a welcome upon entering.

We think it was the Erie Railroad here in the east that was the first to instruct its trainmen to add "Don't forget your bundles" when announcing the approach of local trains to stations. The idea is the same and it is a good one.

Jimquin had a busy evening lately. He was playing a house on shares and a thief grabbed the day's receipts and started up the street. Jimquin was in the lobby and when the cashier called to him not to let the fugitive escape, he gave chase, not knowing that it was his own money he was going after. The thief took to a lumber yard and Jimquin walked all over him before it struck him that the going was rather soft. Then he stooped down and felt and discovered that he was standing on his quarry, so he collared him and got the money back and the next morning a policeman was given credit for the arrest, but Jimquin had his fifty-fifty, so he did not care much.

exhibit. You will notice that you can read the essentials on a Bleich advertisement without having to get out your eyeglasses, if you wear them. The house, star and feature always stand out, and even in the reduction these show up well. Mr. Bleich is one of the most consistent advertisers we know of, for he stays good. He also sends in a book of tickets with a two-color and black cover. Twelve ten-cent tickets sell for one dollar, and there is a Merry Christmas and Happy New Year as well as a holly spray. If we are not mistaken, Mr. Bleich was the first to use the special Christmas cover and play up the books for Christmas gifts. Nothing makes a more acceptable present and the special cover gives it a certain distinction.

From Paterson.

The Regent, Paterson, N. J., uses two house organs. One is a weekly program put out by a speculator. The house gets about four pages of a sixteen-page program and the publisher takes the profits from the advertising. This is better for the publisher than the house. The program is lost in a mass of advertising and there is no space provided for house talk. Moreover, the entire issue is poorly set. No two of the program sections has the same border, for example. This is a small thing, yet a uniform and well marked border for all sections would help not a little to give the suggestion of regularity. The house gets the right hand pages, which is a concession, but it should get more space and use it for house talk. The double middle, the best page of all, goes to a furnishing company with the underline run in some space at the bottom, but so poorly displayed that it is lost to all save the most eager searcher. It sounds nice to be told that you will get your programs free or even be paid a small sum for the concession, but it is better to hold on to the idea and run it properly.

The Regent does not suffer from the insertion of questionable advertising, but it is not helped by the surplussage of outside matter. The house should always get sixty per cent of the space on a concession or the concession will prove hurtful in the long run. The Regent also gets out a monthly issue for itself. This is better done, with only three foreign advertisements, but a weekly and a monthly should not be necessary. Where the weekly is used some form of monthly calendar is apt to prove better than a second house organ. This has been done by the house in the shape of a four-page folder with the month's releases on the two inside pages in handy form for consultation.

Handy, Cheap and Good.

The Water Color Company, of New York, sends in some samples of their Rotogravure program sheets, four by eight inches. Lately they advertised that they had a list of 80 players, but this has since been run up to 120 names. These rotogravures are sepia prints of photograph stars in close imitation of photography. The panel shape gives them a distinctive look and they can be used either plain or printed as souvenirs, for they are handsome enough to be used for this purpose, but their most effective form is with a weekly program on the back. With a new star each week, you will not need much of a mailing list, for the patrons will come and get them for preservation as a collection. The price ranges from $2.25 to $3 a thousand, according to the quantity ordered, but most of those who will use them will probably get a supply for three months. At the price they are really cheap and yet the paper has to be good stock. They offer a program form with a memorandum column for the fan that will interest. It is reproduced

An interesting record. Write a note of the plays that you attend here.

VOL. I No. 1	WEEK OF JANUARY 1st, 1917	NOTES

here as a suggestion to exhibitors. In the sample sent there is a trade advertisement at the bottom of the seven-day program; a candy store, and it is well to remember that you should get a better price from an advertiser for space in a vehicle likely to be retained beyond the week the program is in service.

Good Argument.

We are not in harmony with the theory that the price of admission to photoplays must forever remain at ten cents, but there is much that can be adapted from this advertisement in the program of the Victoria, Buffalo, to suit more general conditions. It is framed in parallel rule broken with type "10c" about every five ems.

The Buying Power of Your TEN CENT PIECE

There is a general tendency in all industries to increase the cost to the general public of those things which are necessary to life and happiness.

It is an old and vexing story to you.

But in all this state of price-boosting, isn't it pleasing to know that the one place where you could forget your worries has not demanded more pay for that which it gives you.

The VICTORIA has not raised its prices.

Ten cents during the upward flurry has bought you as much—if not more—enjoyment.

Theaters everywhere are charging more.

Of all these the VICTORIA has the best right to exact a higher admission.

Compare its photo-productions with those of other playhouses, whose prices are higher, and you will find the VICTORIA gives you as good and even better for your tiny dime.

During 1917 the VICTORIA will continue to amuse you for 10 cents each visit. The programs will be consistently superior, as generously long and as pleasing as ever.

The buying power of your dime will not have lessened!

By cutting out the specific reference to the unchanging ten cent rate the stuff can be used by houses with a sliding scale, for certainly the photoplay admissions have not followed the rising costs in other lines.

But Why?

Bluebird is offering prizes to the exhibitors who send in the best photographs of lobby displays, but it should not be necessary for the film companies to offer prizes to the men who merely do what common sense should dictate. Remarkable progress has been made in lobby display in the past few years, but there is still too large a proportion of houses with stuffed entrances. Some suggest the course for an obstacle race rather than an entrance. Still we're glad to see anything done that will rouse exhibitors to action, and even those who do win prizes will profit mightily. More power to Mr. Hoffman. You can get some good hints from those Bluebird inserts run each week in the paper.

They are not merely advertisements to the man who thinks. They are hints on color schemes and advertising layout and they have been held to an absolutely uniform high level of excellence for a surprisingly long time. Effective use has been made of these for posters, but when you have used them in the lobby, give them to your local sign man for inspiration.

Try This.

It has been a long time since we had anything on the lines of the Public Notice, but this throwaway from The United Film Service, Memphis, Tenn., can be adapted to suit, and having served its original purpose it is now passed along. It is essential, of course, that the three big lines be played up so strongly over the others that the first glimpse takes only these in. We would use an even larger top line to get a ten-line letter for the "Reward." It can be done with condensed type. There are also enclosed some cards, evidently stock stuff supplied by the manufacturers. This should have been imprinted with the address of the exchange. It pays to get an address down on everything that will carry the line.

Back Again.

H. R. Weber, of Chambersburg, Pa., writes that he has been taking things easy for a time, but that he is back running the Star again. With the Blanchards in the same town he will have fast company, but Mr. Weber is there with the ideas, too. A recent advertisement shows Sothern in "The Chattel," with "The War Bride's Secret" underlined.

All in a Line.

Eugene A. Upstill, of Long Pine, Neb., in some of his house talk gets off a line that is worth display, instead of body type, when he remarks "The Program at the Palace is selected, not merely booked." That is good enough to go on the front page and stay there. It says much in little.

Attractive.

The Turner and Daknken theater, Oakland, Cal., sends in a neat program. The frame for the front page is half tone or henday, but is probably worked on the same form with the type, though it gives the suggestion of a second printing with tint. This is a specially drawn design, but if you cannot afford to have a special drawing and want one, did you ever stop to figure out that you might manage to make one? You can if you'll get a strip of wall paper with stripes. Mount it on a sheet of cardboard the same relative size as your program page, but large enough to let the stripes reduce properly. If the stripes are two inches wide and you want them to reduce to a quarter inch your wall paper pattern must be eight times as wide and eight times as high as your program page. Cut out an oval or square for the type and get some flowered paper or something with a conventional design and cut out the flowers or ornaments. Paste these on your stripes as taste dictates and have the whole reduced to proper size, causing the opening to be mortised out. If you have a circle or oval have the mortise square cut, with steps, to make it easier to lock up the type. With a little patience you can get a corking good program cover.

Neat.

The Elmwood, Buffalo, which specializes in oddities to fold in with its V.P. program, offers something neat for "The Traveling Salesman." It is a card 1½ by 5½ inches, folded once, to get a long page. On the cover is merely "Hold your order." Inside one page shows the stock cut of a trunk and below the announcement of the subject and showing date. Sample trunks are seldom made with rounded tops, but few will stop to think of this, and the idea is apt.

Something New.

The Clemmer theater, Seattle, seems to have hit upon something new. It gets out its advertising in a special frame and uses all talk. The frame is two columns wide by five inches deep. With such a reverse cut

THERE is a play at The Clemmer today that you should see. In this powerful feature you have a girl who gives way to her passion for finery, gambles in an effort to get gay gowns, becomes the puppet of a scheming detective, traps an honorable man, then falls in love with him.

Phyllis is employed as a model at Martel's, where her duties are to try on beautiful gowns to display to fashionable customers. She becomes dissatisfied with her own cheap garments and her poor lodgings. Wanting more money with which to buy clothes and also to befriend an unfortunate girl friend, she tries to obtain it by gambling. When she loses, the chief of detectives, who has had her under scrutiny, manages to have her discharged, and forces her to assist him in securing a confession from a young man whom he believes guilty of murder. The name of the play is "Vanity."

It probably isn't necessary to remind you of our superior music.

it is possible to get a big display in a small space and if the text is well written people will come to look for it.

To advertise "The Pride of the Clan," the Colliseum takes a four column width the length of the page with a 48 point "Hoot Mon" at the top, about six inches of cut and text in the center and the prices and house name at the bottom. This is effective, but wastes a little of the white space. For "Less Than the Dust" the house charged a quarter, but gave a rebate of a new dime. The "Clan" is selling for fifteen cents flat.

Just One Change.

The Century, Brooklyn, run by Glynne and Ward, send in a neat four pager of the five by eight size, white stock printed in blue. They work it very nicely, with house talk on the front, program on the other three pages, with dated days, but we would suggest one change that will help a little. At present the day and date is worked with the rest of the head type as:

Thursday, January 13th
INDISCRETION 6 ACTS

It would give a better effect to the title and also help the date to set the latter in eight point fullface and pull it over to the left hand margin. This is just as easy for the printer and it will make an important change in the appearance of the page. If fullface is not on the machine, an italic may be used. It would help still more to take the number of acts away from the title and put over to the right on the same line with the date. Apart from this the program is soundly constructed. It might be objected that to pull the act announcement over will give the impression that the entire bill will run the stated number of acts, though one or two short subjects are used. In this case the act announcement should at least be run in small type. It should not be on the same line with the title and in type of equal importance. It detracts from the dignity of the title.

Hand Painted.

Herschel Stuart, of the Hulsey theaters, in Texas, sends in a photograph of a billboard which he says is located on the busiest corner of Dallas. The photograph must have been made on Sunday, for there is only one busy man in sight. But it is a good example of what the local sign man can do when he is put to it. It costs more than a regular stand, but it is better in many ways, since it lets in the house share of the advertising in just the way it is wanted.

Fine If It's Right.

S. E. Wall, of Plain City, Ohio, has started something else. He is full of ideas, and good ones, too, but if this new scheme of his works he has outdone himself. He writes

I am enclosing herewith one of my latest efforts in meeting the high cost of living; on account of the war, or some other darn thing, paper prices are going higher and higher, making the cost of my folding postcards almost prohibitive.

Our Uncle Samuel has not yet raised the price on his penny postcards, so I am taking advantage of that fact and am having our program printed on them. The Vitagraph Co. furnishes us "Blue Ribbon" stickers, and by using the sticker at the top of the card and a paper clip at the bottom we are enabled to mail the heralds out with the card, the clip allowing the post office department to examine the contents without breaking the seal.

While this arrangement does not give me quite as much room for the program and house talk, it does very nicely, and by using care in putting the stickers on it makes a very attractive looking piece of mail, making a considerable reduction in the cost of production without any noticeable loss in efficiency.

This seems to be fully explanatory, but we show here a half tone of the package with the card partly cut away to show the heralds. There are two of these, and a stamp seal is affixed the front of the card and the back of the bottom herald. The paper clip confines the other end. Removing the clip permits the package to be examined. The back of the postcard is also printed up with house talk. We are a little dubious as to the general acceptance of the postal card. Mr. Wall is doing it, but much depends upon the construction your local postmaster places upon the postal regulations. We know that pasting a clipping upon a postal renders it liable to the two-cent rate, though a clipping may be posted upon a private mailing card. Mr. Wall takes the position that the postal serves as a one cent stamp to carry the whole, and where this view is accepted by the postmaster Mr. Wall has solved a big problem, but see your postmaster before you try the scheme. This time Mr. Wall has batted way above his average, and he can generally beat .300.

Getting In Line.

The General Film Company is getting in line with a clip sheet, The General Film Herald, which offers in addition to the matter printed, general advertising service to exhibitors on their books. Most of the constituent companies also issue clip sheets, but this gives the G. F. material in good shape for handling and fills a niche the other sheets do not occupy.

Frank V. Brunner is its director. The first issue carries an interview with B. B. Hampton on film tax that we should like to see copied into the daily press everywhere. A special tax would injure the business and yet the public does not understand that all salaries are not proportioned to those drawn by Miss Pickford, Fairbanks and Chaplin. They cannot understand why picture men should seek to evade the tax if they can afford to pay such salaries, and they do not realize that these salaries, greatly in excess even of those paid the opera stars, are what is holding the business down. Run material in your house sheet and interest your newspaper editors. Prove to the public that the business is not trying to dodge responsibility. Set the business you are in in a proper light before the public lest your own enterprise be wrongly condemned along with the rest. Too much cannot be done along this line to counteract the effect of what has already been said on the other side.

Use This.

The Victoria, Buffalo, calls Douglas Fairbanks "The Cure for Cussedness."

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Size It Up.

WHEN you are undecided as to how to handle a scene, stop and think it over. The other day a man wrote in to know whether to use a leader or a vision to establish a certain point, and we told him to figure out which would be the most definite. But this might be amplified. Not only is it a case of being definite but of weighing the value of the scene. Something might be established with equal definiteness by means of a leader or a cut in scene. With such a choice it would be better to cut in if the importance of the fact warranted the footage, and to use a leader for a minor happening. In your practice writing do not be afraid of a little extra work. When you have something capable of being handled in several ways, take the paper out of your machine, put in a new sheet and work out all possible developments. Compare them and select the best. Do it each time you have the slightest doubt. In the course of time you will be so thoroughly familiar with values that you'll scarcely have to stop and think. You will instinctively select the best handling of any situation. It will be second nature. It is only through this practice that you will ever gain sureness in your work.

Market Notes.

Someone asked the other day about four film companies. Not one of them was known to any member of this staff—not even to the advertising manager—and yet these companies had all been announced in a literary paper's market notes as being in the market for stories. Not one was known to the trade. Probably all were real companies for the time being, but these mushroom concerns last only as long as the bankroll does, and some bankrolls do not last to the end of the first production. One man had three different "companies" in 1916. Every time he flivvered he got a new backer and started again. It doesn't pay to send scripts to concerns so unstable, and yet hundreds do so.

Slipping.

When you get to the top of the ladder be certain that your footing is safe. There is always danger that you will feel too secure and fall off. Last night we read a story by an author who gets top prices for his stuff. It ran about five thousand words and the idea is the same as one we used in a fifteen hundred word story some years ago and took ten dollars for. The author feels he has reached the point where anything with his name to it will sell. It does. But he will not keep on selling, and that is the point to take notice of. Neither will you if you trust too much to reputation after you have made it.

"Some" Contests.

A motion picture magazine with a script criticism annex is running a "prize" contest. The first prize is $50, though the advertisement itself states that good stories are worth $100 or more a reel. To conform to postoffice rulings it is not necessary to have the scripts criticised, but the inference is obvious. There seems to be something about the word "prize" that draws the boobs as a fly is drawn to honey, and probably hundreds of submissions will be received, though to offer half price for a play of prize quality is to insult the intelligence. Another scheme announces a series of prize contests for its patrons, and does not seem to have heard of the lottery law yet.

Writing Synopses.

Writing each scene of a continuity on a separate sheet is an old trick, but did you ever try writing synopses on the same scheme? Get cheap paper of a size to suit and punch a hole in the upper left hand corner. Write each paragraph on a separate sheet, and hang in order, face down, on a bill file or hook. If you want to change your story, you rewrite only the paragraph to be changed, and when you are content with your work, you clean-copy the whole on sheets of regulation size. You will find you will make many changes that would not be made otherwise and you'll also find that the work comes much easier. The scheme works so well that we often use it for prose work where there is a likelihood that changes will be made.

Looking For Them.

There is a story in almost any happening, if you know how to dig it out. Some months ago we reported that the "German Money" brain polisher had been produced as a play for the Canadian troops in the preparation camps. Another writer, replying to the more recent polisher, added that he had sold a story based on the German

Money plot at the fourth studio it visited. He did not, of course, follow the line of incidents as given, but he found the basis of a good comedy in the story, and sold it.

Listen to Kell.

John William Kellette writes on the absurd practice of sending scripts to directors. He gives good advice. Follow it. No company is in any degree morally or legally responsible for material sent to a person other than the designated agent. If it maintains an editor to handle manuscript and you prefer to send it to some director, you can do so wholly at your own risk. Mr. Kellette writes:

Since I've been reading you (and I've read your page religiously since I turned to picture writing, and profited greatly thereby) the warnings you've sent out to writers to send their scripts only to scenario departments, have been many; but I'm afraid, unread by the multitude, or unheeded by the novice, and therein arises my desire to have you shoot another broadside. No later than this week three scripts came addressed to "Fox Studio, West Fort Lee, N. J.," and one from no less a writer than ———! Another came from Mexico, Mo., and still another from Montana. What can the matter be with authors who send scripts out to a studio, where perhaps a property man gets the mail, tosses it on one's desk, or personally decides to pass upon the merit of the story, finally deciding it's no good, and, instead of returning it, throws it away and it eventually lands out in the public dump or the debris pile in the studio yard. I've rescued uncountable scripts since I've been in the producing end of the business, and I'm not kicking so much on the postage I've spent, as on the delay the author experiences in awaiting the return of the script, and the bother of either sending the script back or turning it in to the scenario editor.

If the authors of the country desire to place stories, let them learn from the advertising columns where the company does business. Unless they know a director well enough to call him a "squint-eyed mut" at a proper game, or, in the case of the gentler sex, unless, at one time you told him you couldn't be anything closer than a sister, don't send your script to a director. Send it to "The Scenario Bureau, attention of Director So and So," and your script will get a thorough reading, and if not available, it will be returned with the Editor's regrets. Personally, Director John G. Adolphi, Fox, directing June Caprice, would like feature stories—comedy dramas, for this delightful star, but before trying to fit Miss Caprice, see some of her screen work, class of stories, size of cast, etc., and if you believe you can fit her, send your story to Scenario Dept., Fox Co., 126 W. 46th St., Attention John G. Adolphi.

Keep Plugging.

Noting that few companies really are in the market at present, an author wants to know what is the use of keeping on writing. One reason is that really good stories are handy things to have around. Those who can remember back to the advent of the feature may recall that for a year or so preceding their rise the market was poor. Many writers gave up in disgust. Almost overnight there came a demand for five reels with original plots. Nothing was at hand and prices went skyward. The best of the feature writers were taken under contract and prices dropped along with the market. We are almost due for something new. Now is a good time to prepare for the next move. Build up your plot book and be ready to turn your plots into plays on short notice when the time comes. Photoplays will always be like other forms of entertainment. It will be graphically represented by peaks and depressions, representing the launching of a new idea and the slow decline of that idea. In the theater, before the advent of pictures, there was a fairly regular progress from real drama to vaudeville and back again. In pictures it is not unlikely that there will be similar changes in favor from features to singles and back again. Pretty soon the exchange question must solve itself. Production methods must change. There will be a new prosperity, and a consequent demand for better stories, for the slow market today is largely due to the economy necessitated by rising costs and falling receipts. A company "saves" money by using locally produced stories. Then it loses more money and "saves" still more. Already a few are making the discovery that a cheap story is the most expensive thing a studio can have on the premises, and the time to have stories of plots is about the time this discovery becomes more general.

The THIRD Edition of Technique of the Photoplay

IS NOW READY

This is virtually a new book under the old title. More than double the text and with an arrangement especially adapting it for the student. The most complete book ever written on the subject of scenario or photoplay construction.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Roll of Honor on Question No. 168.

The following constitute the Roll of Honor on question No. 168: M. M. Moon, Sherman, Texas; C. E. Linstruth, Carthage, N. Y.; John W. Creamer, Chillicothe, Mo.; A. M. Malley, Edmonton, Canada; L. J. Colrick, Taunton, Mass.

I have selected the reply of Brother Moon as best suited for publication. It is short and to the point.

Reply to Question No. 168.

M. M. Moon, Sherman, Texas.

The Question:

Suppose you were on the road and, in a small town, found yourself with only 50 ampere fuse wire and no other fuses available. The feed wires are rated at 40 amperes. The wires from the switch-board to your machine are found to be No. 10, through which you are only allowed to pull 25 amperes. What practical way is there of taking care of such a situation? In other words, the real question is: How can you reduce the carrying capacity of fuse wire by, say, one-half, and do it with a reasonable degree of accuracy?

The Answer:

There are several ways in which this could be done, but the practical way would be to make a V-shaped cut exactly half way through the 50 ampere fuse wire. This would reduce the area of cross section of the wire by one-half, therefore it would reduce the carrying capacity by that amount, since a fuse is only as strong as its weakest point.

Interesting Discussion.

The following lengthy letter is published in its entirety for two reasons. First: It would be extremely unfair to give space to my own ideas, views and opinions, and refuse space to manufacturers who wish to prove me to be in the wrong. This department has repeatedly said, and now reiterates the fact that it has no friends when it comes to matters of this kind. We only desire to present to our readers that which is best. Second: If I am wrong in saying that the white screen gives the more artistic picture, and that the only value in the metallic surface, or semi-reflective, screen lies in the fact that an equal brilliancy can be secured with less amperage, there is no one who desires to know it sooner than do I.

I must, however, strenuously object to the statement that I have "time and again said that the white wall is as good as any other screen," or that I have said that "anyone with a white-wash brush can make as good a screen as can the manufacturers named."

Another point upon which I must also correct Brother Rembusch is that there is at least one other manufacturer entitled to recognition, viz.: the Atmospheric Screen Company, which is putting out what seems to be an excellent screen surface.

Mr. F. J. Rembusch writing for the Rembusch Screen Company, Shelbyville, Ind., Minusa Cine Products Company, St. Louis, Mo., and the J. H. Genter Company, Newburgh, N. Y., says:

Your department is very unfair to the manufacturers of prepared screens. A few weeks ago you stated therein that you considered the white screen as giving the most artistic picture, and I want to say that I consider the white screen to be as far behind in producing a good picture as the ox cart is behind the automobile. For twelve years I have been experimenting with screens. There is hardly any substance of which I have not a record of what it will and what it will not do when a picture is projected thereon, from the side of a barn to pure gold and platinum. Besides this I have engaged the assistance of scientists who have written the most advanced text books on physical optics. I claim to know something about screens, and positively know that the cause of most of the lack of interest in the motion picture today is on account of the poor screens that are being used. A study of the various screen surfaces has more possibilities than anything I know of. The screen is the heart of the theater, and it is the most abused appurtenance therein.

I am willing to acknowledge that screen manufacturers have been compelled, in their advertisements, to use extravagant terms in exploiting their products (Why compelled?—Ed.), but who in the picture business has not? If I say I have made screens longer and more continuously than any man in the world I am only telling the truth, but I have never made any money at it, and I have never been able to get the exhibitor to understand the true value of a screen made to fit the particular conditions of the house, because your department, which has a great following, has stated time and time again that a white wall is as good as any other screen. What is the use of paying a lot of money to make a screen when anybody that can swing a paint brush can daub one up? That is the way many exhibitors feel about it as a consequence.

Since I started experimenting with screens twelve years ago there have been a very great number of screen manufacturers who have come and gone, and the money that has been burned up by them and by the exhibitor in experimenting would make a John D. Rockefeller if it were given to one man, and the amount of money that the motion picture industry has lost, and is losing from the fact that there are such poor screens used would make John D. twice over.

There are practically three screen manufacturers left today, viz.: the J. H. Genter Company of Newburgh, N. Y., the Minusa Cine Products Company of St. Louis, Mo., and the Rembusch Screen Company, Shelbyville, Ind. We have met and talked this thing over, and have decided that it was very unfair to make statements that anybody with a white-wash brush can make a screen as good as we can after our years of experimenting and years of work, and our large investments of factories and machinery. (I never either said or intimated any such thing. 'Taint so.—Ed.) We feel that it is an injustice to say that anybody can make a screen, when the fact of the matter is that the more efficient a screen is made the more difficult it is to make, and the more easily every defect in it is noticed.

If every house had the same throw and the same size picture; was the same width and the machine was set at the same angle from the screen, then one screen surface would be the best for all houses, and you could get one set of lenses to fit every condition, but I have been in thousands of theaters, have always owned from two to eight theaters myself, and have yet to see one instance where the conditions in two theaters were alike. If it is important to have the light go to the screen through the function of a certain lens which produces a certain size picture at a certain throw, etc., etc., then it is equally important for the light to go from the screen to the eye in certain definite locations, and be distributed along certain definite lines where that eye is, without undue absorption, improper distribution and consequent loss.

I trust we have arrived at the point in motion picture projection where a screen should be made to give the highest efficiency in the particular house in which it is located. A screen in one house may give wonderful results, yet be all wrong in another house. Sometimes the tilting of a screen four or six inches is sufficient to make a prepared screen give wonderfully good results. A screen has so many points and angles that no broad statement can be made with reference to any particular screen. There is absorption, color value, superimposition of light, both interfering light and light of regular and diffuse reflection, which often occur. These are all equations that must be considered.

I am enclosing you two samples of screen which I have cut from the edge of screens we are shipping. If you will take these two little samples and go into a room where there is only one light and lay these two samples down on the floor below the light; look at them straight down and then step back and look at them from various angles, you will readily see that there is a wonderfully great difference in the distribution of light from various surfaces, which is after all the crux of the whole argument. (I have tried it and you are quite right. But I have known that for years.—Ed.)

I would like very much to answer your statement, but it cannot be done in one brief sentence. There are too many equations to be considered, but I am willing, and I would be very glad, to challenge your department, and all of your scientists, managers and operators following your department, to debate the question whether a prepared screen is not very much superior to the white sheet, providing, of course, it is prepared right. I will say to you that no man can take a paint brush and go into any theater and daub around and make a screen to fit his conditions, and we can prove it.

Again referring to the two samples, one of which is machine made for the narrow house, and the other one is both machine and hand made for a wide house, I can make this screen for the 25-foot width at a very much lower figure than I can the wide house screen, yet you would not think so to look at it. It takes me much longer to build the wide house screen, therefore, when we screen men have to fit a certain condition we must use nothing but the very finest of materials and the best of metals, and sometimes we fail to satisfy because some exhibitor has been using a piece of tin and he cannot distinguish glare from true picture light. We feel that when we make a screen we are making it right, because we know we have gone the limit in the matter of study. Therefore sometimes a screen can be made at a reasonable figure for a certain house, and for another condition we could not even get cost out of it at the same price. This is especially true in making screens for wide houses.

I can readily understand why the screen is not understood, because it requires a great deal of study to understand true screen value. I had a patent suit in the Supreme Court against George Bennethum, Reading, Pa., several years ago, on my glass mirror screen, and Honorable Judge Euffington found it very difficult to understand all the points brought out in the trial, and in trying to expedite matters I asked the Judge if he knew why he saw himself in a looking glass and didn't see himself in a brick. The Honorable Judge had some idea of it, but didn't know that it was the difference between diffuse and regular reflection, and the minute elements in the surface of each which caused the difference, which can be explained and understood, but which requires some study. And I will say there is not one man in a thousand who can explain why he sees himself in a looking glass, and, furthermore, there is not one exhibitor in ten thousand who really knows why the picture appears on the screen in various ways, depending upon the surface the picture strikes.

We screen manufacturers are very much in earnest about this matter, and are willing to show you that we have the goods, and can produce the goods, and we are willing to show what we can do and take every feature of the screen problem up, point by point, and if we are not right we will close our show and quit.

I have one screen that would cost $3.00 a square foot to make. There is no chance to sell it when exhibitors believe that anybody can take a brush, daub around and make a screen, yet it gives the highest efficiency of any surface that I have ever seen with a given light. (Ah, ha! Just exactly what I have always said. The metallic surface is efficient.—Ed.) The point I want to make is this: We cannot live and make good screens when the idea prevails that we are robbing them when we ask them a reasonable, decent, living price for a screen, and if we have anything from our years of experimenting and work we don't know it. We have all had to do something else in order to keep our screen business going. I know were it not for my theaters I would starve to death.

Now what do you say, Brother Richardson? We have a chip on our shoulder, and we are saying this without any bitterness, but we mean it just the same. We feel you are not treating us exactly fair, and we are willing to stand on our merits. If you decide to take this debate up, we will not discuss the Glass Mirror screen, in justice to my colleagues, until we have thoroughly gone over the metalized situation from Hades to breakfast.

What do I say to it? Why, I made my little talk in the beginning, gentlemen, before I let them get a sight of your stuff, which is good business, isn't it? However, I will make one flat statement, and that is, that you don't have to have any chip on your shoulder with this department; also this department has for a matter of seven years been open to you, just the same as it has been open to anybody else, having a legitimate proposition, and I am sure that any reasonable argument you may wish to advance will at any time receive space.

I fully and thoroughly agree with you in the argument that it is necessary to take the depth and width of the auditorium into consideration, as well as the pitch of projection, and the location of the seats in the highest gallery if we are going to get the greatest efficiency. In other words, I agree with you that only the greatest possible efficiency can be secured by making each screen to fit the individual house. However, I doubt if this would pay. I believe that generalities will serve, and that the last degree of efficiency that might be obtained by the very slight change in screen surface, due to a little greater depth or width of auditorium, would be too expensive. If I am wrong show me. In my judgment there should be perhaps four, or maybe six, surfaces adapted to four varying widths of houses, with the satin finish for the long, narrow house. Just what ought to be done to houses having a steep pitch in projection and a large percentage of the best seats in balconies and galleries, I am not prepared to say.

In closing my comment on this particular article, I wish to repeat that the only contention I have ever made on this matter is that the plain muslin, or plaster screen gives a more artistic picture. This is based on the belief that the metallic surface gives a somewhat harsher appearance to the light, and that the light distribution is better from such surfaces than from metallic surfaces. In connection with this, however, I believe I have always stated, and I now repeat, that such advantages as the plaster, muslin or kalsemine surface may have are rather expensive, because it requires a lot more current on such surfaces than it does on the metallic surface screen, in order to secure equal brilliancy. I would also say that a considerable proportion of such objection as there may be to harshness of light tone may be removed, without appreciable loss of light, by the use of the Amberlux Ray Filter, which costs only $3.50 each.

Examination Methods.

New York City for a long time past has had a very competent examination for operators, and the method for keeping record of the examination, which same has been slowly developed during the past seven years, is of such interest that this department has requested the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity to prepare a description of the same, which they very kindly consented to do. We believe this method will prove to be of large benefit to examining boards, in that it furnishes in legible and concise form a reliable record of an oral examination.

Mr. F. H. Richardson, Editor Projection Department, Moving Picture World, 17 Madison Ave., Manhattan.

Dear Sir: Complying with your verbal request for detailed information regarding the method used in conducting examinations, and recording the answers given by applicants for license to operate motion picture machines in New York City, I am forwarding herewith a copy of the chart used in connection with the examinations as conducted during the past four years, together with an explanation of its use. Beginning January 1, of this year, however, a new system has been adopted, and an explanation of the methods used in examining applicants under both methods may prove to be of interest.

We have found, by long experience, that some form of detailed record must be kept of each candidate's answers. The method formerly used was that of conducting a wholly oral examination, using the enclosed chart as a means of shortening the record of the candidate's answers. This worked well, but was occasionally a matter of dispute by the applicant who wished to charge discrimination and false record. It was better, however, than a stenographic record, for, unless the stenographer has technical knowledge of the subject, many of the actions of the candidate in making tests and handling the apparatus would not appear on the record, and oftentimes actions really tell more than words. Then too an incompetent applicant may be a good talker, and the stenographic transcript of his answers might belie his true knowledge of the machine and its connections.

Our present method, in favor January 1, this year, is as follows: Upon receipt of application each one is given an application number, and a notice to appear on a given date is sent him. Applicants are examined as nearly as possible in the order of application numbers. The first test is a written one, about twenty-five candidates being examined at a time. It consists of that portion of the test which may well be put into writing, or the answer made clear by simple sketches, and which needs no demonstration with actual apparatus. A time limit of two hours is placed on this part of the examination. The candidate may receive from one to five points for his answers each of the twenty questions, a total of at least seventy percent being necessary to pass. The answers are reviewed by at least two examiners. Successful candidates are notified to appear for a supplementary oral test, at which they are given opportunity to show their familiarity with the motion picture machine and its connections.

At this test they are required to project a good clear picture on the screen.

The oral test is not rated on a percentage basis, for the reason that it is practically impossible to reduce an applicant's action to figures, and even if attempted the result would only be the consensus of opinion of the examiners.

A candidate who fails in either test may apply for re-examination after one month from date of failure. After a second failure he must wait six months for re-examination.

Candidates unable to write, upon proving same to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity, are granted an oral examination in which their verbal answers to the questions are taken by a stenographer and transcribed on record.

Our method of conducting the oral test is substantially the same as when the entire examination was an oral one, but the time consumed by each candidate is much less.

Except in rare cases we find it of great benefit to the applicant, as well as to the examiners, if one only of the Examining Board does the questioning, leaving the other to record the answers and actions of the candidate. This prevents confusion.

A definite line of questioning is laid out in advance, since otherwise it would be difficult to conduct an examination so as to bring out the candidate's knowledge, which of course is the object of the examination. The phrasing of questions in such a manner as to admit of but one interpretation is also a very important matter and worthy of intelligent forethought.

The attitude and remarks of the examiners must be such as to give to the candidate an impression, either of his success or failure. We make a practice of announcing to the candidate at the finish of the examination that the result of same will be mailed to him within a few days. To facilitate the work of the office we find it necessary to do this. It avoids useless argument.

The possibility of a really competent man being declared incompetent is reduced to a negligible factor by our method.

The method of using the chart is as follows: While one examiner asks questions pertaining to any of the subjects noted, the other examiner makes record of the incorrect answers by placing opposite the number the letter corresponding to the subject, and making any notes with reference to the answer that may be necessary for review. If the candidate's answer is correct, a small letter is made and is checked off to indicate that his knowledge of that subject was satisfactory.

Respectfully,
Geo. R. Brown.

In the first place observe carefully the sheet "Did Not Know." Supposing the examiner asked the applicant: "What is meant by the carrying capacity of a wire?" and the applicant is unable to give an intelligent answer. The examiner who is recording marks on his sheet "1C," meaning section C of heading 1, opposite which he makes suitable comment. For instance: glancing at the record of John Doe, November 13, 1916, we find that it began at 9.07 and ended at 9.53, making a total of 46 minutes consumed. John Doe said he had had no experience, but had "learned from operators." When asked to tell the principle of operation of an economizer, we see, at 2A,

The new scheme of holding a written examination first, thus weeding out those who are entirely incompetent, is a good one. I was present at the first examination of this kind, and it seemed to work very well. If the applicants answered the questions propounded they demonstrated they at least had a good knowledge of the technical end of the profession, and would therefore be worthy of further examination. It is simply a scheme to save the waste of energy necessary in an oral, individual examination of the horde of men who are utterly incompetent, and never ought to have made any application in the first place. I believe a study of Mr. Brown's letter and the accompanying charts will be a large value to examining boards all over the country.

Indianapolis, Indiana.

In response to an invitation from the Indiana State Exhibitors' League the Editor, in exchange for twenty-six perfectly good bones procured a ticket entitling him to enter into and ride upon a Pullman car attached to one of the Pennsylvania flyers. But alas the car I drew was a poor, old, decrepit relic of other days, which wheezed, grunted and rattled in each of its steen hundred rheumatic joints; also it let in cold air, judiciously mixed with snow, so that it required all the subtle art of a real artist to woo and win slumber.

At Indianapolis the weather was such that a description would land 'mo in jail, so I must perforce leave that item to your imagination. Just imagine the worst possible, add fifteen percent, then double it and you won't be far wrong.

As the Convention would not convene until 8 P. M., I had the major portion of an afternoon to squander, so I set forth to brave the elements, and soon the really well lighted, very pretty front of the Regent theater, lured me to the ticket window, where, in return for one thin dime, I was permitted to pass within and view the wonders. The interior of the Regent is not at all in keeping with its excellent front; also the interior lighting is, looked at it from the projection point of view, susceptible to decided improvement. The ceiling lights were practically extinguished, being turned so low they gave no illumination at all, and along the side-walls were several incandescents covered with very bright colored glass shades. These lights are annoying to the eye of those seated near the wall at the rear. They are unnecessary, because, by reason of deep cross beams in ceiling, the condition for ceiling lighting is ideal. The ceiling fixtures should, however, be opaque, else they will annoy those seated in the balcony. I would suggest the advisability of lining the interior of these fixtures with bright tin, and then using the ceiling lights exclusively. A more cheerful color and some pretty panels on the wall would work wonders in improving the beauty of the interior, and making it fulfill the expectations raised in the mind of the patron by the very pretty front.

The projection light was good, except for occasional discoloration at the bottom. The speed was correct on some scenes; on others it might have been improved. Stereo slides advertising future programs were spotlessly clean. The picture has square corners. Round ones look much better, I think.

In the operating room I found Cleveland McDonald in charge of two Power's Six A's, using D. C. through rheostats. The operating room walls are dark green, and the ports of ample size but set altogether too high in the wall. There are two large vent flues, and the room, while not of "ample" size, still is of fair dimensions.

But Operator McDonald had his incandescents burning, which is very bad practice; also he did not watch his projection. And how can a man know the shadow form of a $3,000 per week actor or actress is appearing on the screen if he does not look at the screen except at two or three minute intervals? McDonald's lack of attention explained the occasional shadows on the bottom of the screen, and the evil was aggravated by the ports being located so high that the operator could only see his picture when standing right up close to the wall. The house seats 800. I did not have the pleasure of meeting Mr. B. D. Crose, its manager.

The Rialto was the only other house I had time to visit. This house has two entrances, on opposite streets. The light was very good, and well handled by W. J. Simpson, operator. The only criticism was that he threaded out of frame. The operating room is painted black, and only one light was burning—over the rewinding table at one side. There were ample vent flues (two of them) and the room was of comfortable size, though none too large. The observation ports were of good size and well placed. Power's Six A's are used. Current, D. C. through rheostats. Mr. Fred C. Leonard is manager, and a most affable gentleman he is too. I suggested one or two minor changes as to lights near the stage, with which he agreed. The screen sets at the back of the stage and is bordered in black. The picture from the front row of seats is not at all bad. On the whole the lighting of and the projection at the Rialto of Indianapolis is to be commended.

At the headquarters of Local Union 194, I. A. T. S. E., Rooms 77-78, When Building, I found business agent N. Moss, and a number of the men, and we had a very pleasant chat. Brother Moss impresses one as being a live-wire, progressive man. The local has eighty-six members, and Indianapolis is 100 per cent. organized. The scale is $13 minimum and $23 maximum, the minimum being for evening houses. I do not regard this as sufficient to secure for Indianapolis the skill necessary to do justice to her screens. R. D. Scobey is President of the local, Howard B. Cornell Vice-president, N. Moss Financial Secretary, Treasurer and Business Agent, and R. L. Gunion Corresponding and Recording Secretary. The local is in prosperous condition, but its headquarters do not contain, so far as I saw, one single book of instruction in the art of projection, nor are any of the projection departments on file. Wako up, gentlemen. It does not look well to see decks of 52, and an utter absence of anything even tending to be instructive on projection. Why not form a class and expend some of the energy you now consume in contemplating certain combinations of spots and pictures in studying the finer points of projection? I am sure you would find competent teachers in Brother Scobey and others.

Erie, Penna.

Returning from Indianapolis, the perfectly lovely Big Four Railway brought me into Erie a mere trifle of three hours late, and that meant that instead of departing therefrom at 6 A. M., I was stuck until 6:45 P. M. Intent upon spending some of the time to good purpose, I called, first, upon the Columbia Theater on West Eighth street.

The Columbia is managed by Mr. O. A. Potter, who also has charge of the Majestic Theater on West Tenth street. It seats 1200, runs nothing but pictures, and is a very popular house. Mr. Potter is a most courteous gentleman, and one to whom suggestions can be made without fear of giving offense.

The operating room is on the main floor, the lens being practically level with the screen. The room itself, however, is too small and the observation ports are very, very poorly located. Projection is in charge of Mr. William Sawdey, assisted by Mr. Ed. Decker. Mr. Sawdey is in immediate charge. He is a man of mature years; also a man of ideas. He has brains and applies them to his work. Both himself and Mr. Potter assured me that arrangements were being perfected to increase the size of the operating room materially, and to put in new equipment, the same to be Powers Six B machines. The projection equipment now used is sadly out of date.

Mr. Sawdey has constructed a home-made motor drive and speed regulator which is decidedly clever. It is connected to the end of the shaft carrying the forward gear on the operating side of his Powers Six mechanisms. The interior walls of the operating room are painted a light color, and this is, as I repeatedly point out, decidedly bad. The ventilation of the operating room is excellent, and right here let me remark that, considering the conditions under which Brothers Sawdey and Decker work, they are delivering most excellent results on the screen.

The picture at the Columbia is nineteen feet wide, which, as I pointed out to both Brother Sawdey and Manager Potter, is excessive. A sixteen-foot picture would be ample in the Columbia, where the back seats cannot be much more than seventy-five feet away from the screen. The increase in size operates to injure the result on the screen in several ways; also to set up an element of entirely unnecessary eye strain, particularly from the front rows of seats. I would recommend to Manager Potter that he carefully study pages 181-183 of the third edition of the Handbook.

Manager Potter escorted me to the Majestic on Tenth street, which runs vaudeville on week days and pictures on Sunday. The Majestic has a decidedly pleasing interior; also the vaudeville program was, for the most part, very good, considering the low price of admission. I should think, however, that it would be entirely feasible to add a feature photoplay to the bill, thus lengthening the program, and perhaps serving to fill the house, which was not nearly filled at the matinee. That, however, is merely a guess on my part. I don't know the conditions in Erie.

Manager W. J. Hayes, of the Strand Theater, on State street, was confined to his bed by illness. I was therefore deprived of the pleasure of meeting him. However, H. Simmons and Al. Simmons (brothers), the operators, did the honors most acceptably. The Strand seats 1300. Its interior decorations are harmonious, and very pleasing to the eye. The lighting of the auditorium is unobtrusive, ample and very pleasing. Under the balcony are three or four recesses in the ceiling, which same are covered with colored glass set flush with the surface of the plaster. Behind this glass are incandescent lights. The ceiling of the main auditorium is oval in shape. At the top is a recess, probably ten feet across, around the edge of which is a cove in which are incandescent lamps lighting the auditorium by reflection from the ceiling of the recess. The picture is sixteen feet wide, and is projected by two Simplex machines, using fifty amperes of current through Fort Wayne A. C. to D. C. compensars. The interior of the operating room is painted dark green. The room is neat, clean and all tools, etc., etc., were in order. There is a ventilating flue with a fan, but it is too small. There should be another one of equal size. The room itself is 12 feet by 6 feet, with a 7½-foot ceiling. In one end is the main house switchboard, so that the auditorium lighting is entirely under the control of the operators. Taken altogether, there is not much to criticize in the Strand. It is a beautiful house, and is managed by a man who very evidently studies his business.

I also dropped in the Nixon, on State street, a small but very pretty theater. The manager was absent and I only glanced in for a moment. The picture was small and very brilliant. Sorry I did not have the pleasure of meeting the manager and operator.

Business seems to be good in Erie. Prices range from 5 cents to 25 cents. Both the Strand and the Columbia charge 10 and 20 cents in the evening, which is boosted to 25 cents when there is a picture of special merit.

I shall possibly stop in Erie at the last end of the coming trip and deliver a lecture on projection. I would advise travelers passing through the city of Erie to not judge of its attractions by the depot and its surroundings. I think the Erie depot must be and constitutes all that remains of Noah's Ark, and incidentally, if that is true, the aforesaid remains stand sadly in need of a visit from the Gold Dust Twins.

The Universal Camera.

HAVING discussed some of the more important mechanical points common to the construction of motion picture cameras we will examine in detail some of the better known makes of cameras now on the market.

The order in which the different makes of machines are taken up must not be taken as any indication of order of merit. The writer is at present many hundreds of miles distant from the source of available information for these descriptions and the order in which the different makes are discussed will depend largely on the circumstances attending the shipment of cameras to him for examination.

Case: Seasoned mahogany, black waterproof finish.

Size: 4¾ in. x 11 in. x 12 in. Weight 18 pounds.

Handle: A black leather carrying handle is attached to the top of the case with strong brass screws. There are also brass rings for attaching shoulder straps.

Doors: Heavy sheet aluminum. Heavy brass hinges and latches, gun metal finish. The latches operate without the use of a key. Every working part and adjustment is easily accessible but thoroughly protected. There are no bulky parts to interfere with handling. Exterior metal parts protected with extra hard transparent lacquer. Interior of doors black lacquered and setting flush in close fitting rebates make the camera light tight.

Magazines: The magazines are square and are made of cast aluminum with hinged doors. They are provided with two light traps and are interchangeable. Only one empty magazine is required no matter how extended a trip. Each magazine has a capacity of 200 feet, hence four extra magazines, making a total of one thousand feet, will be more than is required for an average day's work out of doors. They are light in weight and are held in place by spring clips.

Light Traps: The light traps are velvet lined and have detachable brass clips, which render them absolutely light proof, and also permits of being taken apart for cleansing.

Spindle: The spindle is arranged to receive the original spool on which the film comes from the maker. No rewinding is required. The spindle has a bearing at each end which keeps the alignment perfect and reduces friction. Two sharp keys, or fins, engage the spool, which makes the movement positive and prevents the spool slipping around on the spindle.

Take-Up: The take-up mechanism is a positive mechanical gear drive which can be operated forward or backward. The top gears may be disengaged when desirable. Friction disks are used on the take-up shaft which steadies the action and gives the desired tension. The tension may be adjusted by turning a small knurled thumb nut and is held constant by an additional lock nut.

Gears: The gears are cut from steel blanks as carefully and scientifically as the movement of a standard watch. There is one master gear from which all moving parts are driven. This centralization of power simplifies the machine, gives the best of efficiency, and makes every piece accessible. The gears, both large and small, are helical, which tends to eliminate lost play or backlash. The effect is almost noiseless, smooth operation.

Bearings: All bearings are accurately centered and smooth running with oil channels for perfect lubrication. The heavy duty bearings are reinforced and bushed with bearing bronze. The balance wheel is mounted on a strong pinion shaft with an outboard bearing to give it absolute rigidity. It is turned by the main gear, and by means of a positive action cam operates both the shuttle and pin yoke. There is not the slightest chance for them to get out of unison.

Footage Indicator: The footage indicator dial tells not only how much film has been used but also shows the amount used on the last scene. The figures are large and clear and easy to read. The dial is located on the outside of the back of the case in full view of the operator, giving timely warning when the film has been consumed.

Sprockets: A single sprocket serves for both feed and take up. It is accurately cut and mounted on the main drive shaft.

Rollers: The idler rollers may be thrown back from the sprocket for threading and are held at the correct distance from the sprocket by heavy spring tension. They are so shaped that they come in contact with the film only at the outer edges.

Aperture Plate and Gate: The aperture plate is of hardened steel relieved in the center except at the frame opening so that the film between the perforations does not come in contact except at the edge of the frame. All surfaces bearing upon the film have their edges rounded and are ground and lapped to a glass-like smoothness. The gate is of steel with gun metal finish. The hinges separate by lifting the gate when open, making it easy to keep in order. It is held closed by a snap catch. A period punch is mounted on the film gate which may be operated by a push button outside of the front of the case. The perforation is close to the picture.

Side Guides: The tension rail on one side is self adjusting to the width of the film, guiding it in a straight line and preventing side weave.

Pressure Plate: The pressure plate and runners, or shoes, are of highly polished steel. The pressure plate is cut away for focusing through the film.

Movement: The perfect registration of the film is secured by an intermittent shuttle movement propelled by a harmonic cam mounted directly on the fly-wheel shaft. All of the parts are hardened steel and ground to insure long wear. The top and bottom of the shuttle are fitted with adjustable gibs to take up any small amount of wear. The pins which engage the film move in a straight line and enter the perforation slightly above the point of registration with positive straight in and out movement which cannot mutilate the film in any way. It is made to operate forward or backward.

Shutter: The maximum shutter opening is 180 degrees, or 50 per cent, but is instantly adjustable to any smaller angle.

Frame Line: There is an adjustment, by means of a knurled screw, for instantly raising and lowering the position of the image in relation to the perforations on the film. This makes it a universal machine. Some cameras are made to take the picture half way between the perforations, others on a line with the perforations. The Universal Camera can be used in connection with either, or for title work for pictures made on other cameras. Production concerns adopt either one or the other of these systems as standard and will not accept film that does not conform to their rule.

Focusing Device: The focus tube is located just back of the aperture and attached to the film gate, which when closed connects with a window in the main door. It is fitted with a magnifying lens which enlarges the image to double its size, making it possible to get a sharp focus on a small object, and the eye is so near the focusing point that no detail need ever be lost. The lens can be focused while the film is in place, or a piece of matte film may be inserted in the gate.

View Finder: The view finder is of the negative lens type, showing the image right side up. It may be attached to the top or to the side of the camera, but is not adjustable for close views. It is compact and when not in use is held by a clip inside of the camera.

Trick Crank: There is a stop picture shaft for novelty effects. This device, making one exposure per turn, is operated by the regular handle and is on the left side, so that it will never be used by mistake. The movement of the film may be reversed by merely turning the crank handle backward or toward the left, for specials, composites, dream and trick pictures.

Lens and Front Board: One lens is supplied with the camera, a B. & L. Zeiss Tessar F. 3:5 50 m.m., in metal focusing mount with graduated distance scale. Upon request the Hellar F 4-5 lens will be substituted. The lens is not mounted on the front board, of which it is entirely independent. It is supported by a heavy metal strut fastened direct to the aperture plate, insuring perfect optical alignment and rigidity.

The front board is of heavy sheet aluminum and may be instantly removed without tools for shutter adjustment or for changing the frame line.

Lens Mount: The lens is mounted in a screw adapter of suitable length for proper focus which can be quickly removed or adjusted by a screw at the right side. With this quick action locking device it is possible to change lenses of different focal length very rapidly. Any make or focal length of lens may be used by fitting with a suitable collar to fit the adapter. The shortest focus lens which may be used is 1½ inches.

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN and NORMAN STUCKEY.

ANY questions concerning music for the film, suitable instrumentation for motion picture theaters, questions relating to the pipe organ; in fact, any questions, criticisms or suggestions dealing with musical interpretation for moving pictures will be answered by Mr. Stuckey through this department. Inquiries should be addressed to Musical Editor, Moving Picture World, 17 Madison avenue, New York City.

Furst's Score of "Joan, the Woman."

"JOAN, THE WOMAN" was recently produced in Los Angeles, and Gilbert Brown, of the Tribune, has much to say regarding Mr. Furst's score. Chicago, San Francisco, Boston and other large cities will have a chance to hear Mr. Furst's score before spring, and in each city Mr. Furst will personally rehearse the orchestra and direct the music on the opening night.

Mr. Brown says: "Ever since big single motion picture productions began to bid for the privilege of entertaining the public for an entire evening, I have cherished the ambition of seeing a fine feature film in the presentation of which music should take what seemed to me to be its rightful place.

That ambition was realized when I saw and heard "Joan, the Woman." This splendid, stirring screen epic, with its attendant music by William Furst, seems to me to be the finest union of the two arts—the oldest and the newest—that the public has yet witnessed.

In all but a few previous productions of this type the music has been "arranged"—that is, an adapter has selected from the world of musical literature what he believed to be suitable themes for various characters and big incidents in the screen drama, and then has hitched them together, orchestrating them when necessary.

It is not to be denied that some splendid effects have been obtained by this method, but all too frequently the heroine's theme was taken from some well known opera or stage music, and the listener was distracted by the inevitable association of the borrowed theme.

Motion picture directors objected that no composer could in a few short months produce a score sufficiently rich in new melodies to be regarded as high class music; it was much better, they said, to borrow from the best music of the world.

To back up this argument they pointed to the sad failure of such films as had been provided with special scores. To me it always seemed that the failure was due rather to the lack of inspiration in the subject.

"Joan, the Woman," however, is a photoplay to inspire the ablest composer, and William Furst has provided a score that richly mirrors the lofty ideal set forth on the screen.

It is as difficult to particularize the merits of Mr. Furst's music a few moments after one's first view of the drama as it would be to give a detailed analysis of a grand opera score under the same circumstances.

Foremost among the many impressions received, however, is that of the perfect union of both factors, film and music, into something greater than either. Even one who attends for the chief purpose of judging the music finds its attention centering, time and time again, on the screen, the music weaves itself into the picture so that he is unconscious of it as music.

At other times—and always when the composer so intended—the music becomes an equal partner, as in the glorious hymn-like marches when Joan, in shining armor, leads the armies of France to victory, and in the scenes preceding the burning of the Maid, when the ceaseless throbbing of the kettle drum keeps time with the spectator's laden heart.

There never was a moment during the course of the drama when the music was not in keeping with the lofty dignity and beautiful idealism of the play.

Mr. Furst's score is Wagnerian to the extent of a complete scheme of musical "motifs," which appear in the music simultaneously with the entrance onto the screen of the characters to whom they are ascribed.

In the invention of these themes the composer has entered remarkably into the spirit of the various characters and their relation to the action and driving purposes of the drama. The theme of the Voices, in particular, is exalting in the extreme, and its introduction into the various scenes—Joan's torture and during her night of terror preceding her execution—produces a curiously uplifting effect.

The composer will doubtless be subjected to criticism for his use of the Marseillaise to represent the spirit which gives the Maid strength to redeem France from the enemy. Liberal minded souls will point out that this is a terrible anachronism, that the Marseillaise was not written until 350 years after Joan's era.

The world is agreed that this song typifies today the spirit of France, and the spirit of France born in Joan's breast was the same flame that inspired Rouget de Lisle and that inspires France today.

Therefore, why may not a melody that spells the soul of France now be used to typify that same soul 500 years ago?

New Type of Theater Organ.

Good music will always pay its own way, whereas no music at all is what many of the picture theaters give us at the present time.

We believe it is admitted that best results are now obtained by using an organ, which can follow the picture and quickly interpret the varied emotional action on the screen.

What we mean by organ is such as is used in the Rialto, Strand, Academy of Music, Broadway, Audubon, etc., but the orchestral department of the organ must, to a considerable degree, represent the tones of the orchestral instruments. An out and out church organ will not do. The average church organ is too heavy and lacking in light and frolicsome character which is absolutely necessary to entertain theater audiences.

Such an instrument has finally been developed and found absolutely satisfactory. This new instrument is the "Unit Organ," built by the Wagnerin-Weickhardt Co., and designed by Eugene F. Licombe, one of the pioneers who introduced the organ into New York theaters.

This organ has no noise producing effects such as auto horn, fire gong, whistles, etc., but it is certainly rich in real musical effects. Many orchestral tones of the orchestral instruments themselves are faithfully reproduced, as well as that of the church organ. There is a wonderful variety in an instrument of this character, very much more than that obtained by an orchestra of six or eight musicians. It is also effective when used with three or more musicians, because it blends perfectly with them that the character of the tones accentuate the orchestral quality and makes an orchestra of four men sound like twelve first-class musicians.

The following specification of the Unit Organ is suitable for and can be afforded easily for the average six hundred seat house:

Interesting Educationals

Three Scientific, Two Industrial, One Topical, One Sanitary,
One Aquatic and Three Scenic Subjects.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

"Bee Culture" (Universal).

THE handling of the honey bee is a simple matter, according to Dr. Edward F. Bigelow's demonstration, presented in the Universal Screen Magazine No. 9. We see him working quietly and gently with the little creature, whose fury it is said he has never felt. He hives the swarm, and persuades the stragglers to enter their new home by means of smoke. We are then introduced to the queen bee, and also to a new-born bee. An interesting feature of the subject is a greatly magnified picture of the bee larvae.

"Physical Experiments" (Paramount-Bray).

No. 56 of the Paramount-Bray-Pictographs contains an instructive series of pictures illustrating the remarkable effects produced by rays of light passing through different kinds of lenses. The pictures have been taken in absolute darkness so that the light rays, produced by powerful lights, appear to originate in space. Various lenses are employed, some of which split single rays into segments, while others bring several rays together, forming one intensified ray. The tremendous reach of one of the largest searchlights in the world, situated on one of the high buildings at the Brooklyn end of the Manhattan bridge, is also explained.

"Perpetuating Dewey's Image" (Universal).

In the Universal Screen Magazine No. 9 we see Ulric S. J. Dunbar working on the death mask of Admiral Dewey. The mold which was cast on the face of the naval hero is filled with plaster of paris, after which the mold is broken, leaving the finished mask, which will be used in the modeling of the statue.

"How Frankfurters Are Made" (Universal).

To those who have had qualms with regard to eating frankfurters the information to be found in the Universal Screen Magazine No. 9 will afford considerable consolation, and sufficient reason to indulge in one of the tastiest, if not the most delicate, of foods. We are taken into the interior of a sausage factory, where we see the beef and pork stripped from the bones and put through first a coarse and then a fine chopper, after which it is seasoned and placed in the skins. Twine is tied tightly about the sausage at intervals, dividing it into equal lengths. We also see the sausage placed in the smoke room and treated to the final cooking. The bologna sausage also figures in this picture.

"Ice Harvest on the Hudson" (Universal).

In the ninth issue of the Universal Screen Magazine will be found comprehensive illustrations of how the ice is removed from the surface of the upper Hudson and put in storage for use in summer. We see the horse-drawn markers plot out the surface as a guide to the sawyers, and the sawing of the ice into blocks, which are pushed into the open water and thence into a sluiceway, which receives the day's cuttings. An endless chain carries the ice cakes into the storehouse, where they are cut into smaller blocks and stored away in even rows.

"Swapping Foundations Under New York Skyscrapers" (Paramount-Bray).

An intensely interesting subject shown in the Paramount-Bray-Pictograph No. 56 deals with the methods used in cutting away the massive piles which have been driven deep into the ground under huge New York skyscrapers and substituting others which better suit the purpose of the new subway construction work. This is illustrated by means of animated drawings, as well as photography. An excellent idea can be obtained from this picture of how the work of constructing the new subway is being carried on underneath the great city.

"Sanitary Safety First" (Mutual-Gaumont).

Reel Life No. 41 draws attention to the danger of disease germs being transmitted through the use of a common drinking cup and recommends the use of the individual drinking cup. We are also treated to an illustration of how a sanitary drinking cup is made. This picture is an exceptionally useful one, dealing as it does with an important branch of sanitation.

"Queer Fish With Shells" (Mutual-Gaumont).

Among the "queer fish with shells" shown in Reel Life No. 41 are the Littorina, which conceal themselves by resting on objects of the same color; the Trochus, or Top Shell; the Purple Fish, the Trumpet Shell, the Aeolis and the Haliotis, which latter is used in the manufacture of mother of pearl. An exceptionally interesting study.

"Mount St. Michael" (Mutual-Gaumont).

In Mutual Tours Around the World No. 15 we are shown attractive and interesting views of Mount St. Michael, a towering pinnacle of granite on the northern coast of France, which is surmounted by a Benedictine monastery. This pile of granite at high tide is cut off from the mainland, transforming it into an islet. The monastery presents an interesting bit of architecture, both monastic and military, developed from the twelfth to the fifteenth century. The special architectural features dwelt upon are the Museum, the Cloister, Chapel St. Aubert, and the Rocks and Tower of Gabriel.

"Morocco" (Mutual-Gaumont).

Interesting views in Morocco will be found in Mutual Tours Around the World No. 15. Contrasts are drawn between the wild nomad life of Morocco and the result of civilization. The latter is illustrated at the Atlantic seaport of Casablanca. Camp life in the desert and at the foot of the Atlas mountains, a military caravan and the narrow gauge military railway as seen at Casablanca, and which was the first railway in Morocco, are among other sights shown.

"Around Lake Iseo" (Mutual-Gaumont).

The scenes shown in Mutual Tours Around the World No. 15 of Lake Iseo, a small body of water at the foot of the Alps in northern Italy, are exceedingly beautiful. Bordering Lake Iseo are Lovere Predore and Capo-di-Ponte. The scenes shown of this part of Italy are picturesque and exhibit an interesting type of architecture, which is a co-mingling of Swiss and Italian.

Photoplay League Active

New York Branch of Photoplay League for the Second Time Guests of R. L. Rothapfel at Rialto Theater.

THE INTENTIONS of the newly organized society for the promotion of the better film, known as the Photoplay League, have already been cited to our readers. Its intentions are good, and we sincerely hope that its efforts, made, as is usual, by the few earnest workers, may bear meritorious fruit.

For the second time R. L. Rothapfel of the Rialto theater, New York, opened his doors to this well meaning organization early in the afternoon of Wednesday, February 7. Miss Helen Varick Boswell, well known for her activities in civic and educational matters, presided at the meeting and explained that the Photoplay League was organized for the purpose of encouraging the higher forms of the motion picture art, and with a view to improving the general standard and literary value of the motion pictures displayed throughout the country. Miss Boswell stated that the Photoplay League had been formed on a national basis, and that it is expected that a million members will be enrolled during the coming year to act as a unit in upholding the better type of motion picture. "There are no so-called 'uplifters' in the league," explained Miss Boswell, "no quibblers over small details, and the league has no purpose to harass the film manufacturer or the exhibitor, but to support them in their best work."

The league hopes to accomplish its purpose by indorsing such particular films as meet its required standard, and by informing its members of those pictures to which its recommendation has been given, which will then be asked for by members at their own motion picture houses. The league's object will be to encourage manufacturers in the production of the better type of film, and by the increased patronage of members to make it possible for exhibitors to display these films more generally.

The practical difficulty in exhibiting pictures which would appeal to the discriminating was explained to the members of the league who were present by Mr. Rothapfel, manager of the Rialto theater, who told of various disheartening experiences to the motion picture producers and theater managers in catering to the discriminating public.

The majority of producers have already approached the league with a view to having their pictures recommended to league members. The various branches of the Federation of Women's Clubs (which consists of some three million members) among numerous other organizations, are actively supporting the movement.

All communications should be addressed to Frank Lascelles, Director of the League, 665 Fifth avenue, New York.

Educational Pictures and the Sunday Question

Carefully Chosen Programs Are Valuable Aids in Building Up Local Confidence in the Exhibitor.

THERE is no other form of amusement in force now before the public eye and mind which has the manifold advantages of the moving pictures. The ever widening scope of their powers bring them within every known possibility for good, and so few occasions for evil, except in the hands of the most unscrupulous persons.

The exhibitor who is fully possessed of the knowledge of this quality and value of that which he is delivering to the public should be animated by the highest possible motives to serve them in such a way that his service shall be beyond reproach; he should know that where there is no reproach there can be no opposition. On this basis the Sunday question is one of easy local adjustment, not as to the nature and purposes of the picture, but rather as to the congenial relations of the picture house to its immediate community. On the other hand, if an exhibitor insists upon running an indiscriminate program, thinking only of the immediate dimes and temporary crowds, he must not be surprised if he finds that he has lost the confidence of those whose support he most needs and also the very profits he so eagerly sought. Wherever the need of the Sunday exhibition arises the first difficulties are cleared away if it is known that the character of the exhibition is above reproach, leaving only the matter of the suitability of the exhibition to become settled. This can, in most instances, be done by an appeal to the objects and purposes sought to be fulfilled by such exhibition by a program of the standard referred to below.

Ideal Program as Seen in New York.

Of course there is the feature play of recognized merit and suitability, a review of this does not necessarily come at this time. Suffice it to say that it occupies one-third part of the program time, the remaining part of the program and time being taken up as follows:

Current Events.

The important matters before Congress are given to the people through pictures of the leading characters interested in them. The "leak" is made important through a picture of the committee in charge, together with a picture of Mr. Whipple, their counsel and most important witnesses. How the government takes care of the elk and antelope in the Yellowstone Park during the winter months, and the domestic habits which these animals acquire affords some very pretty pictures. The new head of the navy in succession to Admiral Dewey in the person of Rear Admiral Benson makes the people (especially the young) acquainted with one of the two important branches of the nation's defence. The launching of the new battleship Mississippi, the third of its kind, is in line with patriotism, now so thoroughly and properly rampant.

War Events.

A decidedly new aspect of the war is given in these most recent Powell pictures, in that they are a departure from the battlefield incidents. The Mohammedans as prisoners are shown, as they are living amid new surroundings without that local relationship so necessary to them in their religious observances. They are, however, allowed full privileges to live and worship according to their custom. In one place a mosque has been built, with the separate tower, from which the call to worship is made, other habits are provided for so that they shall not be compelled to complain of their forced confinement. The natives of Algeria, North Africa, and the more distant India are all shown in this series, which is as instructive as it is interesting.

Curiosities of Natural History.

A very pretty set of colored Pathe pictures is "Small Birds of Warm Climates." The coloring of these interesting creatures is truly magnificent. The species are exceedingly rare to us of these colder regions and are at once a revelation and lesson. "Butterflies and Bees" are another series which come out of their familiarity, now that they are shown in all their beautiful coloring. Boys will be glad to see the Admiral and the Peacock and the Swallowtail in their glowing and attractive colorings and increase their interest in their entomological studies with the additional profit.

"The Living Book of Nature" (Ditmar).

A new chapter in this book begins with Fish Fed Animals. That there are many animals that are only fish fed does not readily occur to the lay mind and these pictures are therefore doubly interesting. The feeding of sea-lions and other members of the seal family in confinement is attractive. The boy baseball enthusiast will grow green with envy at the unerring dexterity with which these animals catch in their mouths whatever is thrown to them.

The Beaver in his haunts making special preparations for winter is full of interest. That marvelous instinct which teaches them how to select their winter abode, how to furnish it, and what food to store, is semi-human. A study of the animals with their singular land and water powers is revealed.

"Eruption of Mt. Kilauea" (Universal).

This is one of the most marvelous pictures ever taken of a volcanic eruption, the photographer risking his life in the event, yet securing what is perhaps the most remarkable of the kind ever produced and richly repaying for the strenuous efforts made. Mt. Kilauea is the earth's largest active volcano, located on the island of Hawaii, in the Pacific ocean. Its crater is eight miles in circumference and encloses an undulating field of hard black lava which lies from 200 to 700 feet below the crater's rim. Near the center of this is a pit some 2,000 feet wide and 1,000 feet deep in which a mass of lava in the molten state rises and recedes at irregular intervals. When the volcano is in eruption the field of black lava breaks up into huge blocks, and from the cracks between these blocks fire fountains spurt up into the air at a height of from ten to fifty feet. As one of the earth's natural wonders this film will be useful in many ways.

"The Diary of a Puppy" (Vitagraph).

A pretty little story of great value and interest to an audience of children, it is essentially a children's picture. The sub-titles tell a most attractive little story, all of which is real and natural, and should be included in all children's programs, as they will delight in following the puppies through all the necessary antics of what is a thorough day's life of a puppy, giving a strong contradiction to what is known as a "dog's life."

Humorous.

Mutt and Jeff are not always entitled to a place in an educational program. An exception must be made when these two worthies are found posing as Spanish bull fighters. Here the artist has exceeded himself, for, without doubt, for cleverness of execution, fidelity to the subject, even in fun, together with clean mirth, this series of sketches make it worth a place on any program having for its purpose a healthy laugh without being too absurd.

The above are given by the writer as seen in but two performances of that kind of a program which is above criticism and reproach and which stamp the house where they are exhibited as one that is filling all that it can in the way of clean, healthy pictures, and as such are above reproach.

W. H. J.

HERMAN F. JANS TO TAKE FIRST VACATION IN TEN YEARS.

Herman F. Jans, president of the New Jersey Metro Film Service, No. 71 West Twenty-third street, accompanied by Mrs. Jans and their ten-year-old daughter Mildred, soon will leave for an extended tour of the South. This will be the first vacation Mr. Jans has taken since he entered the film industry. Mr. Jans and his family will go direct to Jacksonville, Fla., and from there will visit St. Augustine, Ormond, Daytona, Palm Beach, Miami and, if time permits, Key West and Havana, Cuba. On the return trip they will stop at Tampa, and also at Savannah and Atlanta, Ga.

Among the Picture Theaters

Strand Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.

Newest Picture House in City of Brotherly Love Makes Generous Provision for Its Auto Clientele—Period of the Italian Renaissance Inspiration for Interior Beauty of Structure.

THE Strand theater, at Germantown avenue and Venango street, Philadelphia, is the latest and probably the most complete temple of the silent drama to be found in that city. It has many features to commend it, but none more striking than the way in which it makes provision for motorists. Located on the principal business street of the great North Philadelphia section, a few hundred feet from Broad street, the principal artery for automobile traffic, it is excellently situated to attract the attention of passing motorists who can scarcely miss seeing the two glowing electric signs which surmount the facade, one blazoning "Strand, Photoplays de Luxe" and the other the feature of the day.

Moreover, motorists who stop are surprised to find that they may leave their machines in a commodious garage next door to the theater, which has space to accommodate 300 cars. This service is rendered without cost.

Entering the theater the motorist finds that special provision has been made for his comfort there also. A section of the orchestra is equipped with a series of boxes supplied with comfortable wicker chairs especially for his accommofortably await their friends. On the ceiling is a splendid mural painting, one of several which adorn the house. Vases of hothouse flowers give joy to the eye.

The lobby is triangular and connected with the theater proper by a series of glass and mahogany doors. The auditorium is rectangular in shape and of such proportions that 1,800 people are accommodated on one floor, despite ample aisle space and the unusual width of the seats. There is no balcony in the usual sense, but a series of boxes equipped with wicker chairs run around three sides of the auditorium supported by massive columns crowned with notably graceful, gilded Corinthian capitols.

The interior decorations were designed by Signor Barbarita, an Italian artist. A color scheme of ivory, old rose and gold prevails and the period of the Italian renaissance has been the inspiration for its application. Imported rose damask hangings cover the walls in place of paper or paint and everywhere graceful Venetian mirrors give an effect of light and spaciousness.

The chairs in the boxes, which seat 500, are wicker, as has been mentioned, and the seats downstairs are of Circassian walnut upholstered in red Spanish leather. In addition to the usual retiring rooms for men and women, which contain every convenience and are in charge of competent attendants, there is a spacious parlor for women, done in dove gray and blue, and a reception room which might have been one of the apartments of a Florentine prince. Check rooms and a first aid equipment are also supplied.

The lighting is equally complete. The indirect and semi-indirect systems have been discreetly combined and, while a series of wall brackets adds to the decorative effect, most of the illumination comes from unseen sources. A most conspicuous feature is a huge inverted dome in the middle of the ceiling through whose translucent panes filter innumerable combinations and gradations of color.

Over the proscenium arch is a mural painting on which Signor Barbarita has evidently spent his finest skill. In method of construction and mechanical equipment the house is equally admirable. It is of fireproof construction throughout, equipped with nearly double the number of exits required by law, and with all approved safety devices. The stage is full sized and equipped to handle elaborate dramatic productions should they be desirable.

Two Simplex power driven machines are used. The operating room is fireproof. The screen is of the latest type and an elaborate stage setting, which is changed from time to time, furnishes an agreeable rest for the eye when pictures are not being shown. The ventilation system insures a complete change of air every three minutes and thermostats give an equable temperature.

Only photoplays of the best quality are shown. The house presents first runs in its neighborhood. Mr. Effinger's previous success with the Leader theater in West Philadelphia insures his ability to pick programs. Music is featured to an unusual degree. An orchestra of eighteen pieces under the direction of Jacob Friedman and an organ played by Henry Spiller are customarily employed. The choice of musical programs is notably good and, in addition to organ and orchestra, Mr. Effinger also engages local soloists of ability to render vocal numbers.

The personnel and discipline of the staff are as remarkable as anything about the house. Every member is taught to feel a personal interest in each patron and to treat him or her as an honored guest. The male members of the staff appear in full evening dress and a pretty corps of ushers under the direction of Miss Eva Mosier are tastefully garbed. James J. Springer, the house manager, is a showman of ability and experience. Joseph Friel is projection "engineer," and Edward Farley, chief electrician.

The house was opened on New Year's day and has sprung into immediate popularity. Three performances a day are given at 2.15, 7 and 9 o'clock. Prices range 10 and 15 cents at matinees and 20, 25 and 35 cents in the evening.

ation. By this means the theater may hope to attract patrons of the best class from all sections of the city.

Yet catering to automobile traffic is not the prime purpose of Herbert Effinger and his mother, Mrs. J. Effinger, two of Philadelphia's most progressive and successful exhibitors, who built and own the house. The Strand is essentially a neighborhood theater and it is the aim of the management to make it an institution of which every resident of North Philadelphia may be proud. True, motorists are made exceptionally comfortable, but so is every patron of the house, as may be judged from the detailed description of its construction and equipment, which follows.

Entering the lobby an immediate impression of absolute comfort is obtained. The walls are faced with marble to a height of several feet and the floors are tessellated. On the floor are spread beautiful rugs and above the marble paneling a series of Venetian mirrors alternates with paintings of prominent stars. Passing the ticket booth, which is equipped with the latest devices, a huge Damascus lamp is seen surmounting a round divan and along the walls are massive reproductions of period furniture, in which patrons may com-

Picadilly Theater, Rochester, N. Y.

The Clinton-Mortimer Corporation's $250,000 House Contains All That Is Beautiful in Theater Building—Screen Sinks Through Floor Into Pit When Not in Use—Then Illuminated Fountain Appears.

THE Picadilly, which was opened in Rochester, N. Y., recently, is regarded as one of the finest moving picture theaters in the country. A photograph of the house appears herewith. The Clinton-Mortimer Corporation built the Picadilly at a cost of $250,000. The officers of the company are William Daininger, president; J. G. Comerford, vice-president; A. B. Headley, vice-president; William S. Riley, treasurer; Walter H. Seeley, secretary and managing director; T. J. Swanton, F. A. Sherwood, W. H. Kline, J. E. Ferguson, H. W. Hart and William Bausch, directors. W. F. Bossner, who has had a wide experience in the moving picture business, is house manager. He managed the Park theater, of Boston, and opened the Crescent in New Orleans, with pictures.

The Picadilly is on Clinton avenue north, with frontage on both Mortimer and Division streets. The main entrance is on Clinton. There is a handsome lobby with four ticket selling windows, one on each side and two in the center, also the house manager's office, and stairs leading off each side of the lobby, one to the balcony, and one to the boxes. This entrance leads the patron to the center of the house.

On Mortimer street there is another entrance, where there is a large lobby, retiring rooms and two more ticket windows.

Three of the latest style machines, made by the Baird Motion Picture Machine Company, and equipped with lenses ground especially for them by the Bausch & Lomb Company have been installed. There also is a Minusa Gold Fibre Screen. There is a large balcony, with entrances from three levels, also a series of boxes on each side. The view of the screen is unobstructed. At the first level from which there is an entrance to the balcony is a wide promenade, handsomely furnished and finished in elaborate woodwork, with seats all about and rich carpets and mirrors. On the mezzanine floor are the main retiring rooms. Above is a smaller promenade.

Patrons are delighted with the seating arrangement, which obviates all overcrowding. The seats are twenty-two inches wide. There is extra space between the rows.

Rex Stovel, a prominent theater artist, directed the designing and construction of the stage, which is noted for its beautiful appearance. The orchestra is seated on a half stage in front of the screen. Stairs lead up on each side of the stage, through arbors and gates. The screen sinks through the floor into a pit between pictures and in its stead is seen a fountain, which comes through the floor to take the place of the screen.

The building is fireproof and of steel and concrete construction. The decorations are a work of art. The "mushroom" system of heating is used. There are ducts in the floor discharging warm or cool air, as wanted, beneath every other chair in the auditorium. The heat is forced in by a huge fan, and in summer time the air may be cooled by passing through water tanks.

The director of the orchestra is Susan Tompkins, of Rochester, a successful violinist, who has appeared in vaudeville. There are sixteen soloists in the orchestra. Besides the orchestra there is a pipe organ, a choralcello, in which the pipes are all made of wood. The tone is therefore superb. The Picadilly is featuring the Paramount service.

There has been a heavy attendance since the opening.

Isis Theater, Portland, Oregon

Suburban Photoplay House Enjoys Continued Prosperity—Only One Change of Management in Nine Years.

THE Isis theater, Sellwood, a suburb of Portland, Ore., was built in 1908 and was the first theater in that section of the city. It has met much competition since its erection, but has come out on top through it all. The building is of cement and was erected by William Strahlman for Alfred Gleason, who opened the house. Mr. Strahlman took over the house in 1911 and has since conducted it. That a suburban showhouse should have had but two owners in nine years is somewhat of a record, and the continued ownership of the Isis by Mr. Strahlman is remarkable.

Mr. Strahlman increased the seating capacity to 250 and otherwise enlarged the building. The interior has a novel beamed effect by reason of the peculiar construction of the ceiling trusses that support the second story.

The Isis caters to a general family trade, and being located a considerable distance from the center of Portland, enjoys a steadier patronage than many suburban theaters closer in. Mr. Strahlman uses a regular program and selects his features from the open market.

Globe Theater, New Orleans, La.

Herman Fichtenberg's New House Is a Paragon of Beauty, Comfort and Refinement.

THERE are few theaters anywhere that present to their patrons the elegance of appointment and the refinement of finishing that are offered in the new Globe Theater that has recently been opened by Herman Fichtenberg on Canal Street in New Orleans, La. The building of the theater was prosecuted with deliberation and every step in the construction was taken with careful attention to the attractiveness which it would contribute to the completed structure. Simple elegance in color, architecture, and finishings was the keynote. It is not a large theater and therein lies the only regret that might be presented, for already the high-class attractions that have been featured in this house have drawn crowds that it was impossible to accommodate. Nevertheless, this fact does not detract from the enjoyment of those persons who are so fortunate as to find seats at any of the presentations. Every picture that is thrown upon the screen is accompanied by a carefully selected musical program and the action is "played" on the magnificent Austin organ or the baby grand piano by accomplished musicians with as much care and expression as is ever accorded a dramatic performance.

The Globe has fewer than 1,000 seats, but every one of them is a preferred seat. This is made possible by the ingenious arrangement which was studied out with care. The entrance to the auditorium is by means of a gentle incline and the patron finds himself in the center of the house. From a broad aisle he is at liberty to pass toward the screen and be seated in an opera chair of the latest pattern and air-cushioned; or he can enter a loge and enjoy ample room in the seats provided there. Ascending a gentle incline, those who have a preference for what might be termed the balcony find themselves in seats which are really only a part of the main floor, but farther removed from the screen. The tone of color for the walls and ceiling is subdued and restful. The metal trimmings are of silver and the chaste wood-work is of mahogany. The patron of this house enjoys a feeling of delightful restfulness as soon as he is seated and his satisfaction is completed by the perfect projection of the pictures and the air of refinement that is a natural consequence in such a perfectly appointed theater.

Empire Theater, Tientsin, China

Magnificent, Thoroughly Modern Photoplay House, Equipped With Latest Devices and Conveniences, Located in French Concession in This City.

IT WILL probably be interesting to many to know that one of the handsomest and best-equipped motion picture houses in the Orient, and one which in fact compares favorably with similar houses in any part of the world, is situated in China. This is the Empire theater, of which A. Bari is proprietor, located in Tientsin, in the French Concession.

Auspicious circumstances marked the opening of this theater, which took place a short time ago, the first performance being an invitation affair, at which a collection was made for the benefit of the Allied Red Cross Funds. There was not a vacant seat anywhere in the house, and in fact it was necessary for extra seats to be provided to accommodate the crowd. The stage boxes were occupied by the French, Russian, British and Belgian consular staffs, and the music revealed the fact that the building possesses excellent acoustic properties. The cafe, as well as the refreshment counter in the foyer, were well patronized, and the receipts which were also donated to the Red Cross Fund, helped materially to increase the total amount.

The opening program consisted of music by the band of the 16th Colonial Infantry, whose services had been lent by the commandant for the occasion. The following American-made pictures were shown: a Vitagraph comedy, "An Error in Kidnapping"; Essanay picture of Charlie Chaplin, "The Hampion," and the Universal Special Feature, "Neptune's Daughter." Topical war films from Great Britain and Flanders were also shown. The bill evoked much enthusiasm. The performance came to a close with the rendering of the Allied National Anthems by the French Band.

Located on the corner of the Rue du Chaylard and Rue Fontanier, the main entrance of the Empire faces south on the latter street. As will be noted from one of the accompanying photographs, the building has a striking exterior. In addition to being equipped with the latest appliances for motion picture projection, the building is so constructed that it may be used for the spoken drama as well. The stage measures 28 feet in width and is 34 feet deep, and overhead is a specially constructed sliding platform, on which are mounted calcium lights, which can be thrown upon the scenery and performers from an advantageous angle. This platform is also used in handling the scenery, and the height of the ceiling of the house is sufficient to allow the drops to be drawn straight up instead of being rolled.

For the artists there are three large, well-appointed dressing rooms on each side of the stage, together with a spacious property room. The theater has an excellent ventilating system, and is also equipped with the best heating, lighting and sanitary appliances. Approximately 600 patrons can be accommodated in the orchestra or pit and dress-circle, a clear and uninterrupted view of the stage and screen being afforded from all parts of the house. In addition, there are also six commodious opera boxes. Many facilities for affording comfort and pleasure to the patrons are provided.

The seating plan of both the pit and dress circle is divided by two wide aisles, and in addition there is a wide aisle along the wall on each side. The interior decorative effect is striking, and is further enhanced by the beauty of the soft mellow lighting system used, the illumination being supplied by a large chandelier suspended from the ceiling over the center of the auditorium, together with numerous other lights which have been so distributed throughout the building so as to produce the greatest efficiency and at the same time blend with the decorative scheme and show off the artistic beauties of the house to the best advantage.

One of the most attractive features is the lobby, from which three wide double doors afford entrance to the auditorium, and a corresponding number provide egress to the street. There are also two wide reinforced concrete stairways which lead to the dress circle, as well as to the roof garden, which insures the comfort of the patrons during the summer months. The lobby is well lighted and heated, and decorated with potted plants in profusion.

One of the most striking features of the Empire, both from an artistic standpoint, and from the standpoint of comfort and convenience of the patrons, is the foyer, which as will be seen from the accompanying photograph, is abundantly provided with luxurious upholstered divans and seats so arranged as not only to provide an uninterrupted view along the wide boulevard on which the theater is situated, but also to allow the afternoon patrons the full benefit of the sunlight which pours in through three large windows which occupy almost the entire wall space on one side. These windows are covered with handsome curtains which also enhance the beauty of the general decorative scheme, probably the most striking feature of which consists of the high partitions, the upper part being ornamented with grill work, surmounted by capitals on which are potted plants.

ANNA, ILL., HAS NEW THEATER.

A corporation composed of about twenty-five prominent citizens of Anna, Illinois, is erecting a new theater, at a cost of approximately $14,000, for the presentation of the best motion pictures. It will be known as The Main theater, and is expected to be ready for opening during the latter part of February or the first of March.

The building is 33 by 126 feet, will seat 454, and is of brick with white enameled tile front and concrete floor. The equipment includes a splendid heating and ventilating system.

Anna is a town of three thousand inhabitants and already has one good picture theater. E. S. Alden is president of the new company and U. D. Wiley, manager.

British Notes

CROOK yarns and sob stories are not finding great favor in the eyes of the new president of the British Board of Film Censors, T. P. O'Connor. Drastic modifications have had to be made to two or three foreign productions submitted to his scrutiny during the past fortnight, particularly in relation to the depiction of crime. Protracted "last gasp" scenes, too, are being shorn of much of their original length under the Irishman's regime at Shaftesbury avenue.

The prominence of this question of moving pictures and crime in the press, pulpit and upon the platform as almost the only alternative topic to the war, has been dissected and analyzed to such an extent that new evidence becomes really interesting. At the second sitting of the Kinema Commission at Westminster, Cecil Hepworth was the principal witness and he strongly differed from those people who would have no pictures shown dealing with crime of any kind. The works of Dickens dealt almost entirely with crime, he pointed out, yet found a place unquestioned upon the bookshelves of young people. The famous burglary in "Oliver Twist" was no more likely to incite a desire to burgle when shown on a picture than in print. Probably it would be realized in the future that there was practically no subject which could not be effectively and properly dealt with by a producer who was sincere and in earnest, and who had sufficient knowledge and control of his craft. It was not the subject that mattered, but the treatment.

Looking into the future, Mr. Hepworth said: "We have only touched the merest outer fringe of the greatest possibilities of living photography. Among the industries to be fostered cinematography will be one. Perhaps the old boast will be paraphrased and it will be said in the future 'trade follows the film.' There is an immense and unexplored field for the industry in the domain of education, and it is waiting only for a cheaper base than celluloid, for expense is practically the only thing standing in the way of progress. The war has hindered the coming of the ideal substitute, but it is on its way and will probably be another form of cellulose of a non-inflammable nature, and with its coming the last real reproaches against the film for educational purposes will disappear."

Two years ago I chronicled the fact that Walter Macnamara of the Macnamara Feature Film Co. of New York was in this country making scenes for a photoplay entitled "Ireland a Nation." The completed production was not exhibited on this side until last week, the United Kingdom rights being purchased last year by Fred Sparling, a Dublin exhibitor. Owing to transport difficulties copies did not arrive in time to permit of a public premiere earlier than last Monday week at the Rotunda, Dublin. Upon the third performance of the picture the owner of the film received notice that its exhibition in Ireland had been prohibited by the military authorities, and, accordingly, the film was withdrawn. The subject, it must be mentioned, had previously been seen and passed for exhibition by the military press censor in Dublin.

A new regulation recently drafted under the Defense of the Realm Act makes it now necessary for firms or individuals exporting posters from this country to America and neutral countries in Europe to obtain a special permit from the Chief Postal Censor, Strand House, Carey street, London, W. C. Permits may be obtained at this address. The term poster includes photographs and pictorial representations, but not circulars and catalogues.

A rumor has pervaded the countryside recently to the effect that the government is contemplating closing down moving picture theaters in Great Britain, and considering its suspected source it is not unlikely that the story has been elaborated in its transmission to the States. Let it be said immediately that the Home Office absolutely denies any such intention.

The newest phase in which the industry is co-operating with the state concerns the new war loan. The Treasury Department has furnished exhibitors with a set of slides bearing arguments to popularize the issue, for display upon the 5,000 kinema screens in the country. The spirit in which the trade has taken up the idea is that in which it pays its millions a year amusement tax, and is its best assurance against any unconsiderate government action.

With so many people on the two hemispheres seeking to manufacture grounds for denouncing amusements it is of more than passing note to hear of a bishop sound a warning against "this dangerous repression." Bishop Frodsham, speaking at Cheltenham, said that when the church attempted to repress them it failed badly. The Puritans of early Stuart times saw the moral evils veiled in the amusements of their days. They did not realize so clearly that the love of amusement was not only justifiable but inveterate. They not only banned maypoles, but organs and fiddles, puppet shows, village dancing, athletic contests and games—in short, everything that bore the semblance of popular amusement. The recoil of the national mind thus forcibly wrested from its bias was the active cause of the subsequent burst of licentiousness and moral degradation which disgraced the reign of Charles II. The moral of this failure should not be forgotten today.

An army captain who has been touring the "Battle of the Somme" film through Russia, visiting many places from Courland to Siberia, and Finland to the Caucasus, speaks warmly of the average Russian's enthusiasm for the picture. There are more shows in Moscow, he says, than in any other city of its size in the world.

For the most attractive day bill announcing the exhibition of one of their feature films a Birmingham exchange is offering £1,250 in sums of £100 and £25 each as prizes to exhibitors.

F. R. Goodwins, chairman of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association, disclosed a few later and more reliable statistics relative to the industry in his evidence before the Kinema Commission on the first day of its sitting. In one recent year 4,767 new film subjects were issued, and the average yearly footage of new films released exceeds six million feet. The footage in use each week at the theaters in Great Britain is over 70,000,000 feet. Our annual exports and re-exports are valued at £364,000, while imports account for something like £1,210,500 a year. Mr. Goodwins calculates that 3,375,000 people visit our theaters every week day, with 375,000 on Sunday. Only 500 shows open on Sunday in Great Britain, most of them being in the metropolis. One-half of the visitors occupy seats of the value of three-pence or less. The number of persons engaged in the industry is now between 80,000 and 100,000, and the capital invested through limited companies alone is nearly £19,000,000. Private capital, of which no official figures are available, would probably account for an additional £10,000,000.

The present week, January 15-20, has been a rush week with London exhibitors, due to the release of a war picture even better than the now famous "Battle of the Somme." It is called "The Battle of the Ancre and the Advance of the Tanks." The subject deals with the struggles on the Ancre during last autumn and the adventures of the British land dreadnaughts. The "Tanks," as they are popularly designated, appeared on the programs of 112 theaters in London on Monday. At a suburban house at Finsbury Park a crowd of 2,000 had to be turned away, and at the West End theaters all seats were booked up well in advance. It is estimated that 1,400,000 people have already seen the film during its five days showing in London. Will Jay is the booking director on behalf of the War Department, responsible for the pictures.

The first of the William Fox comedies is to be shown to the trade next week. Both are two-reelers entitled "A Social Washout" and "Chased Into Love." J. B. SUTLIFFE.

CAMERAGRAPH CLUB BALL.

On Saturday evening, March 3, the Cameragraph Club of the Nicholas Power Company will give its second annual ball at Arcadia Hall, Halsey street and Broadway, Brooklyn. The club is composed of the heads of the various factory departments of the Power establishment and the superintendent, Theo. Uhlemann, is the president. Nicholas Power, Edward Earl, John F. Skerrett, A. J. Lang, S. S. Cassard and Will C. Smith are honorary members and take an active interest in the affairs of the club. The ball promises to be one of the events of the year in picture circles.

COMPILED BY THE STATISTICAL DEPARTMENT

SANTSCHI, William Thomas. Born in Luzerne, Switzerland. Swiss-German parentage. Stands six feet two inches, and weighs 212 pounds. Light blue eyes, light brown hair, light complexion. Mr. Santschi made his stage debut December 20, 1897, and for ten years played in stock and with touring companies. The first day of January, 1908, saw him at work in the Selig studio in Chicago and he has been with that company continuously ever since, playing leads and heavies as Fate and the director decided. The first picture in which he played was the single reel production of The Heart of Maryland, and to list his subsequent appearances would consume too much space, since he has come down from the single reel days when forty to fifty parts a year were not uncommon. He is Stephen Brice in The Spoilers and Boris in The Garden of Allah.

Thomas Santschi

HAYAKAWA, Sessue. Born in Tokyo, Japan. Japanese parentage. Is five feet eight inches tall, and weighs 155 pounds. Black hair and eyes. Mr. Hayakawa, or more properly Sessue, since in Japan the surname is first pronounced, gained his experience on the Japanese stage and came to America to practice his profession. He was employed by the N. Y. M. P. Corp., for plays calling for Japanese roles, and his success won the interest of Thomas H. Ince, who provided him with a series of productions giving full exploitation of his remarkable ability. His first play was The Typhoon, but the production to fully establish him as a star was Honorable Friend. Since then he has been seen in innumerable plays and has passed from the Ince to the Lasky management. Just returned from Hawaii, where he went in search of atmosphere for a new play.

Sessue Hayakawa

NORMAND, Mabel. Born in Boston, Mass. Miss Normand is silent as to height and weight, but admits that her hair is dark and her eyes brown. Miss Normand came to the attention of the photoplay fans some five or six years ago in the Betty series, done by the Vitagraph. This was in the days when the identities of the players were not generally announced and the various inquiry departments were deluged with inquiries as to Betty. Later she went to the Biograph and it was here that some bathing subjects attracted more general attention than ever. When the Keystone was formed Miss Normand left the Biograph with Mack Sennett and Fred Mace and in the early days this trio did much to create a name for the Keystones. Later Mr. Sennett turned his attention to directing and Mace formed a company of his own for a time. She followed suit and the Mabel Normand Feature Film Co. is the result.

Mabel Normand

JOYCE, Alice (Mrs. Tom Moore). Born in Kansas City, Mo. Her father was of Irish and French parentage and her mother a native of Wales. She is five feet, six inches tall, weighs 120 pounds, has dark brown hair and eyes and an olive complexion. Miss Joyce's stage experience is limited to a single appearance at a Green Room Club "Rehearsal" at the Astor theater in 1916, but her picture debut was made in October, 1910, in Kalem's "The Engineer's Sweetheart," and she continued with the Kalem Company until February, 1915. She was famous for her playing of Indian roles, but has assumed a wide range of characters ranging from Indian and railroad plays to School for Scandal and other classics. She is at present connected with the Vitagraph Co. She is interested in the study of the occult sciences, astrology, palmistry, character reading and clay modeling and is devoted to the simple life.

Alice Joyce

FARRINGTON, Frank. Born in London, of English parentage. Is five feet eleven inches, and weighs 173 pounds. Dark brown hair, grey eyes and dark complexion. He made his stage debut in 1895 and his first picture appearance in 1910. He has appeared with the Edison and Thanhouser companies, and at present is connected with the Famous Players. He is perhaps best known as the villain, Braine, in "The Million Dollar Mystery," and only the other day a relative wrote from abroad that the soldiers in the trenches were cursing the villainous Braine, for the Mystery is one of the newest pictures at the base camps in France. He is by no means a one-part player, for his chief fad is make-up, and like most trained actors, he cannot understand the demand for "types" contending that even for the camera it is possible to make up so well that a close-up will not reveal the artifice.

Frank Farrington

BOTTOMLEY, Roland. Born in Liverpool, England. English-Scotch ancestry. Is five feet nine inches. Weighs 155 pounds. Brown hair, dark blue eyes, fair complexion. Mr. Bottomley made his stage debut in 1896, as a boy actor, and for twelve years toured in England, America, Australia, South Africa, Germany and Holland, under the managements of Sir Henry Irving, Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, Klaw & Erlanger and Henry W. Savage. He made his picture debut in September, 1914, in "Broken Vows," and has played with Kleine, Equitable, Kalem, Famous Players and Gaumont, and is now doing leads with the Balboa Company. He created Phil in "You Never Can Tell," Lucien in "The Pink Lady," Forestan in "Veronique," the Dancing Master in "Hook," of Holland and Lord

Lawrence in "The Girl Behind the Counter." In pictures he was featured in "In the Grip of Evil" and "The Neglected Wife."

Another Move Toward Cleansing

Clean Picture and Play League of America, Inc., Has Initial Meeting at Washington Irving High School

WITH offices in the Sun Building, a Members' Council composed of representatives of organizations the membership of which exceeds 5,500,000, and with C. Van Cortlandt Van Deusen as executive director, the Clean Picture and Play League of America, Inc., has been launched with a good purpose in view. At the first meeting of the league, which was held at the Washington Irving High School, on the evening of February 14, the objects of the organization were stated, and are as follows:

"To unite representatives and members of the various religious, educational, ethical, civic and other membership organizations, individuals, producers and exhibitors of motion pictures and plays for the purpose of co-operative and concerted action against the production and exhibition of motion pictures and plays of such a character and theme that will, in the judgment of the members, offend public decency or tend to impair or debase the morals of the youth of the nation, or those that, in the judgment of a subsidiary branch of this corporation, will be obnoxious to local sentiment. To foster the production, exhibition and patronage of clean motion pictures and plays. To aid public officials in enforcing the common and statutory laws and local ordinances in respect to public amusements and places of public amusements. To prevent the use of the motion picture screen and dramatic stage for political purposes. To restrict the granting of licenses to conduct places of public amusement to persons of good moral character. To gather and diffuse information among its members as to character and theme of motion pictures and plays in time for members and their children to avoid those which would shock their moral sense, or their religious, political or ethical belief or racial pride. To secure the enactment of uniform laws and ordinances relative to public amusements that will tend to the better protection of public morals and at the same time respect the just rights of those engaged in providing clean public amusements. To do any and all other things incident to or necessary in the carrying out of the objects herein specified."

It will be noticed that the Clean Picture and Play League of America, Inc., does not limit its proposition of cleansing to the moving picture screen, but includes also the spoken play. The discussion which took place on Wednesday evening, however, dealt almost entirely with the moving picture problem. The meeting was called to order by Hugo V. Wittenberg, secretary of the league, and was later addressed by Edward Feeney, K. S. G., chairman of the National Committee on Public Morals of the Catholic Federation of the United States, who touched lightly on the power of the moving picture, legalized censorship, and of the unhappy condition which allows what he called "parasites of the industry" to manufacture and exhibit indecent films.

Mr. Van Deusen, who was selected chairman of the evening, reviewed conditions in general. He drew attention to the laxity displayed among officials in enforcing the laws, using as illustration the frequent exhibition of the female nude on the screen, and of certain productions that had recently been exhibited, and which he had been told had worked unlimited harm. One of these productions pictured a young girl working in a department store and being robbed of her earnings by a lazy father. When her shoes were worn almost off her feet she took the only alternative open to her to procure the necessary articles, attended a cabaret performance on a Saturday night and returned home to her mother on Monday morning with a new pair of shoes. The inference is easily drawn. He stated that the picture had no moral balance, and went so far as to say that a certain notorious white slaver had been heard to remark that this picture had been a great help to his business. Later in the evening Rabbi Goldstein, referring to Mr. Van Deusen's denunciation of this picture, gained considerable applause for his remark, "Down with the conditions that allow employers to pay girls wages that make it necessary for them to resort to the cabaret to get shoes!"

One of the questions that seemed to be uppermost in the minds of the Members' Council, as stated by Mr. Van Deusen, were not alone on how to prevent the showing of indecent pictures not yet released, but also how to get rid of those that are already in circulation.

Perhaps the most interesting address of the evening, apparently impromptu, was that made by Rabbi Goldstein, who stated briefly his belief regarding moral standards. In speaking of his own work in the various districts of the city he stated that the pictures he would consider all right for the Bowery would be altogether out of place in Bensonhurst or Rockaway. He did not believe, moreover, that he had any right to force his own standards on other people. He also stated that he considered that the remedy in the correction of the moving picture program lay with the representatives of localities. And as we understand it, the general feeling of the gathering was that the matter to be dealt with properly must be attacked locally. Rabbi Goldstein summed up this belief in the words of Edgar Allan Poe, "The drama's patrons the drama's law dictates."

Samuel Lesselbaum ably represented Brooklyn's 130 exhibitors, stating that they were one and all ready to co-operate with the league in the cleansing of the screen. Mr. Lesselbaum, who holds the unique position of being a school teacher in the same locality where he has his moving picture houses, made the statement that no exhibitor could hold out long on the exhibition of vicious pictures.

A resolution which was recently handed to Governor Whitman by the exhibitors of Bronx County was read by Mr. Van Deusen in which they pledged themselves to hold to certain high ideals in connection with the exhibition of moving pictures.

Among the Members' Council and officers of the Clean Picture and Play League of America, Inc., are such names as E. H. Tomlinson, National Editorial Association, president; Samuel I. Berman, treasurer; Professor Edward H. Todd, president College of Puget Sound; Professor L. H. Murlin, president Boston University; S. L. Rothapfel, Rialto theater; Rev. Henry Collin Mintin, D.D., National Reform Association; W. F. Haddock, president Actors' Society; George Arliss, president Actors' National Church Alliance; Arthur Capper, Governor of Kansas; Ernest Lister, Governor of Washington; Sadie American, founder of the Playground Association of America; Mrs. Ira Leo Bamberger, member Board of Education, and many other persons of equal importance and intelligence.

TORONTO ASSOCIATION HAS NEW SECRETARY.

A special meeting of the Ontario Motion Picture Protective Association was held at Toronto, Ont., on Tuesday, February 6, when an important change was made in the secretaryship of the association. On account of some dissatisfaction over the selection of W. A. Bach, advertising manager of the Canadian Universal, for this office, Mr. Bach decided to resign and Mr. Alexander, Toronto, treasurer of the former association, was chosen for the position pro tem. As a result of this rearrangement the association, which is primarily an exhibitors' organization, will have an exhibitor in the important post of secretary. Mr. Bach received nothing but praise for the activity and efficiency which he had displayed in connection with the reformation of the association in Ontario.

President Cohen, manager of the Globe theater, Toronto, was in the chair. Other details of business also received attention and arrangements were made for the early calling of an executive meeting to take up important matters.

POLAND BECOMES FREE LANCE.

Joseph Franklin Poland, who has been doing special scenario reconstruction and plot analysis for the Rolfe-Metro organization, has resigned in order to devote all of his time to the writing of original film stories. Poland, who is best known as the adapter of the Stingaree stories and writer of many Vitagraph releases, including "The Rose of the South," decided that a staff position did not permit an author to do his best work. At the present time five of his screen stories are being made at different studios in and near New York. His latest story, "The Cloud," featuring Jean Sothorn, is now being produced by Art Dramas. Poland was one of the first scenario writers to develop to a highly successful degree the written-to-order type of scenario, and during the past twelve months he has had sixty-five of these special plays produced by companies in New York and California.

No Censors for Indiana

Legislators Listen to Exhibitors and Kill Censorship Bills—Favor Sunday Shows.

THE Indiana General Assembly, in session at Indianapolis, has put its stamp of disapproval on censorship of moving picture films in Indiana and has shown that it is inclined to refrain from shutting off the operation of the moving picture theater on Sunday.

Three bills have been introduced during the four weeks of the session, each of which sought to create a State moving picture commission, with power to license and censor films which were exhibited anywhere in the State. Each bill met the same fate. Each one failed to stick its nose out of the doors of the committee rooms, committee members killing off the bills as rapidly as they appeared.

Two of the bills came from the same source. There is in Indiana an organization which maintains one man in a job as head of the organization. It has just enough subscribers to keep this man in the job and away from hard work, it is said. Two of the bills came from this organization.

The third was introduced by Representative Johnson, a resident of Gas City, Ind., a minister and lecturer, and a man who stands high in the community in which he lived. In explaining his bill to the committee Representative Johnson said that he had not fully informed himself as to the conditions surrounding the moving picture industry in the State, but did know that in isolated instances moving picture films, which were not fit to be seen by children, had been exhibited and it was to prevent a recurrence of such offenses that he introduced the bill.

C. C. Pettijohn, attorney employed by the Indiana Exhibitors' Association, who attended the committee meeting, explained to Mr. Johnson just what the Indiana exhibitors wanted in the way of censorship and explained fully within the hearing of the committee the ideals and aims of the Indiana exhibitors. After he had finished with his explanation and had invited Mr. Johnson to meet with the executive committee of the organization and explain to them his complaint Mr. Johnson receded from the somewhat bitter position which he had taken and announced that he would be glad to confer with the committee. He then indicated to the committee that since he understood the position of the Indiana exhibitors that he was not at all certain that the moving picture business should be subjected to the detrimental effects which accompanied a censorship. The committee was also impressed with the conditions as they are in Indiana and as they were portrayed by Pettijohn, and decided that the bill should not pass. It was reported to the parent body for indefinite postponement and that body concurred in the committee report, killing the bill.

Arrangements are being made for Mr. Johnson to address and confer with the moving picture exhibitors of Indianapolis and Indiana.

In an interview with a correspondent of the Moving Picture World Mr. Johnson sent out his views toward the Sunday closing proposition.

"Some people think because I am a preacher and a lecturer that I naturally am a fanatic on the question of moving picture censorship and Sunday closing. Quite the contrary is the truth about the matter. As to censorship, as I said, I have not been fully informed. But as to the Sunday closing I have my own ideas. I might say that I have children of my own, too.

"There is a need for the moving picture show on Sunday. I don't mean that the educational and religious feature of the Sunday show should be eliminated. That is a most important feature and the exhibitor should take care that he shows the proper kind of pictures. Any good picture is educational in its scope. Of that I am satisfied.

"With prohibition in effect in the State the men will want some place to go in the evening. The saloon was not the place for them to go. But the moving picture show is a good place. If it is open on Sunday the posters will attract the average man. He will not hunt the 'blind tiger.' He will keep away from the 'blind tiger' if he learns to like the movies as I like them.

"My congregation has hopped on me because I hold these views. But I have investigated this feature and I feel sure that I am right. I am a believer in the properly conducted Sunday show and I believe that it will be properly conducted when the exhibitors begin to see the trend of public opinion."

BINDBEUTEL WITH SYNDICATE.

G. T. Bindbeutel, until February 10, in charge of the publicity and advertising departments of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, has been engaged by the Wheeler Syndicate, Inc., for special writing.

Ohio Censors Becoming Liberal

By Word and Deed They Have Taken a More Human View of Their Work.

CO-OPERATION between the members of the Ohio Board of Censors and the exhibitors and exchangemen of the state in the past has not amounted to much, but those interested see a change of policy and tactics recently, based on the utterances of the censors. All three of the censors have been quoted in the newspapers lately and on topics directly relating to the work of the board.

Mrs. Maude Murray Miller, who has been on the board longest, is more or less liberal in her views toward censoring. This attitude has been gained, no doubt, from her several years' experience. In fact, she said in a recent interview that her work has enlarged her views on many phases of art and drama. In commenting on the censor's work, she said:

"It is impossible to have a standard or any fast and set rules for censoring pictures. We have much trouble with nudity in films. In this we are guided by the purpose of the play. If nude figures are dragged into any film in a way that overburdens the play or plot, and in a way which we feel has been done simply for suggestiveness, we invariably turn down the picture or order the parts eliminated. However, there is no more vulgarity in the art of motion pictures than in sculpture or paintings.

"We have had too many sex or problem plays, and I believe they are losing vogue with the public as well as with the censors."

Charles G. Williams, chairman of the board, recently made a speech on "Censorship," during which he said:

"Censorship in the hands of intelligent, broad-minded persons is a godspeed to society; but if this power is given to fools, fanatics or grafters and is conducted in a high-handed, arbitrary manner, it is an outrage on civilization.

"The motion picture is the greatest educational and amusement medium since the invention of the press. If guided in the right channels it will become a great factor for the general elevation of the race."

The other member of the board, W. R. Wilson, while not giving any interviews or making speeches, withdrew his objections to "The Birth of a Nation," and this big feature was passed.

So the exhibitors and exchangemen of Ohio, while absolutely against the principle of censorship, are beginning to believe that the censors have adopted a more lenient policy and will treat the film business in a broader way than they have in the past.

Maxine Elliott Begins Work

Company Assembles at Goldwyn Fort Lee Studio Under Direction of Allan Dwan—Actress Gets Reception.

MAXINE ELLIOTT, famed throughout the world as a noted beauty, began her career before the motion picture camera on Monday, February 19, at the Goldwyn studios in Fort Lee, with Allan Dwan on the firing line as her director. Miss Elliott's first role calls for extremely big acting. The play in which she makes her first appearance, under the Goldwyn auspices, is the work of Roi Cooper Megrue, author of "Under Cover," "It Pays to Advertise," "Under Sentence," and other highly successful dramatic sensations.

Miss Elliott on her arrival at the Goldwyn studios found nearly all of the executives of the company waiting to welcome her. Flowers in profusion and telegrams arrived ahead of her; congratulatory letters and telegrams, such as a dramatic star receives on the opening night of a play on Broadway. Each of the other Goldwyn stars had sent good wishes and flowers. Mae Marsh, who was the first star to be announced by Goldwyn at its formation in December, was working in a studio on the same floor and she at once visited Miss Elliott and together they had a long talk about screen make-up.

Miss Elliott's is the second Goldwyn company to get under way.

Goldwyn has assembled a number of well-known players to support Miss Elliott. Allan Dwan, director of several of the most successful Douglas Fairbanks pictures for Triangle, brings a skilled technical staff with him for the making of Miss Elliott's picture. Rene Guissart is the cameraman for Dwan and Mlle. Georgette Merthier will aid in the costuming. Mr. Dwan, who combines the artistic and executive capacities as few men in the industry do, also may avail himself of the fine talents of Arthur Hopkins and such units of Mr. Hopkins' brilliant producing organization as may be required.

Photoplay League Sees "Vicar of Wakefield"

Pathe-Thanhouser Production First to Be Recommended—
Notable Guests at Mrs. Marcus M. Marks' Home.

THE Photoplay League, recently formed as a national organization for the encouragement of the higher forms of motion picture art, began actively on the evening of February 14 its work of recommending pictures which, in the opinion of the league, should receive the support of its members and the public.

The first photoplay which will reach the screen, bearing the hallmark of the league, is "The Vicar of Wakefield," produced by Pathe-Thanhouser, from Oliver Goldsmith's book. Edwin H. Blashfield, the president of the league, announced early on St. Valentine's Day the "Vicar of Wakefield" recommendation, and in the evening Mrs. Marcus M. Marks, a member of the advisory committee, gave a reception at her home, Ninety-fourth street and Fifth avenue, where the picture was shown.

The invited guests were Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Pelham Bolton, Mr. and Mrs. Isaac N. Seliman, Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Mr. and Mrs. Waldo G. Morse, Mrs. Philip Lydig, Charles Dana Gibson, Justice Edward J. Gavegan and Mrs. Gavegan, Professor Henry Fairfield Osborn and Mrs. Osborn, E. H. Sothorn, Miss Julia Marlowe (Mrs. Sothorn), Adolph Lewisohn, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Warde, Evert Jansen Wendell, Mrs. Simeon Ford, Miss Anne Morgan, Miss Helen Varick Boswell, Dr. Robert Erskine Ely, Miss Helen Duey, Mr. and Mrs. Cabot Ward, John Hays Hammond, Dr. and Mrs. Simon Baruch, Wm. Church Osborn, and Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland Dodge.

Frederick Warde, who has the chief part in the picture, told the other guests interesting stories of the "locations" and other unusual features of the play, which, when it goes forth to the public, will bear the legend: "This Picture Is Recommended by the Photoplay League."

Edwin H. Blashfield, the world-famous painter, who is at the head of the Photoplay League, in announcing the beginning of the league's general campaign, said in part:

"Such pictures alone will be selected from the releases of the leading manufacturers as reach the special standard of the league. The thousands of members will be notified of these and will approach the local exhibitors to insure the exhibition in their towns of all pictures under the league's auspices."

Director Frank Lascelles added:

"The league is not concerned with the so-called 'uplift,' either of exhibitors or the public. It hopes to make possible the production of good pictures in a profitable way, commercially as well as for entertainment and education."

Mr. Blashfield has almost completed a wonderful symbolic drawing for the league to be used in announcing its recommendations on the screen. This will be ready when "The Vicar of Wakefield" is released.

The photoplay is the result of months of artistic effort in the studios at New Rochelle, and is offered as the greatest character study ever presented on the screen. As Goldsmith's story was autobiographical, his action unfolded with unbroken smoothness, and this is capitalized in the picturization.

Mr. Warde is supported by the following notable cast, under the direction of Ernest Warde, the star's son: Carey Hastings, Mr. Boyd Marshall, Kathryn Adams, Gladys Leslie, William Parke, Jr., Tula Belle, Barbara Howard, Thomas A. Curran, Robert Vaughn, Grace De Carlton, Arthur Bauer and Morgan Jones.

Clergy Also View Film.

A delegation of the New York clergy of all denominations visited the Thanhouser studios at New Rochelle February 8, by special invitation of Edwin Thanhouser, president of the corporation, to view the recently completed picture of "The Vicar of Wakefield," featuring Frederick Warde, acting president of The Actors' Church Alliance, as the Vicar.

At the conclusion of the exhibition, Mrs. Thanhouser, Mr. Warde, Ernest Warde, the director; Mr. Sollinger, the cameraman, and others of the Thanhouser staff were presented to the clergymen, who all expressed their unqualified admiration of the beauty of the film, the splendid photography and its accurate visual presentation of Goldsmith's famous story.

The delegation met subsequently at the Pepperday Inn and formally passed an unanimous resolution expressing their appreciation of witnessing the first presentation of the picture, their hearty endorsement of the work and their appreciation of its perfection and beauty.

The following composed the delegation, which was under the guidance of Rev. Bentley: Dr. J. R. Harding, Diocese of New York; Venerable Archdeacon Chas. H. Webb, Long Island; Rev. St. Clair Hester, Church of the Messiah, Brooklyn; Dr. Jno. D. Kennedy, St. Marks, Brooklyn; Dr. Worth M. Tippey, Madison Avenue Episcopal Church, New York; Rev. Pelham St. George Bissell, Jersey City; Rev. Jno. M. Ericsson, Yonkers; Rev. S. Ed. Young, Bedford Avenue Presbyterian, Brooklyn; Rev. C. F. J. Wrigley, Grace Church, Brooklyn; Dr. J. B. Mies, distinguished archaeologist; Rev. T. Basil Young, Union Methodist, New York; Rev. John S. Haight, St. Andrews, New York; Rev. G. A. Carstenson, Riverdale, N. Y.; Rev. Walter M. Howlett; Rev. John W. Heady, St. Peters, Brooklyn; Rev. H. P. Haires, West Farms; Rev. Leighton Williams; Rev. Pomeroy Hill, Trinity Church, Brooklyn; Rev. E. P. S. Spencer House of Mercy, Inwood; Rev. Walter E. Bentley, Church of the Ascension, Brooklyn; William Trevor, prominent churchman; Louis Leaky, a poet.

QUICK ACTION HERE.

Bide Dudley in Evening World.

William (Bill) Wright, of the Kalem Company, has a farm somewhere up-State with real lens on it. The other day he sent Sam L. Rothapfel a box of genuine eggs, right off the hens—the kind Sam truthfully could have acknowledged by saying, "Yours of recent date received." When the recipient saw what was in the box he hurriedly mobilized his Rialto ushers, threw a cordon around the precious gift and had it escorted to his limousine under heavy guard. The auto was then driven to the Rothapfel home by a trusted man. Though the box was carried out in broad daylight, the manoeuvre was so skilfully planned and swiftly executed that the treasure was locked in the Rothapfel ice box next to the anthracite coal safe before the highwaymen that throng Broadway knew what was coming off.

H. T. COWLING JOINS BURTON HOLMES.

Herford T. Cowling, who for several years has been employed in making motion and still pictures for the Government, has resigned to accept a position with Mr. Burton Holmes, who will shortly make a six months' tour to make exclusive travel pictures for Paramount. After spending the month of February filming the Canadian winter sports, they will start on a seven months' trip to the Orient and the South Sea Islands. The trip will include Hawaii, the Philippines, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand and other interesting and out of the way places. They expect to secure motion pictures of the only existing cannibal tribes, but have not yet announced whether they will carry the banquet with them.

FRANK E. WOODS WRITES FOUR FEATURES.

Frank E. Woods, manager of production at the Triangle-Fine Arts studio in Los Angeles, is the author of four of the recent and forthcoming releases staged at the plant. Woods wrote "The Bad Boy," in which Robert Harron is being starred; "Betsy's Burglar," the second starring vehicle of Constance Talmadge, and "A Young Gentleman of the Old School," the itinerant drama upon which Robert Harron is now engaged. In addition, he is responsible for the social drama in which Seena Owen's return to the films will be signalized.

Despite his literary labors, Woods is said to be the first office man on the job at the Fine Arts studio and the last to leave at night.

ELMER CLIFTON, FINE ARTS DIRECTOR.

Elmer Clifton, for several years a Triangle-Fine Arts juvenile actor and leading man, has been promoted to the directorial staff. Clifton will enjoy the distinction of being one of the youngest directors in the motion picture business and will have supervision over the work of one of the most important stars, Dorothy Gish.

He will direct Miss Gish in a new picture that is being written by Bernard McConville. Frank Bennett will be Miss Gish's leading man.

Clifton will be remembered by motion picture fans in many roles, but his most recent one was that of the hunchback in "Nina, the Flower Girl."

Programs and Features

Dr. Shallenberger Says There Is a Place for Poth in the Field of Motion Pictures.

DR. W. E. SHALLENBERGER and the Arrow Film Corporation will shortly begin the production of a new feature film to be disposed of on territorial rights lines when completed. The scenario is founded on a popular story widely known, which has proved especially well adapted to translation to the screen. Thomas J. Carrigan, the supervising director of the Arrow company, has begun negotiations with two prominent players for the leading roles.

Dr. Shallenberger, speaking of his experience in the production of "The Deemster" and its reception on its first presentation at the Strand Theater, February 8, said: "I appreciate all the arguments put forward in favor of the program. The thousands of moving picture theaters throughout the country must have a source of supply which can be depended upon to meet constant needs at a price that will enable the exhibitor to make money.

"The success of the business depends upon exhibitors' success. I believe more attention should be given to the needs and the success of the exhibitor. The program plan, however, will always leave room for big special features, elaborately produced with casts of great prominence, just as there is always room on a vaudeville bill for big star numbers.

"The essentials of a successful special production are manifestly a powerful story adaptable to the screen, the name of an author sufficiently well known to be an actual asset, and a star. By star I mean a man or woman of reputation who possesses the ability to visualize on the screen the character as conceived by the author—fulfilling the demands of the eye as well as all dramatic requirements.

"The work of such a player is many times more satisfactory to both producer and exhibitor than that of some star of great reputation. As actors and actresses have become stars in a single night on the dramatic stage, so may a player on the screen become of acknowledged prominence even in one picture.

"A very small percentage of the dramatic talent of the world has reached the stage and an even smaller percentage of real picture talent has reached the screen. Producers, exhibitors and the public appreciate this, and I am confident that the trend of thought in casting in the near future will be more to consideration of real ability than to taking a name into first consideration.

"The special feature is just as important today in the industry as the program and will grow in interest and value to the exhibitor to the extent that it is made of importance and of special excellence by the producer. It will be appreciated by the exhibitor just as the big star feature is appreciated by the vaudeville manager. He picks his bill from regular acts, but he looks for his big draught to the really big feature headliner, for which he may probably pay as much as he does for all the other acts on his bill.

"Another point the special producer for territorial rights sale should always bear in mind in seeking a subject is its probable value as a repeater. I do not mean by this that one ought to figure on how many times a picture may have to be shown in a city or town to get the money—far from it. I mean, is it big enough to get the money out the first time and yet strong enough to stand return bookings?

"The best bet for the state rights man is a big story by a big author translated to the screen in a big production with big artists. This combination will attract really great public attention. Such a feature will give satisfaction to all and will bring home the money. Well known and widely read stories by authors of standing, which are especially well adapted to screen presentation, should be the object of the special feature producer. A widely known star is of secondary consideration, provided the character be faithfully visualized on the screen and the dramatic action be true and convincing."

ELECTION OF GENERAL FILM COMPANY OFFICERS.

At the meeting of the directors of the General Film Company at the offices of the company, February 12 and 13, the following officers were elected: Benjamin B. Hampton, president; George K. Spoor, vice-president; W. M. Gulick, secretary and treasurer.

The list of directors of the company elected at the recent stockholders' meeting is as follows: Benjamin B. Hampton, Frank I. Marion, George Kleine, G. A. Reeder, George K. Spoor, William N. Selig, Harold Bolster, Paul G. Melies and W. M. Gulick.

Film Building in Washington

Outlook for New Fireproof Structure to House Exchanges Is Good.

THAT there will be a motion picture film exchange building in Washington, D. C., before the first of June, is the prophecy now being made by the exchange managers of that city, following a talk which they had with W. J. Costello, at the dinner meeting held in the Flemish room of the National Press Club last Monday evening.

The meeting was very well attended, for practically every one of the large exchanges doing business in Washington was represented and considerable enthusiasm prevailed. The leases of several of the companies are expiring, the quarters of others are being found inadequate, and for others there is the prospect of early adoption of the proposed fire regulations, which would make their quarters untenable and create a confusion that would work havoc with their business.

Mr. Costello appeared before the film men following the conclusion of their dinner and stated that the plans for the building were fully completed, with the exception of a few minor details. The plans are being prepared by B. Stanley Simmons. The building will be on the large piece of property owned by Mr. Costello on Sixth street, between F and G streets, Northwest, near the building recently erected by Marcus Notes. The Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Company now occupies the first floor of the latter, and Pathe, Inc., will be housed on the second floor after March 1. This will bring practically all of the exchanges right in the neighborhood.

The Costello film exchange building will be 55 feet wide and 100 feet in depth. Each floor will house two exchanges. The building will be thoroughly fireproof in accordance with the proposed regulations. It will have a face brick front and will be quite attractive. Windows will be provided on all four sides and each floor will be well lighted. Each company will, of course, have an opportunity to express its desires with respect to the layout of its own exchanges, such as in the location of partitions, the arrangement of shelving, and other similar details which must be left to their individual tastes. Mr. Costello said that the building would be ready for occupancy the latter part of May. He is going to New York to take up the problem with the home offices of the exchanges.

At the request of Tom Moore, who has also been a factor in the exchange building plan, President Butner stated that the former was arranging to erect a building on Eighth street, as previously reported in the Moving Picture World, and that he had a tenant for the first two floors of the structure. The erection of a six or seven-story building would be contingent on the ability of Mr. Moore to get the promises of the film exchange managers that they will occupy part of the building at a rental of $1,500 per annum, for approximately 2,600 square feet of floor space. "Everything is in readiness with the exception of one or two details," said Mr. Butner. He conveyed Mr. Moore's regrets at not being able to attend the meeting in person, but told of his desire to put up the building. He also stated that Mr. Moore wanted a three-year lease from each occupant of the building.

COAST PRODUCERS' ASSOCIATION ELECTS OFFICERS.

The Motion Picture Producers' Association has started its second year with the same officers who have successfully piloted the organization during the past twelve months. They were all unanimously re-elected as follows: President, H. O. Davis, vice-president Universal Film Manufacturing Company; Thomas Ince, New York Motion Picture Company, first vice-president; D. W. Griffith, Fine Arts Film Company, second vice-president; David Horsley, Horsley Film Company, third vice-president; Frank A. Garbutt, Morosco Photoplay Company, treasurer, and W. J. Reynolds, secretary.

President Davis and his fellow officers are immeasurably pleased at the excellent work accomplished by the Motion Picture Producers' Association during the first year of its existence and are gratified particularly at the co-operation which has been extended to all of its members by the civic and industrial organization of California.

SPEARVILLE, KANSAS, TO HAVE NEW THEATER.

T. J. Stinson, an enthusiastic exhibitor in Spearville, Kansas, has begun the erection of a thoroughly modern and absolutely up-to-date theater on Main street in that city. The new theater will be 25 feet wide and 90 feet deep, with a seating capacity of 500. Nothing will be included in the make-up of the playhouse that is not the latest idea on playhouse construction.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of February 18 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"The Winning of Sally Temple" at the Strand.

THE principal photodramatic feature at the Strand theater the week of February 18 was "The Winning of Sally Temple," in which Fannie Ward played the principal role. The story is based on Rupert Sargent Holland's celebrated novel, "The Heart of Sally Temple." As the pretty actress of old Drury Lane theater, she is given unusual opportunities to display her talents. Jesse L. Lasky, the producer, has mounted the play elaborately and surrounded the star with an excellent cast, including Jack Dean, Walter Long, Horace B. Carpenter, Billy Elmer, Paul Weigel, H. Woodward, Harry J. Smith, Eugene Pallette, Florence Smythe, John McKinnen, and Volva Vale.

Max Linder, the famous French comedian, in an American made film comedy, entitled "Max Comes Across"; unusual pictures taken in Alaska, showing A Sea Lion Rookery and the capture of whales in the Pacific Ocean, and the Topical Review, were also shown on the screen. The soloists were Knud Dalgaard, Grace Hoffman and Auguste Bouilliez.

"Skinner's Dress Suit" at the Rialto.

The Essanay picture, "Skinner's Dress Suit," with Bryant Washburn in the leading role, headed the Rialto program. Based on Henry Irving Dodge's best seller of the same name, the picture is a wholesome, humorous story, without a trace of the problem play or the melodrama from first to last.

"The Rockbound Coasts of Oregon" was the scenic feature. The comedy, "Fatty of the Feature Fillums," and Mr. Rothapfel's "Literary Digest of the Screen" were also shown. Helen Jeffrey was the soloist.

"Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" at the Broadway.

The final week of the engagement of the Universal production, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," started February 18. This novel picture has made a record at the Broadway theater, the business having been uniformly large.

Bill at Eighty-first Street Theater.

At the Eighty-first Street theater four pictures were shown. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday Enid Bennett, in "Princess of the Dark," and a Triangle Comedy, "When Hearts Collide," were the picture features. Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday Frank Keenan, in "The Crab," and a Triangle Comedy, "The Telephone Belle," were shown on the screen.

"The Barrier" at the Broadway, February 25.

Conjectures as to the handling of the Rex Beach Pictures Company's big feature, "The Barrier," have been set at rest by the announcement that it will open an engagement at the Broadway theater, Sunday, February 25, following the run of "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea." "The Barrier" has long been heralded as one of the coming big sensations of the motion picture world and its reception at the private showing at the Broadway theater a month ago bore out this assertion. Seldom, if ever, have the reviewers been as unanimous in enthusiastic praise of a screen production. It is understood that this feature will be shown in Philadelphia, Detroit, Pittsburgh and Chicago immediately following the opening in New York.

"The Barrier" is an adaptation of Rex Beach's great novel of life in California and Alaska and its picture popularity is assured by its tremendous success as a "best seller" and later as a big Broadway theatrical hit.

H. B. WARNER ENGAGED FOR "GOD'S MAN."

President W. L. Sherrill of the Frohman Amusement Corporation announces that he has engaged H. B. Warner, popular as a dramatic and motion picture player, to create the role of Arnold L'Hommiedieu, the lead in "God's Man."

Supporting H. B. Warner in "God's Man" is an exceptionally well chosen and balanced cast: Jack Sherrill, Edward Earle, the former Metro and Edison star; Yolande Londowska, premiere Russian dance exponent; Betty Bellairs, Walter Heirs, Barbara Castleton, Jean Stewart, Lester Wallick and others.

Director George Irving, who was responsible for the finesse of production of "The Witching Hour," is again at the helm of direction and with his company is at present "camping out" at the east end of Long Island, where the story of "God's Man" is laid. The production will in all probability be nine reels in length.

Meeting of Electrical Committee

Board of Society of M. P. Engineers Affiliates With Fire Protective Association.

THE electrical committee, or rather the committee on electrical apparatus, of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers held its first meeting at 10 a. m. in Parlor D, McAlpin Hotel, New York City, Wednesday, February 7th, H. M. Wibble, chairman, presiding.

W. C. Kunzman, H. A. Kampe, Max Mayer, composing the membership of the committee, were present, as well as were also the Board of Governors, who held a brief session at noon, the main business of which consisted in affiliating with the National Fire Protection Association, 57 Milk street, Boston, and the empowering of committee chairmen to enlarge their committees by appointment.

The electrical committee got down to business and mapped out a plan of campaign designed to start the ball rolling in the direction of standardization of electrical apparatus used in the motion picture industry. It is not expected, however, that there will be any immediate tangible results in way of standardization. First, there must be a vast amount of research, comparison and consultation before the body can determine just what any given standard ought to be.

The society is, however, beginning to move, and while the movement will necessarily be slow, it is nevertheless expected to be sure, and accomplish results which will be permanent and to the lasting benefit of all branches of the industry.

The next meeting of the main body will be held in the early spring at Atlantic City, at which time it is confidently expected that the present membership will be fully doubled. Several applications for membership were acted upon favorably by the Board of Governors at the present meeting.

"Fortune Photoplays" Under Way

Many Screen Favorites in the New Companies—Directors Are Also Well Known.

FOUR companies will be kept going continuously at the Balboa studios in Long Beach, California, preparing the "Fortune Photoplays" series for the General Film Company. The casts of the various dramas, which are to be four reels in length, based on stories in the Street & Smith chain of magazines, will comprise some of the leading screen players of the younger generation.

Among these are Winnifred Greenwood, who has been doing leads for American; Margaret Landis, the youthful Southern beauty, who made a success from her first appearance at the age of nineteen; Volva Vale, Ethel Ritchie, Gloria Payton, Kathleen Kirkham and Mignon LeBrun. Male leads will be done by Arthur Shirley, Clifford Gray, Melvin Mayo, Cullen Landis, the nineteen-year-old brother of Margaret Landis; R. Henry Grey, Lewis King and James Warner.

Bertram Bracken, who has been in the East directing Theda Bara and other stars for the Fox Film Company, will direct one of the companies. Another will be handled by Edgar Jones, formerly of the Metro forces. The other two companies will be under the direction of Harry Harvey and William Bertram.

ORRIN DENNY, INVENTOR.

Orrin Denny, laboratory superintendent of the Signal-Mutual studios, has recently invented two laboratory devices which he has had patented. One of the contrivances does away with the wooden pegs heretofore used to hold the developing racks in the tanks, the other is a faster and more convenient method of fastening the film to the drying drums. Both devices are very simple, but have proved of inestimable value in the Signal plant, where they have been used for several weeks. Mr. Denny has received offers from several people to establish agencies for the handling of these efficiency aids.

M. RADIN WITH SHERRY EXCHANGE.

William L. Sherry last week appointed Mathias Radin, former manager of the Strand theater, Hempstead, Long Island, as additional salesman in New York City for the William L. Sherry Feature Film Company, distributors of Paramount pictures in this district. Mr. Radin began work with the Sherry offices the week of February 5 and during the first week added a considerable volume of business to the large amount that concern already enjoys. Mr. Radin is a very well known exhibitor and is very popular among house managers of New York City.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE

The "Star" Craze in Moving Pictures.

WHAT started the inordinate demand for high-salaried stars in moving pictures? Was it initially due to the producer or the exhibitor? If not, then to whom? A little reflection will reveal that the members of the great moving picture theater-going public are responsible. They liked this or that actor or actress, and they demanded that their local theater should furnish the pictures in which they appeared. And this and that favored actor or actress was "played up" by their producing companies for all they were worth and a great deal more.

Now, from what seemed such a simple beginning, there has developed a condition that imperils the business, unless the extra cost of production is saddled on patrons of moving picture theaters, who are paying little more, if anything, to see the highly expensive productions which have been made at their bidding.

And here the exhibitor must share his part of the blame, if we can call it blame. He has failed on the firing line of the business to demand and get a higher scale of prices for his shows. Acting in combination, the exhibitors of the country could have increased their admissions, and each for himself could have convinced his patrons that the increased price was due to the vastly increased cost of the product handled by them.

But the producers cannot escape censure in the matter. It was not enough that hitherto unheard of salaries were paid to players, but reckless competition between producers made the figures soar still higher. As a consequence the business is top-heavy, and unless ruinous competition is soon succeeded by a hearty co-operation among producers for the good of all, there will be a topple.

But that would not put an end to the moving picture. Oh, no!

A great reformation in production, distribution and exhibition would follow, and the moving picture would go steadily forward to its goal.

The Reel Fellows Studio Ball a Big Success.

The Chicago Reel Fellows ball in studio "C," at the Essanay plant, Saturday evening, February 10, was a big success. About 2,500 people attended, the event being open to the public as well as to invited guests. It is given out that $1,500 was taken in, and the amount will be used for furnishing the club's new headquarters at 207 South Wabash avenue.

A reception committee, including Misses Mary Charleson, Nell Craig and Marguerite Clayton, and Messrs. Henry Walthall, Max Linder and Edwin Arnold, of the Essanay companies, greeted the guests as they arrived, and Mr. Linder and Mr. Walthall afterward made brief addresses from a platform constructed for the purpose. As everyone who is acquainted with Mr. Linder knows, he very rarely trusts the English language sufficiently to converse in it, and much less when making a speech. He, therefore, spoke in French, and his delighted audience seemed to enjoy it all the more.

In studio "B" Bryant Washburn enacted a scene from "Aladdin Up to Date," a forthcoming Essanay subject that will be released through K-E-S-E, and the throng of spectators was highly interested and instructed.

"Rob Reel," of the Chicago American, got out a Reel Fellows extra in honor of the occasion, and the copies were eagerly seized by the guests as a souvenir.

It was 3 o'clock a. m. before the gathering broke up, to the strains of "Auld Lang Syne."

Wm. Sievers Purchases Rights to Missouri for "The Garden of Allah"—Tells of Big Success of "The Crisis."

Wm. Sievers, secretary of the New Grand Central Amusement Company, St. Louis, Mo., was in the city Wednesday and Thursday, February 7 and 8, on business, and made a pleasant call at the Chicago office during his stay.

Mr. Sievers stated that "The Crisis," which had just closed a five-weeks' run at the New Grand Central, was the most successful photoplay ever exhibited in St. Louis, and announced that it will open a run (after its St. Louis success) at the New Center theater, Kansas City, Mo., on February 18. This theater is owned by Samuel Zukor and is pronounced the most up-to-date house in Kansas City. Mr. Sievers will have charge of the run in Kansas City and will take along with him the leader of the orchestra in St. Louis, and all the special settings used at the New Grand Central will be used at the New Center.

Captain Stanley Lewis, a retired United States Army officer, has been engaged by Mr. Sievers to deliver lectures in public schools of the higher grades throughout Missouri, in which he confines his remarks chiefly to President Lincoln.

Captain Lewis also makes sepia drawings showing scenes of the period in which the story is laid, and these appear on the windows of prominent banks, business houses, etc. A well-laid-out advertising plan in the daily press has also been completed by Mr. Sievers for the Kansas City engagement.

After the Kansas City run the road company will proceed to St. Joseph, Mo., and thence to Joplin, Mo. Admissions which obtained at the New Grand Central for "The Crisis" were 25, 50 and 75 cents, and these prices will be charged wherever the super feature is shown.

Mr. Sievers has purchased "The Garden of Allah" from the Selig Polyscope Company for the state of Missouri, after several private viewings in the Selig projection room. In his judgment this great picture will repeat the success of "The Crisis."

"Beware of Strangers" Makes Successful Chicago Opening.

"Beware of Strangers," Selig's big eight-reel production, which exposes the modus operandi of the blackmailing syndicate recently broken up by the United States Department of Justice, opened its run at the La Salle theater, Saturday, February 10, under the management of Jones, Linick & Schaefer. Since then the house has been taxed to capacity at every presentation, while long lines wait outside for a chance to enter.

The methods of blackmailers under the wing of the Mann act, wire-tappers and fake clairvoyants are seen to the life on the screen, the characters being excellently sustained by a strong cast of Selig players.

These include Thomas Santschi, who appears as John Montor, the head of the syndicate; Miss Bessie Eyton as Madeleine, Montor's daughter; Jack Richardson as the fake clairvoyant; Ed. Coxen as Harry Lyttle, the defaulting bank president; Miss Fritzi Brunette as Bertha Gibson, secretary to Lyttle and also his fiancée; Vivian Rich as the Lorelei; Al. W. Filson as the confiding millionaire business man; Frank Clark as the fake doctor, one of the cleverest of the blackmailing gang, and Miss Eugenie Besserer as Mary De Lacy, one of the decoys of the dangerous organization.

The Chicago dailies, without exception, have commended the production highly, not only for the accuracy with which the pictures reveal the operations of the gang, but also for the fine acting and settings.

The story was written by Gilson Willets and the direction was in the hands of Colin Campbell.

The admission at the La Salle is 25 cents, and only adults are permitted. Jones, Linick & Schaefer own the rights to Illinois and Indiana for the picture.

Chicago Film Brevities.

M. A. Choynski, of Chicago, holds that his rights and the rights of the other nine exhibitors on the board of directors of the National Motion Picture Association have been infringed by Lee Ochs, president of the national organization of exhibitors. He charges Mr. Ochs with having arrogantly taken upon himself the duties of the board of directors before mentioned, in his controversy with the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., and holds that the said controversy should be in the hands of the ten exhibiting directors and not in the hands of Mr. Ochs. Mr. Choynski, as one of the ten exhibitors on the board mentioned, resents being deprived of his rights in the matter.

Following are the exhibiting directors in the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, who were elected at the last national convention in Chicago: Frank J. Reimbusch, Thomas Furniss, M. A. Choynski, Fred J. Herrington, A. P. Tugwell, L. L. Levine, Samuel H. Trigger, Louis Blumenthal, Peter J. Jeup and Charles W. Phillips.

At the annual meeting of the board of directors of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co., held in this city Thursday, Feb. 8, the following officers were elected: Watterson R. Rothacker, president; N. J. Baumer, vice-president; H. J. Aldous, secretary and treasurer; E. H. Philippi, assistant treasurer, and J. G. Hahn, assistant secretary.

A dividend of 10 per cent. on the common stock and of 7 per cent. on the preferred stock was declared at the meeting, and authorized to be paid.

"Fatty" Arbuckle, it is announced, will leave Los Angeles Saturday, Feb. 17, for New York City, where he will begin work early in March on a series of two-reel comedies for Paramount. He will make a brief stop-over in Chicago on his journey east.

The third annual banquet and ball of The Showmen's League of America will be held in the Gold Room of the Congress Hotel, this city, on Feb. 20. All arrangements have already been completed, and it is expected that the event will be one of the most successful of its kind yet held.

Mrs. S. M. Bowden, wife of the lessee of the Glen theater, Glen Ellyn, Ill., called at this office last week and renewed their annual subscription for the Moving Picture World. Glen Ellyn has a population of 1,700 people, but it has been found that only paying presentations can be given for three days of the week—on Tuesday, Friday and Saturday evenings. The house seats about 300 people, and Paramount programs are offered on Tuesdays and Saturdays, and General Film Company's on Fridays. The admission is ten cents for adults and five cents for children.

Jack Harlow, sales manager of the Zenith Motion Picture Co., Chicago, left for New Orleans, Feb. 14, with a company of players to make the exteriors of three commercial photoplays, which include the five-reel feature, "Maternity." President Brinner, of the company, and Mrs. Brinner accompanied the party.

A presentation of "The Crisis" was given at the Michigan State Penitentiary, at Jackson, Sunday, Feb. 4, through the kindness of John H. Kunsy, of Detroit, who owns the state rights of Michigan for the big Selig picture. Mr. Kunsy writes that the prisoners enjoyed the occasion extremely, their applause and tears being offered in tribute to the great story and its action.

Wm. N. Selig announces the first release through the General Film Co. on March 3 of a series of one-reel comedies that will be released weekly. Some of these are entitled "No Place Like Home," "Over the Garden Wall," "Everybody Was Satisfied," "Bill and the Bearded Lady," etc.

Word has been received from Selig's Los Angeles studio that "Little Lost Sister," in which Miss Bessie Eyton, Miss Vivian Reed, George Fawcett and an able cast appear, is nearing completion. The production is under the direction of Al Green and will be released March 12 through K-E-S-E.

"The Girl Philippa" has done so well at the Ziegfeld that it will be retained for the third week. Alfred Hamburger announces that the same star will be seen at the Ziegfeld in "The Glory of Yolanda" for the week beginning March 3.

Dick Travers, the well-known Essanay star, has again joined the ranks of the benedicts. He and Miss May Franklin, who will be remembered as one of the beauties of "The Time, the Place and the Girl," which made a great hit several years ago, were united in the bonds of holy matrimony on Saturday, Feb. 10. It is said that the romance began years ago in Toronto, in Mr. Travers' school days. The happy pair will spend their honeymoon in New York City. Many years of happiness is the wish of the writer.

studios, stopped over in Chicago for several hours Sunday, Feb. 11. A private luncheon was given in her honor, in the Rose Room of the Hotel Sherman, at which the representatives of the leading Chicago dailies and others were guests. Miss Pickford gave out quietly to Miss Mae Tinee, of the Tribune, that after sixteen months more before the camera she will retire. Miss Pickford was accompanied by her mother, her sister Lottie, and Lottie's baby, Mary. Max Goldstine, manager of the Artcraft Chicago office, was host at the luncheon.

U. S. Army Films, in ten reels, will be shown during the week of Monday, Feb. 19, at the following theaters in Chicago: Covent Garden, Vitagraph, Paramount, West End, South Shore, Michigan, Biograph and Knickerbocker. These films were prepared in Chicago some time ago under Captain F. R. Kenney, of the United States Army, for the special purpose of answering the question, "How can I best serve my country?" They show how soldiers train, what is required for the protection of this country in case of war, and what every American might expect should the call for universal training be made. A United States soldier will be in attendance at each of the theaters mentioned to answer all inquiries and to enroll recruits.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer have contracted with Essanay for a pre-showing of the Max Linder comedies, one week prior to the regular release date, at their Rialto and McVicker's theaters. This means that patrons of these two houses will view the comedies one week before they will be seen in any other Chicago theater.

Miss Edna Goodrich passed through the city Monday, Feb. 12, on her way to New York, where she will begin work on a series of features for Mutual in about two weeks. The titles of these photoplays will be announced in the near future. Miss Goodrich spent several years of her girlhood in this city, where she attended the Lake View High School.

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Film Service, was the guest of Aaron J. Jones and Adolph Linick Tuesday and Wednesday, Feb. 6 and 7, and afterward proceeded to Los Angeles.

A dispatch from Duluth, Minn., on Feb. 14, gives the news that the St. Louis County Humane Society of that city adopted a resolution on the date mentioned asking the State Legislature to pass a law prohibiting children under fourteen from attending a moving picture theater, unless accompanied by their parents.

A 99-year lease has been closed with the Marshall Field estate for the site at the southwest corner of State and Lake streets, this city, by Martin Beck, the estate of Charles Kohl, Herman Fehr and others owning and identified with the Palace and Majestic theaters. On this site, which is valued at $2,250,000, a great vaudeville theater seating 3,000 people will be erected. The foundations for the building will be laid some time this year. The structure in which the theater will be located, which will also include stores and offices, will cost $1,250,000. The building will have a frontage of 180 feet on State and 160 feet on Lake street.

Peter Schaefer, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, left for the Bermudas last week by way of Palm Beach, Fla. He will stop over at the latter resort for a time and will then proceed to the islands. He will return about April 15.

Samuel H. Trigger, a member of the national executive committee of the M. P. E. L. of A., has authorized Louis H. Frank to sue that committee in his name, in connection with Mr. Frank's removal as manager of the National Exposition at a recent meeting in Chicago, on the ground that he, Mr. Trigger, had not received notice of said meeting at which such action was taken.

The meeting of the sub-committee of aldermen, at which the increase of licenses on moving picture theaters will be discussed, has again been postponed from Tuesday, Feb. 13, until some future date.

JOHNSTON SUES THE REVIEW.

William A. Johnston, editor of the Motion Picture News, has instituted an action against the Exhibitors' Review alleging libel and claiming damages to the amount of $50,000.

Bernstein Will Soon Start Production

Beautiful New Studio Almost Completed—Betty Brice to Be Starred in Big Feature Play.

A REPRESENTATIVE of the Moving Picture World recently paid a visit to the new home of the Bernstein Film Productions at Boyle and Stephenson avenues on perhaps the most picturesque spot in Los Angeles. The studio site is on the grounds of the old Perry residence, a magnificent mansion surrounded by a natural park covering eight acres. The natural features of the tract are wonderfully beautiful, the house with its columns and towers, being situated on an eminence from which the land drops gradually into dells and glades. The old mansion has been remodeled as a residence for Mr. Bernstein. On a large open space is the new studio being erected. It is almost completed and has a stage, one of the largest in Los Angeles. A long row of dressing rooms has been built two stories in height. Production will be started probably next week. The first film to be produced is a series of five-reel pictures, each complete in itself, to be called "The Seven Cardinal Virtues" and beginning with a story by Henry Christeen Warnack entitled "The Single Standard." Mr. Warnack has written three stories for this serial. Rosalie Ashton and Beatrice Morris, three, and Ray Lewis, the Canadian poetess, one of the five-reel scenarios.

Betty Brice will be the featured star. Miss Brice is from the Lubin company. She is a Washington girl who stepped into the position of leading woman with the Belasco company in Washington at the age of 15 years, playing all the old standard bills opposite Edwin Arden. From Washington she went to Baltimore, where she played a season with the Poli stock company, appearing the following season with the Orpheum in Philadelphia. Then followed engagement with the Keith circuit as leading woman for their Union Hill stock. There, at the old Hudson theater, Miss Brice became exceedingly popular and appeared with great success in "Camille," "The Divorce Question," "The Traffic," "Sapho," "Jerry" and other plays.

Miss Brice's director for Bernstein films will be Jack Pratt, who directed her in Lubin productions. The supporting cast has not as yet been selected, but Mr. Bernstein has signed up several well known players, announcement of which will be made very shortly.

In an interview with a representative of this paper Mr. Bernstein expressed his earnest intention of producing nothing but pictures for the clean minded. Said Mr. Bernstein: "You might ask if this will be a success financially. Of course it will. Is it only licentiousness, crime and morbidity that can be made interesting? Don't you realize that filth, moral and physical, will eventually sicken the ones that delve into it? It is the same with pictures. The seekers after morbidity and so-called questionable productions, as well as sex problem pictures, cannot themselves support the theaters, and the exhibitor is beginning to realize that fact. By exploiting this kind of production he is slowly but surely driving away the better class of people who have taken to the motion picture theater as the logical place to spend an evening with the family. I contend that clean motion pictures can be made with a story so interesting, the dramatic value so great, the settings so beautiful and the productions so near perfect that besides attracting the clean mind it will also attract those who seek the lurid or sensational, and in time make them staunch supporters of the pictures that need not bring a flush of shame to the cheek."

Continued Mr. Bernstein: "Ever since I left the Boys' Institute as its superintendent I prayed for the opportunity to make pictures that I need not be ashamed of, and which parents would not fear to have their children see, and, at the same time, make them so good that the people witnessing them would demand more of the same kind. My prayers have been answered and I am ready to launch my project proving that such pictures can be made a greater financial success than those pictures which depend upon police and newspaper condemnation for their demand. It can be done, and in my small way I will prove it, with the aid of the exhibitor and the public."

A Visit to the Monogram Studios

Shorty Hamilton Busy on His New Series—Directed by Bob Gray.

This week we made a trip to the Monogram studios to see our friend, Shorty Hamilton. Shorty is the star in the series, "The Adventures of Shorty Hamilton," now being produced by the Monogram Film Company for the Mutual program. Shorty is well remembered for his work with Keystone, Ince and other companies. He was discovered by William H. Clifford, who is now writing the stories for the popular cowboy star.

When Clifford, several years ago, was writing stories for Thomas H. Ince, then producing pictures at Inceville, he noticed a short, happy-faced cow puncher in the ranks of the employees at the film camp. Clifford asked permission of Mr. Ince to feature the sturdy little chap and Shorty was promoted from a $25 a month cowboy to a regular photoplayer. When Clifford went with the Famous Players Shorty joined the Keystone Film Company, and there appeared in many slap-stick comedies.

With the formation of the Monogram Film Company, Shorty was made a star of a company of his own.

Bob Gray, recently with the Lasky Company, has been engaged as his director. Gray has now finished three pictures, "Shorty Breaks the Yellow Ring," "In the Tiger's Den" and "Shorty Goes to College."

The first episode of this series was released by the Mutual, January 15, and the pictures are being produced and exhibited at the rate of one two-reeler each week.

The Monogram studios are located on Boyle Heights. This location, however, is only temporary, as the Monogram Film Company has made arrangements to move to more spacious quarters in Hollywood within a very short time.

Visiting the Balboa Studios

Norman Manning Has Introduced Efficiency System at Horkheimer Brothers' Plant.

WE PAID a visit this week to the studios of the Balboa Amusement and Producing Company, at Long Beach, California. Balboa has now one of the most attractive and elaborate studios on the Pacific Coast. We had the pleasure of a chat with H. M. Horkheimer, the general president, and were conducted through the plant by Norman Manning, business manager and efficiency expert. Mr. Manning has so arranged everything around the plant that there is not a prop nor an article, however unimportant, that he cannot lay his hands on within a fraction of a second. It isn't a matter of card indexing and filing systems, but the man actually has all these things at his finger tips, and can tell any employee of the big plant where to find anything from a spool of thread to a grand piano. Almost everything in the studios is on rollers and Mr. Manning has devised a thousand and one time-saving schemes for handling scenery and props and taking care of same. Everything is kept in tip-top condition. In the glassware department there is enough glass to fit out a five-and-ten-cent store. Not a speck of dust anywhere, and a man was polishing glasses like a first-class bartender. Mr. Manning's pet department evidently is the automobile garage. The company owns twenty cars and sometimes hires as many more.

The Balboa Company is now working on a new Pathe serial, "The Twisted Thread," and a most elaborate set has been built on the new stage. Frank H. Crane will direct the serial, assisted by Otto Hoffman and Thomas Swem, technical director. Kathleen Clifford will be the featured star, assisted by Gordon Sackville, leading man; Bruce Smith, heavy lead; Julian Dillon, juvenile lead; Corene Grant, heavy leading woman. Additions will be made as the production proceeds and several of Balboa's famous Beauty Squad will be given a chance to make good.

The story was written by President Horkheimer, and Chief Scenario Editor Will M. Ritchey will complete its adaptation for the screen.

Universal City Doings.

Director Lynn C. Reynolds has completed the picturization at Universal City of the interior scenes for his current feature production depicting life in the Klondike during the period of 1898. The exterior scenes for this Alaskan photoplay were photographed in the high Sierras near Truckee, California, where atmosphere as perfect as that of the far north was obtained. There the company had the dog teams, the sledges, the deep snows and ice and the members were costumed in the skin clothing the prospector.

During the company's absence General Manager H. O. Davis and O. L. Sellers, manager of productions, erected on one of the big stages at Universal City a typical dancehall, with its small stage, bar, gambling tables and the space set aside for the dancers, so that upon the return of Reynolds with his featured players—Myrtle Gonzales, Gretchen Lederer, George Hernandez and Jean Hersholt—the set was ready for the director's use.

In the filming of these scenes Reynolds insisted that every detail be true to life in the frozen north and he had the assistance of a well-known character of the north, known as "Alaska Jack." The actors and actresses used were selected as types particularly fitted to the atmosphere of the Yukon dancehall. Even the stoves were made out of iron gasoline tanks, such as were utilized in the early days near the Arctic Circle.

The set was so large that in order to get it entirely into the lens of the camera it was necessary for Cameraman Clyde Cook to place his instrument on one of the adjoining stages. Here were shown the prospectors gambling, leaning against the bar and dancing with the girls. The dances were the two-step and the waltz of that period, none of the modern dances being permitted by the director.

New Ince Leading Man.

A new leading man, a new character man and a new character woman were engaged this week by Thomas H. Ince to appear in support of Enid Bennett in her new Triangle-Kay Bee play. They are Roy Fernandez, Andrew Arbuckle and Cora Drew, and each has appeared to advantage in a number of screen productions. Fernandez is appearing opposite Miss Bennett, while Arbuckle and Mrs. Drew are portraying character roles.

Victor L. Schertzinger to Direct in Films.

Victor L. Schertzinger, the Ince composer, has been appointed director at Culver City. Not as musical director, but real sure enough film director. Mr. Schertzinger has been entrusted with the responsibility of directing an elaborate Triangle-Kay Bee play, in which Charles Ray will appear as the star.

Victor Schertzinger Reads His Script to Charles Ray.

Schertzinger joined the Inceville forces in June, 1915, to write the musical accompaniments for Triangle-Kay Bee plays. Last spring he visited the East with Ince for the purpose of directing the orchestra at the important showings of "Civilization."

Upon his return to the studios in the fall, he abandoned the work of composing for the equally absorbing task of studying direction. He acted as aide to several of the Ince directors, analyzing the methods of each, and frequently offering valuable suggestions. This week Ince placed him in absolute charge of the Ray vehicle.

The Ray subject is a serio-comic tale of the baseball diamond, in which the popular Ince star plays the role of a country youth. It was written by C. Gardner Sullivan.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

A number of notables arrived on the Coast this week. Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, is here. Messrs. Kessel and Baumann, executives of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, and H. E. Aitken, president of the Triangle Film Corporation, have arrived in the city. John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Corporation, and S. S. Hutchinson, of the American Company, are also in Los Angeles. Carl Laemmle is on the Coast, William Fox is expected to arrive next week, and so is Colonel William N. Selig.

Director Rollin S. Sturgeon, Gail Kane and a company of American players were in Los Angeles this week to film some scenes for the current American production, "Whose Wife?" William Russell and his director, Ed. Sloman, were also in Los Angeles filming exterior scenes for the forthcoming American-Mutual feature production, "High Play." One of the scenes staged by Director Sloman shows several hundred angry depositors storming the doors of a bank which has just been closed by a state official. Two hundred and fifty extras were employed and ten policemen from the Los Angeles police force assisted in handling the crowd.

The Signal Film Corporation has completed, this week, the second episode of the latest Helen Holmes serial, "The Railroad Raiders." The story is entitled "A Double Steal." Almost the entire chapter consisted of "night stuff" and the company worked four nights without intermission. In one night's work with fifty people Director McGowan shot fifty-four scenes in and around a railroad train, by the use of artificial lights. This is the biggest night's work on railroad scenes that has ever been done at the Signal plant. The players were all tired out, as many of them had to work in the day time, so Director McGowan gave his company two days' vacation to make up for the lost sleep. President John R. Freuler visited the Signal plant this week, and had a long conference with Director General J. P. McGowan and Helen Holmes.

Calling at the Selig studios we found everybody out on location, but were informed by Geraldine Crossman, the young lady who takes care of the publicity for the Selig Polyscope Company on the Coast, that Colonel Selig was shortly expected, and would probably be in the city next week. George Fawcett arrived last week from Chicago, and will appear in Selig productions at the Los Angeles studios. Mr. Fawcett will be remembered as the lovable old judge, Silas Whipple, in Selig's production of "The Crisis." Bessie Eytan has been working day and night. Upon Director Al Green's return from Chicago recently he at once requested her services for the leading role in the production that he now has under way. At the time Miss Eytan had not completed her work in Director Campbell's feature and, in order not to hold up either production, she has been switched from one director to another.

At the L-Ko studios they are working overtime these days. Julius Stern, the president, has arrived from New York and made things hum around the lot. We stopped in the other day and had a chat with our old friends, Abe and Julius. They were working on a comedy picture with the assistance of a frisky mule that promised to make things interesting for the cameraman. That mule had an awful wallop and kicked a dummy clean through a brick wall. One of the bricks almost hit Julius Singer, who was trying to hide himself behind the writer. Both of us then speedily departed to the comparative safety of the cutting room, where we found Director Jack Blystone and L-Ko's funny woman, clever Alice Howell. We also had the pleasure of meeting Lucile Hudson, who was playing a cute little Eva in a burlesque of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" with a villainous looking cast of Simon Legree and bloodhounds.

Harold Bell Wright, author of "The Eyes of the World," has not yet seen the production of his book at Clune's auditorium. At last accounts he was still in a hospital in Tucson, Ariz., recovering from a stubborn illness. Mr. Wright's condition is not alarming, and it is stated that he is remaining under his physician's advice in the hospital in order to obtain a complete rest from business and literary matters, which might tempt him into activity if he left before the restoration of his strength. "The Eyes of the World" will finish this week at the Clune's auditorium, and the stage will be cleared for the grand opera season. The production has had a most successful run at the big playhouse.

We have received an invitation to attend a good fellowship dinner tendered the Motion Picture Directors' Association by the Static Club of America, at the Angelus Hotel, on Thursday evening, February 15. Invitations are sent out by Al Cawood, the genial secretary of the Static Club. Thanks very kindly, Friend Cawood.

Establishment of a moving picture studio zone in Hollywood may be recommended by the City Council.

The residents of East Hollywood and of the Sunset Boulevard and Western avenue districts have petitioned the council to forbid the moving picture people from operating in the residential districts to the deterioration of property values, and the peace and attractiveness of the district.

The council conferred with these citizens, and also with the representatives of the film companies with the view to recommending a location for the proposed picture district.

The Bell & Howell Company, manufacturers of cameras and cinematic apparatus, have established a branch office in Los Angeles, located at 6522 Hollywood boulevard. William Dunphy, formerly of the Chicago office, has been appointed local representative. Donald J. Bell, president of the company, has been out on the Coast for several weeks.

Kalem's new interior studio building at Glendale is rapidly nearing completion. The walls are going up this week. The outdoor space is being almost doubled and the construction of sixteen new dressing rooms is under way. It is expected that the railroad and comedy companies now operating at Hollywood will be transferred next week. Al Santell, the new director of the Ham Comedy Company, is taking advantage of Kalem's increased acreage at Glendale and new general management to produce a ludicrous arena scene, and also to work his principals in the Mexican and Western streets at the Glendale studios.

Scott Sydney, formerly of Morosco and Triangle, has started production on the new Kalem railroad series, "The Daughter of Daring," in which Helen Gibson is the featured player. Director James Horne has started production on the fifth episode of the "American Girl" series, entitled "The Golden Eagle Trail." Marin Sais, the star, makes a daring escape from a band of outlaws by crossing a canyon on her lariat.

Howard Mitchell, directing the "Stingaree" series, featuring True Boardman, produced some novel night scenes in the latest episode. Wiring was extended from Kalem's Glendale studio to a picturesque spot in the hills, where the bushranger's camp was located.

Phil Lang and R. S. Figarola, of the Kalem Glendale company, were the victims of an automobile smashup on Saturday. They were riding to the studio in a jitney which collided with a roadster on Verdugo road, the jitney being almost entirely wrecked. Figarola suffered a broken rib and Lang escaped with bruised legs.

Al E. Christie finished this week a one-reel comedy, "Suspended Sentence," in which Betty Compson shows her ability as an equestrienne as well as some natty riding togs. In the cast are Neal Burns, Ethel Lynne, Gladys Tennyson and Harry Rattenberry.

Robert Thornby, director, will shortly arrive at the Lasky studio. His first picture will probably be one in which Sessue Hayakawa will star.

In order to facilitate the building of the big sets at the Lasky studio, a portable carpenter shop has been constructed which can be wheeled around the lot. This shop contains electric buzz saws and other wood-working machinery. This will save much time in the moving of raw lumber to the carpenter shops about the grounds.

Enid Bennett, the new Ince star, commenced work this week on her third Triangle-Kay Bee picture. The subject is a comedy-drama by C. Gardner Sullivan, and will offer Miss Bennett in a role that is totally unlike her two previous characterizations, that of an heiress to millions. Under the direction of Reginald Barker, the early scenes of the story are now being made in a setting which represents the interior of a ballroom, and Miss Bennett is going about, wearing one of several beautiful gowns with which she is "dressing" the part. Those appearing in support of Miss Bennett are Roy Fernandez, Jack Gilbert, Gertrude Claire, Andrew Arbuckle, Cora Drew, Walt Whitman and Aggie Herring.

Three new players were added to the Ince-Triangle forces this week to appear in support of William Desmond in his current Triangle-Kay Bee play, adapted by Lambert Hillyer from W. Carey Wonderly's popular story, "One Week." They are Anna Luther, Maude George and Marie Mills, a character woman. All three are now at work in support of Desmond, under the direction of Walter Edwards.

William S. Hart concluded this week the production of the Triangle-Kay Bee mining story by Lambert Hillyer, in which Thomas H. Ince will present him as star, and is already at work on the filming of his next vehicle. This is another throbbing tale of the West by the same author in which Hart, instead of playing his customary "bad-man" role, has the part of a rancher who figures in an unusual "eternal triangle." Margery Wilson again is cast opposite Hart in the principal feminine role.

At the Fox studios new productions were started this week by Richard Stanton and Otis Turner. Director Stanton is making a new photoplay in which Gladys Brockwell takes the lead, and Director Turner is to produce a picture featuring George Walsh.

Doris Pawn, who gained fame and popularity by playing opposite George Walsh in "Blue Blood and Red," has returned to the William Fox fold and will once more be Mr. Walsh's leading lady. It has been almost a year since Miss Pawn was a member of the Fox organization.

Others in the cast of the new Walsh picture will be Charles Clary, Willard Louis, Herschel Mayall and Rosita Marstini.

Frank Lloyd has completed "A Tale of Two Cities," a big production in which William Farnum is being starred. Dustin Farnum's first photoplay, "North of 53," also was completed this week.

Foxfilm comedies have recently been completed by Tom Mix, Hank Mann, Charles Parrott, Walter Reed and Harry Edwards.

Thirty-three crippled children, ranging in age from four to eight years, were given their first glimpse of a motion picture studio this week when they were employed to appear in some scenes at Culver City for a current Triangle-Kay Bee play by C. Gardner Sullivan, in which Enid Bennett is being starred. The unfortunate youngsters came from all parts of Los Angeles and surrounding territory, and the little delegation presented a pathetic sight as the cameras were being trained on them. Following their appearance in the scenes, the children were made guests at an impromptu party at which ice cream and cake were served and at which Miss Bennett acted as hostess.

Crane Wilbur is back from his vacation and is to commence work immediately at the David Horsley studios in his latest feature, "The Eye of Envy," written by himself. The production will be made under direction of Mr. Wilbur and Harrieh Ingraham.

"The Screamers" had another blowout this week at the Town and Country Club on Mount Washington. Many of the boys were there and everybody had a good time. Clarke Irvine and Don Meany furnished the cabaret.

Jack Blystone, the L-Ko director, is a daddy. The stork brought a pretty baby girl this week to the Blystone home. The mother and baby are doing nicely and the happy father is wearing a smile that won't come off these days. Here is how, Jack!

Francis Ford, the Universal director, has remarried his wife, from whom he was separated for several years. Little Bobbie Ford told his mamma he wanted daddy back and the child brought the parents together again. Mr. and Mrs. Ford are now enjoying a second honeymoon in their pretty bungalow in Hollywood.

Maude George has left Universal and joined the Fox Company. Bertram Grassby has also joined the same company.

Moving pictures are to be exhibited for the amusement of the passengers aboard the steamers of the Pacific Steamship Co. Regular shows will be given between 7 and 8 p. m., during the voyage between San Pedro and San Francisco. Pathoscope non-inflammable films, which meet with the requirements of the fire underwriters, are to be used.

Consolidated Film Corporation is a new comer on film row. The concern has recently opened commodious offices at 818 South Olive street. The officers of the concern are: Marion H. Kohn, president; S. Aronson, vice-president, and George B. Epstein, secretary and treasurer. The company handles feature films and buys on the open market, specializing on educational and children's pictures. It has bought the entire output of the Education Films Corporation of New York and is at the present time booking the pictures in several of the principal theaters in the city, including Tally's Broadway. The company is incorporated for $50,000.

An arrangement has been effected whereby the management of the Woodley Theater on Broadway passes into the hands of Mack Sennett.

Harry Clements, at one time manager of the Princess theater on First street, will be the business manager, acting under instructions from Mr. Sennett.

Mr. Woodley will retain his interest in the house, but will not be active in the management. The new arrangement was mutually agreed upon by the outgoing and ingoing managers, Mr. Woodley simply relinquishing hold on the executive reins.

Jacksonville Screen Club Ball

Big Gathering at Duval County Armory With Many Players Present.

THE great drill hall at the Duval County Armory was on Tuesday night, February 13, a scene of uncontrolled merriment when more than two thousand people gathered as the guests of the Screen Club of Jacksonville at their first annual ball. The capacity of the big auditorium was taxed to its utmost.

As the guests entered the ball room they were confronted with thousands of vari-colored lights and Japanese lanterns forming a spider's web overhead and at intervals the bright rays of a great arc lamp blended in perfect harmony with the general effect. On either side of the dance floor boxes of both local folk and motion picture celebrities were arranged, the color scheme representing a Japanese garden, and at the far end of the hall the orchestra was stationed on the stage.

The entire decorations were arranged by T. Dustin Dow, studio manager for Kalem; Victor Moore, star of Klever Komedies, and Dan Lynch, of Cohen's Big Store.

At 11 o'clock a blare of trumpets announced the grand march, and Coburn's Minstrel Band marched down the hall dressed in full regalia. Tense silence on the part of the enormous gathering greeted this surprise, and then a cheer went up that filled the crannies of the big building and echoed and re-echoed, mingling with the music of the band, and Coburn's Minstrels will go down in history as having the distinction of leading the largest social event ever staged in this city.

Immediately following the band, Victor Moore, Mayor Bowden and "Babe" Hardy led the marchers around the hall, and before the motion picture camera, where they were all "shot" for the screen. Dancing then commenced in earnest, and so great was the enthusiasm that merry-makers were loath to go home at an early hour.

And "He" Laughed.

Among the features of the affair were the awarding of the prizes donated by a number of merchants for the "Fortune Dance," and the announcement that "He" had been made to laugh. Shortly before 1 o'clock J. A. Kelly, of "Universal," announced that he had made "He" laugh for $1,000, and immediately a large crowd surrounded the mysterious personage to see his smile.

Among the celebrities present were: Viola Dana, John H. Collins, Mabel Taliaferro, John W. Noble, B. A. Rolfe, "Tweedledee" and "Tweedledum," Florence McLaughlin, "Babe" Hardy, Billy Ruge, Kate Price, Ethel Burton, Ollie Kirby, George Larkin, Bert Tracy, Bill McKay, Victor Moore, R. R. Riskin, M. Perrigini, Caryl Flemming, Emma Littlefield, Grace Darmond, Carl Gregory, Niles Welch, Mr. and Mrs. Morgan Jones, Louise Westner, Eugene French, George de Carleton, C. A. ("Doc") Willat, Prof. T. J. Wall, Mayor Bowden, J. A. Coburn, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Carter, Mr. and Mrs. Clement D. Cates, George H. Mason, Elliott W. Butts, Al Bucky, Fred Scheribaum, T. Dustin Dow, Richard Garrick, Lucile Taft, Roland Hill, L. D. Joel, F. C. Groover, B. R. Kessler, E. J. Sparks, Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Lynch, J. R. Barton, Tom Murray, Louise Carver, Myles McCarthy, J. E. Kavanaugh, Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Moyer, J. O. Walsh, Bill Louis, Beatrice Joy, A. W. Fritot, David Thompson, Col. J. S. Burroughs, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Klutho, Mrs. T. Burrige and others.

CARL LAEMMLE DENIES LOIS WEBER RUMORS.

Rumors that Lois Weber (Mrs. Phillips Smalley) had left the Universal forces were denied in a telegram received in New York from Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, who is at present in California. Several Los Angeles newspapers had printed stories to the effect that the famous director-authoress had severed connections with Universal, and was about to launch a new company with Mr. Laemmle. These stories were denied in toto by Universal's president.

Australian Notes

THE Entertainment Tax Bill, passed through Parliament during the early part of this month, is to take effect on New Year's Day, January 1st. The fact that sixpenny tickets are to be immune from the tax has caused much satisfaction in the ranks of picture exhibitors, especially those with suburban and country shows, whose chief admission price is sixpence. This concession on the part of the Government was secured after much hard work by the secretary of the Federated Showmen's Association, W. Howe, and others. The theatrical business was naturally much against the movement, and fought strenuously to prevent it. Even the tax as it now stands is expected to do much damage to the receipts of the larger theaters, which charge prices up to two shillings. Many of the smaller metropolitan shows intend to reduce all admissions to sixpence, which will admit to all parts of the house. These houses will, of course, be free from taxation.

The fact that an official censorship of films was preferable to that in force was very clearly demonstrated during the last week of the police censorship. The latter committee banned three films on the strength of their synopses, saying they were unfit for the public eye. The owners of the pictures concerned appealed to the Chief Secretary, who immediately passed two of the subjects, "A Tortured Heart" and "Caprice of the Mountains," which are now being screened as usual. The remaining subject, "The End of the Trail," is still under discussion.

The whole industry, however, is much dissatisfied with the new censorship, as they have not received notice which kind of pictures are desirable and which are not. It is understood that a deputation will be formed to visit the Chief Secretary in regard to this matter.

The Government this week gave notice that the daylight saving scheme was to be adapted to this country, and would take effect at 2 o'clock on the morning of January 1, 1917. On that date all clocks will be put forward one hour, thus making the daylight last till about 8:30 or 9 each night. Naturally this will seriously inconvenience hundreds of open-air theaters in the country districts, while it will also have a very big effect on the attendances of houses in the various metropolitan areas, the usual patrons of which are likely to give their time to open-air sports. The open-air shows of Broken Hill, N. S. W., have already announced that from January 1 they will not open till 8.30 p. m., half an hour later than their usual starting time.

It will therefore be seen that the year 1917 does not look very rosy for Australian exhibitors. Of course, the daylight saving scheme will only continue during the summer months, till the end of March. While if the war ends—though that is hardly likely for some time yet—a reduction will probably be made on the severe tax.

Other pictures to be censored in New South Wales were "Twilight Sleep" and "The Unborn." The former was shown at special sessions at the Lyceum, Sydney, to women only. The film had been running for three days when the Chief Secretary issued an order prohibiting its further screening. "The Unborn" is at present playing to big business in Brisbane, Queensland.

The Fox spectacle, "The Daughter of the Gods," opened to capacity business at the Hippodrome, Sydney, on Boxing night, December 26.

Christmas Day is regarded practically as a Sunday here, and only sacred and similar pictures are allowed to be screened, and then under special permission.

Programs this year included: "Judith of Bethulia," "From the Manger to the Cross," "Quo Vadis," the Dorsey travel pictures and "Hypocrites."

A Sydney paper states that a sister of Enid Bennett, the Triangle star, is leaving Australia shortly to join the moving picture colony in Los Angeles.

The news that Miss Bennett had joined Ince caused quite a sensation here, and her first picture is being looked forward to with great interest. She has already appeared in one screen production, a home-made version of the famous comedy "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford," opposite Fred Niblo. Miss Bennett hails from western Australia.

The average moving picture hardly seems to come within the province of a contagious diseases bill, and yet the only way which the state of Victoria discovered of censoring pictures is to deal with them under the Venereal Diseases bill. Picture theater proprietors are not likely to welcome the idea, but nevertheless as soon as the power has been obtained it is the general expectation that some strenuous censoring will take place.

As a Sydneyite recently returned from a visit to Melbourne remarked: "Melbourne is a city of wowsers where the public is concerned."

The first of the new pictures secured for the Co-operative Film Exchange by Alec B. Hellmrich while in America have been screened in Sydney during the past fortnight. The initial Frohman feature under the new contract, "Jaffrey," was the attraction at Hoyt's, while "The Power of Evil," the first Moss production, was on the same bill. Ince Mutual Masterpictures have also been secured, as none of these have been seen here yet. The first screenings of this latter brand include "The Forbidden Adventure," "On the Night Stage," "The Mating," and "The Reward." The special Ince feature, "The Italian," is also scheduled for early release.

The Progressive Film Exchange has started business in the various State capitals, with the head office in Sydney. This film will handle all Mutual films, with the exception of Chaplin subjects.

Harry Julius, who has drawn animated cartoons for the Australian Gazette during the past year, leaves for America next month, to take up similar work there. Mr. Julius' work has been much before the public lately, as he was engaged by the Government during the conscription referendum campaign to draw a series of moving picture cartoons which were screened by order of the Government in all the picture theaters throughout the country.

Frank Hurley, official photographer with the Shackleton expedition to the Antarctic, which recently returned, states that he managed to secure some very fine films while in the snow. It is expected that these will be released very shortly.

Two new and very elaborate picture theaters have been opened in Wellington, New Zealand. It seems that the war has not seriously affected the exhibiting end of the business in the Dominion.

Sydney, Australia, December 27, 1916.

FANNY REEVES McDOWELL DEAD.

Fanny Reeves McDowell, who was known professionally as Fanny Reeves, and who was a popular star twenty-five years ago, died at the German Sanitarium, Los Angeles, on January 29 after an illness of only three weeks.

Mrs. McDowell was the widow of Eugene A. McDowell, well-known actor and theatrical manager, and a niece of Sims Reeves, the noted English tenor. Her father was William Reeves, also a well-known actor, and her mother was Jane Webster, another stage favorite. Claire McDowell, daughter of the woman who passed to the great beyond, is one of the leading actresses at the Universal Film Company.

Miss McDowell was working at Universal City when news reached her that her mother was sinking. The old actress expired only a few minutes before Miss McDowell arrived at the hospital.

THANHOUSER SIGNS RICHARD R. NEILL.

Edwin Thanouser has engaged Richard R. Neill to play leads in a Florence La Badie production. Mr. Neill brings to the Thanouser studio a fine experience, gained in a number of different motion picture companies. He was last with Fox, supporting June Caprice, and played with Gail Kane, Mabel Taliaferro, Nat Goodwin and others. His screen career has been with Equitable, Fox, Metro and World. Mr. Neill had a legitimate stage career of six years under the management of Charles Frohman and was with E. H. Sothern, Virginia Harned in "The Other Girl," and with Mary Mannering, W. H. Thompson and others. His first appearance with Thanouser will be in a new play by Lloyd Lonergan.

Three Pathe Pictures

"Her Beloved Enemy," Five-Reel Drama Featuring Doris Grey and Wayne Arey; "Red Dawn," an Episode of "Patria," and "The Foreign Alliance," a Chapter of "Pearl of the Army."

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

MOSTLY because of a strong appeal to the curiosity through a well-sustained element of mystery, "Her Beloved Enemy," a five-reel drama featuring Doris Grey and Wayne Arey, is a picture that can hardly fail to attract and hold the interest of the average photoplay audience. It was produced by Thanhouse for release by Pathe. Lloyd Lonergan, the author, has achieved a clever bit of continuity writing in the building of this story, having consistently built up the suspense-factor in a manner that leaves no other course to the viewer than to keep attention centered on the screen. The author has, however, rather overworked coincidence, but not to the extent that the logicity of the story suffers thereby. He keeps his characters doing something all the time—doing something that the viewer later learns has a direct bearing on the surprising denouement.

While straight screen narration forms a more bulky ingredient in the production than does drama, deep dramatic chords are struck several times during the running of the five reels. And both Miss Grey and Mr. Arey respond with the histrionic ability necessary to forcefully register on the spectator's intelligence the dramatic moments. J. H. Gilmour is capably cast in the role of the girl's father, as is also Gladys Leslie in the role of the girl's friend. The production has received adequate direction at the hands of Ernest Warde.

Briefly, the screened story tells of a girl who unknowingly falls in love with a man she has been given to believe wrecked her father's life, and whose ruin she has promised to accomplish. When she learns that he is THE man, she plans to betray him. But it develops that the man is a secret service investigator, and not the crook she believed him to be. We are left somewhat in the dark as to how the man wrecked her father's life, although we are given to know that the father was once in prison.

"Red Dawn."

There are several good thrills in this, the seventh episode of the International serial "Patria." The thrills are furnished during Patria's (Mrs. Vernon Castle's) race in an automobile with a wild freight car laden with dynamite. To prevent the car from running into the Channing plant on a sidetrack, Patria stops her automobile in the path of the speeding car. A terrific explosion follows the collision. Other thrills come when the Channing plant is set on fire by strikers. These scenes were photographed at night, and register well. All this is the work of the Japanese plotters. Patria is saved from the proposed marriage to De Lima. A thrilling number.

"The Foreign Alliance."

The emissaries of the Foreign Alliance meet their fate in this, the twelfth two-reel chapter of Pathe's "Pearl of the Army" serial. They are drowned when a revenue cutter sinks the submarine in which they are travelling. This scene "gets over" with an especial thrill. Pearl Dare (Pearl White) brings about the Foreign Alliance's downfall after she boards the schooner of the Silent Menace. Pearl again accuses Orderly Adams of being the Menace, but they both peek through a keyhole into a stateroom and see that mysterious individual seated at a table. The chapter closes with the vessel seaward bound.

Two Kalem's

"The Black Rider of Tasajara," First Episode of "The American Girl" Series, and "The Screened Vault," a Number of the "Grant" Series.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

THE success of Kalem's new series, "The American Girl," is assured if all of the forthcoming two-reel episodes are up to the standard set by "The Black Rider of Tasajara," the first release. The picture is a Western of actionful and interesting melodrama. Three players who appeared in "The Girl From Frisco" series—Marin Sais, Frank Jonasson and Ronald Bradbury—carry leading parts in the new series. Edward Hearn is a newcomer. The new series resembles in a very great degree the "Frisco" series, and is also being directed by James W. Horne.

In the first episode Madge King (Miss Sais) proves her courage and ability when confronted with a masked rider who creates much fear among stage-coach passengers and others. By clever detective work the girl fastens guilt upon the keeper of a hotel at which she, her father, her aunt, and the youth who is the father's lieutenant are guests. In the working out of the plot Frederick R. Becholdt has given the scenario many touches that make for thrills. Mystery is uppermost all the time. There is much true-to-type Western stuff found in the two reels, and all in all the release is an exciting Western number.

"The Screened Vault."

George Larkin, as the reporter, continues to furnish thrills in the latest one-reel episode of the "Grant, Police Reporter" series. In this reel his stunts consist of several perilous leaps and climbs. When the reporter leaps to the ground from a scaffold on the fourth floor of a building there can hardly fail to be an intake of breath on the part of the spectator. It is indeed a thrilling stunt. Action and an interesting story

"The Heart of Texas Ryan"

A Romance of the Lone Star State by Selig, in Which Thrilling Deeds and a Pleasing Love Story Commingle —Tom Mix, George Fawcett, Bessie Eyton and Frank Campeau in the Cast.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

"THE HEART OF TEXAS RYAN" is a story of the great Southwest, in the Texas borderland, in which Colonel Ryan (George Fawcett) owns a ranch of thousands of acres, over which many more thousands of cattle roam. Texas Ryan (Bessie Eyton), the only child of the grim, old Colonel, arrives at the old ranch home early in the story, after completing her education in an Eastern College.

Jack Parker (Tom Mix), a devil-may-care cowpuncher, a stranger from nowhere, is the ablest hand on Colonel Ryan's cowboy force, and always gets into a scrape when he visits the nearest town—too much whiskey and a fondness for using his shooting iron being the prevailing causes. That was before Texas Ryan came home for good; but when Jack discovered that she was the original "dream girl," whose photograph he had worshipped for months without knowing that such a beautiful creature as Texas Ryan lived, he became a changed man, and the thrilling adventures in which he figures later are confined to the protection of his employer's interests and to the safety of his daughter, Texas.

Tom Mix is the most picturesque cowboy impersonator in America. His magnificent, reckless riding; the realism of his brawling encounters; his neck-risking feats in a roundup, in addition to all the other qualities that combine to make a true knight of the plains, always delight or thrill the spectator.

Was there ever a more realistic encounter of its kind than the saloon fight which is forced on Jack Parker by the former road agent, "Dice" McAllister (Frank Campeau), who at the time of the fight is marshal of the Texas village of Red Eye? The finish is made still more impressive by being conducted behind closed doors—in the poker room, into which the bad man has been shoved by the crowd in the barroom. Although both men were supposed to have entered without firearms, a shot is heard, and one of the listening crowd at the door has his face creased by a bullet. A few minutes later, when Colonel Ryan unlocks the door from the outside, the crowd stands aghast at the sight. McAllister is an inanimate heap on the floor, while over him stands Jack (greatly disfigured but still in the ring), holding aloft the spurred boot of the defeated man, whom he had pounded into insensibility after he had shot to kill Jack with a concealed weapon.

lage of Red Eye, impresses me as being exceedingly humorous. He is positively laden down with fireworks of all kinds, from giant firecrackers to skyrockets. The village constable has warned Jack to keep off the main street; so, to conform with the law, he climbs up forty feet to the small platform over the open water tank, which supplies the village with water, and there begins his bombardment. Owing to his libations he is careless and sets off the whole fireworks. To save himself, he drops into the tank, many feet below; but even there he is almost blown out of the water by the explosion of giant crackers, which have fallen from the platform just in time to go off as they strike the surface.

Jack's brave stand across the borderline, in Mexico, against a band of cowrustlers, among whom are two of his old enemies, will bring another thrill.

George Fawcett's Colonel Ryan is a fine characterization, as is the McAllister of Frank Campeau. Bessie Eyton as Texas Ryan will please her large following of admirers. She takes full advantage of the demands of the part to display her ability as an accomplished equestrienne.

The release was made February 12, through the K-E-S-E Service.

"A Girl's Folly"

Five-Reel Paragon Photoplay, a Story of Farm and Moving Picture Studio, Starring Doris Kenyon and Robert Warwick—Released by World Film Corporation.

Reviewed by Edward Weltzel.

THE inside workings of a moving picture studio are thrown open to public gaze in "A Girl's Folly," a five-reel Paragon screen drama starring Doris Kenyon and Robert Warwick. This is the novel feature of the picture, and its chief merit. The plot is rather slight, but the director, Maurice Tourneur, who is also part author of the scenario, has gone to considerable trouble and expense in adding humorous incidents of studio life and also of amusing happenings on a farm.

Mary Baker, a pretty country girl, longs to get away from her humdrum existence. A moving picture company takes pictures near her home, and a chance meeting with the leading man gives her the desired opportunity. She goes back to the city with him. Everyone is taken with her beauty, but she fails to register in her trial picture and, rather than return home, consents to let the leading man take care of her. Before matters have gone too far, Mary's mother arrives and the girl goes back home and marries her country sweetheart.

This plot, which does not reflect any too much credit upon the moving picture actor, is assisted materially by its comedy situations and by the care given the production. The cast is of unusual strength. Doris Kenyon is charming in the role of the country girl, and Robert Warwick plays the moving picture man as if entirely familiar with the role. June Elvidge and Jane Adair are two other names that insure high-grade impersonations, and Johnny Hines and Chester Barnett have the remaining important roles.

"Arsene Lupin"

Earle Williams in Title Role of Five-Reel Vitagraph Screen-drama Taken from Celebrated French Detective Novel.

Reviewed by Edward Weltzel.

THE celebrated French detective novel, "Arsene Lupin," which Paul Potter fashioned into a play for the American stage, has been produced in five-reel form by the Vitagraph Company, with Earle Williams as the fascinating but utterly impossible crook. As a piece of fiction "Arsene Lupin" is vastly entertaining; but, fortunate for humanity, it bears no relation to life. In the old days the heroes of romance were generally honest fellows who fought on the side of justice and virtue in distress; at the present time, the crook has the call—provided he have sufficient polish to pass in society and miraculous skill in "putting it over" on the police. All that is necessary to enjoy this picture is the faith with which a child opens his book of fairy tales, or an entire absence of the cynical mood. "Raffles" and the other gentlemen thieves of fiction are full brothers to "Arsene," and he is their equal in breeding, mastery of his profession, and power to amuse the spectator.

The picture version, made by Garfield Thompson, tells cleverly the story of the young French crook who passed himself off as the Duke de Charmerace and tricked Guerchard, the mighty police chief. The escape of "Raffles" through the clock is no more ingenious than the final departure of Lupin. This incident is handled very effectively on the screen, and there is no lack of excitement during the five reels.

The production is excellent, the local color seemingly correct, and the efforts of Director Paul Scardon greatly to his credit. Earle Williams easily assumes the qualities demanded of so distinguished a member of the Ancient and Honorable Order of Crooks, and Brinsley Shaw as Guerchard, Bernard Seigel as Charolais, Ethel Gray Terry as Sonia and Julia Swayne Gordon as Victorie are prominent in the supporting cast.

"The Honor System"

Ten-Reel Fox Screendrama, Written and Directed by R. A. Walsh, a Powerful Plea for Prison Reform—Milton Sills Gives Fine Performance of Leading Role.

Reviewed by Edward Weltzel.

THERE is so much that is admirable in "The Honor System," the screen drama written and directed by R. A. Walsh and produced by the Fox Company, that it seems almost ungracious not to mark one hundred per cent. for each of its ten reels. As presented at the Lyric theater, New York, at its first public showing, it was divided into three acts, the first two, in point of construction, being practically without a flaw—unless one objects to some humorous incidents that do not advance the story but are human as well as amusing.

Scene from "The Honor System" (Fox).

"The Honor System" is founded upon a story by Henry Christeen Warnack and relates of a young man who kills a ruffian in self-defense while protecting a Western dance hall girl, is convicted of murder and sent to the Arizona State Prison for life. The second act is taken up with revealing Joseph Stanton's experience while in prison and the terrible conditions under which the institution was conducted. This is told in uncompromising detail, the Arizona State Prison itself having been used by permission of Governor George W. P. Hunt, who was instrumental in putting an end to the disgrace. In the drama the prisoner, Joseph Stanton, is the means of bringing the matter to the attention of the Governor, and at the end of the second act Stanton, who is suffering from his experiences under the old system, cannot obtain a pardon, as that lies within the power of a man he has antagonized.

The last reel is devoted to the freeing of Stanton and the happy termination of his love for the daughter of the new warden. There is no fault to be found with such an ending, the moral lesson is driven home with sufficient force without the death of the innocent man, but the act is too long drawn out. Matters to be cleared up are few, and the sooner this is done, the better.

The one and only test to put to a drama of this nature is not whether the protagonist proves his contention, but if the subject makes good entertainment regardless of its standing on moral reform. "The Honor System" meets every demand of such a test. On its artistic side, it reveals an extensive and correctly mounted production filled with striking scenes, much quick action and based upon a human appeal that will find a ready response from every true man and worthy woman.

Splendid judgment has been shown in the selection of the cast. Milton Sills is superlatively fine as Joseph Stanton. Without pose, or one touch of theatricalism, he showed a man who suffered deeply and bore his sufferings with a strength of mind and heart worthy all praise. The screen never saw a more touching display of emotion than the moment when Stanton stands face to face with the Governor and realizes that his wrongs and the wrongs of his fellow prisoners are about to be righted.

Gladys Rockwell was another member of the cast who gave a flawless performance, and of uncommon merit were the impersonations to which are attached the names of Mrs. Cora Drew, James A. Marcus, Arthur Mackley, Miriam Cooper, George Walsh, Charles Clary, Roy Rice, P. J. Cannon and Johnny Reese. Photographer George Benoit and Title Editor Hettie Gray Baker are also to be felicitated. S. L. Rothapel staged the production and arranged the incidental music. His work adds to the merit of the entertainment.

Lasky-Paramount Productions

"The American Consul" With Theodore Roberts, and "The Winning of Sally Temple" Featuring Fannie Ward.

Reviewed by Edward Weltzel.

THE main incidents of "The American Consul," a five-reel photoplay written by Paul West and produced by the Lasky company, should furnish admirable material for an effective screen drama. Many of the situations are not new, but the character played by Theodore Roberts has such a number of likable traits and the motives for the story have so much dramatic interest that unskillful construction is alone to blame for the way in which the picture misses fire. Slow development of the plot and an oversupply of local color in the earlier part of the story are notable faults, and during the rest of the action it is not difficult to keep ahead of the dramatist. American politics and the part it plays in a Central American revolution forms the base of the story. Abel Manning, a country lawyer, is given the post of Consul to a Latin republic by the Senator of his state, who is anxious to get hold of some valuable mines, and thinks that Abe will prove a willing tool in his hands. Abe arrives at his post accompanied by his pretty daughter. Her young man, a wireless expert, is already on the ground and helps the American Consul to defeat the revolution.

The production, directed by Rolin Sturgeon, has received the usual Lasky thoroughness of treatment, and Theodore Roberts as the Consul makes the part a character study that is a pleasant reminder of Mark Twain's Colonel Mulberry Sellers. Maude Fealy as Joan Manning is an excellent example of a plucky American girl, and Tom Forman is alive to the possibilities offered by the role of the wireless expert. Ernest Joy looks and acts Senator Kitwell in a realistic manner, and Charles West is admirable as Gonzales.

"The Winning of Sally Temple."

Based upon a novel by Rupert Sargent Holland, "The Winning of Sally Temple" is a costume drama of the period when the noblemen of old England wore knee breeches and swords at their hips, and, if the novelist and playwright is to be believed, either spent their time gambling or making violent love to maids of lowly station—provided they owned a pretty face. In this Lasky five-reel screen version of the story, Fanny Ward appears as Sally Temple, an actress of much beauty and virtue, belonging to Drury Lane theater, who resides in Pump Lane and plays Lady Bountiful to the poor of the neighborhood.

Events so work out that Sally is prevailed upon to impersonate a certain Lady Mamela, the ward of Lord Romsey, a reckless gentleman, who falls in love with Sally at first sight, but is only able to win her after he has disguised himself as a common workman and saved his supposed ward from serious danger at the hands of the Duke of Chatto. Although written in the spirit of ardent romance, "The Winning of Sally Temple" makes good entertainment, even in this realistic age. It has the important merit of never lagging in its action, and there is a continual shifting of scene and sufficient change in situation to hold the attention to the finish.

The success of the picture is greatly assisted by the manner of its production. The settings bring the London of 1770 before one most vividly, and the many elaborate interiors and exteriors, also the scenes from humble life, have been reproduced to the last detail.

Fannie Ward as Sally Temple has a part quite in her line and finds an opportunity to favor us once more with a view of the famous ankles. Appropriate parts have been intrusted to Jack Dean, Walter Long, Horace B. Carpenter, Billy Elmer, Paul Weigel and other competent members of the cast. George Melford directed the picture.

"The Scarlet Letter"

Hawthorne's Famous Story Made Into Five-Reel Photoplay by Fox Company—Is Well Acted and Given Correct Settings.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE position held by "The Scarlet Letter" in the field of fiction is such a high one that it demands almost reverent treatment on the screen. The Fox production does not always fulfill this condition, but a worthy attempt has been made to give the story a fitting setting and to have it acted in the proper spirit. A plot of so serious a nature, enacted among such grim and forbidding surroundings, offers little opportunity for the lighter moments of life. Hester Prynne's punishment at the hands of her human judges, and the secret anguish of the man who should have shared her public disgrace, are tragic in the extreme, the only ray of sunshine to relieve the gloom being the child Pearl. Some attempts at comedy by the governor's sister are very much out of place. "The Scarlet Letter" must be accepted as Hawthorne wrote it or not at all. Carl Harbaugh made the scenario and directed the production. The story has been given a happy ending. Whoever is responsible for this despoiling of a masterpiece must hold the artistic perception of the average screen patron at a very low state.

The cast, while never approaching greatness in any individual case, maintains the acting at a respectable level. Stuart Holmes, who has so long been identified with the bad men of the screen, plays Arthur Dimmesdale with unexpected feeling and no little power. Mary Martin is the Hester Prynne. She gives a very human performance of the character, but does not make Hester's nature at all deep. Dan Mason as Roger Chillingworth is the most effective member of the cast. His embodiment of the revengeful physician is excellently conceived and expressed. Kittens Reichert catches the elfishness of little Pearl remarkably well. Edward N. Hoyt, Robert Vivian and Florence Ashbrooke complete the cast.

Triangle Program

"The Little Brother," Five-Reel Ince-Kay Bee, Featuring Enid Bennett, and "Stagestruck," With Dorothy Gish in the Leading Role.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"The Little Brother."

THE Little Brother" is a romantic version of the story quite regularly told when a charming young actress feels that her turn has come to put on boy's clothes—they all have to do that once, at least. Closing our eyes to the fact that Miss Bennett is so delightfully feminine that she does not look like a boy, nor move like one, especially when she walks, she is not only pleasing in the role, but she is fascinating at times. The greater pity that people in the story could not have seen through her disguise as plainly as the audience. She acts the role so far as the psychological representation is concerned, and she even displays the male's rude strength at times, but she is distinctly feminine, a woman to the core, very beautiful in some poses, as a genuine boy could not be if he tried. She is handicapped by a femininity that at once shines forth when she changes her clothes, when she becomes sweet and attractive as nature intended.

There are indications throughout "The Little Brother" that Miss Bennett is a veritable find. She represents something as a girl, the strength, vigor and mental activity that woman should have and would have if given the right sort of early opportunity, and this counts with the audience in a subconscious way. Far deeper than transient interest in how the story will turn out is undefined recognition in a mixed audience that Miss Bennett, like other wholesome and normal girls, is a true type of what the sex was meant to be, what it may be in some remote period of development, what it is far from being, however, at the present moment. It is as a woman that she accomplishes something worth while for the man she loves, stimulated by that emotion which has dominated human effort from earliest times, even before man began to reason from cause to effect.

It is as a woman that Miss Bennett reveals greater promise in this story than in her first appearance, most marked in the early scenes, where there are some amusing sketches of little children, but during every moment that she is in the dress of her sex. The story is filled with incongruities, of situations incapable of demonstration to an audience, while the leading character is in male attire, strained to the point of self-contradiction for the sake of a male impersonation, and there is no other genuine characterization except the rather colorless role assigned to William Garwood. The assumption of villainy on the part of his superintendent, without visible motive, and strictly theatrical in his constantly overhearing all of importance that passes, causes the later scenes to drag where a play should be intense. Far from being benefited, the whole effect, the complete impression, is marred. But the presentation is made attractive by one strong personality and satisfying by fine sense of the appropriate in settings and mood.

"Stagestruck."

"Stagestruck" is a comedy of theatrical life, as its title indicates, and it is the kind of story that gives the average studio director an "at home" feeling. He knows where he is at. The comedy is well handled as to details, but enough is not made of the really dramatic situation of a young couple wedded by honest intention on their part, yet apparently not in strict accordance with the law. In this one situation was tremendous comedy opportunity almost wholly ignored for the sake of minor incident. The story is that of a country girl who spends her last dollar at a fake dramatic school, only to have her illusions rudely dispelled.

During this experience she meets a rather simple-minded young man of wealthy family intent on a career theatrical, and marries him in a ceremony performed before an ex-Justice of the Peace. She is immediately separated from her husband, discovers that her dreams of success will never be realized, and lands up in a Home for the Friendless maintained by her young husband's wealthy mother. The mother is indignant over what appears to be a trick marriage and intent on seeing that justice shall be done until she discovers that the supposed culprit is her own son. Here is a genuine comedy situation, such as would have delighted Scribe or Moliere. Reel after reel of amusing situations could have been developed from such a delightfully complicated situation, but it becomes merely a minor incident, to be disposed of in a few concluding scenes. There are some amusing subtitles and a generally good performance on the part of a well balanced company. Miss Dorothy has little to do, and does it well. The whole effect is pleasing, but the story is robbed of its possibilities by lack of mature grasp of its own merits, such as would fasten attention upon developing its most interesting situation.

"The Girl and the Crisis"

Five-Reel Red Feather Offering Deals With Much-Mooted Subject of Capital Punishment for Murder.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE subject of capital punishment has long been one for debate. This five-reel offering, while not in any way an exceptional story, proves again the adaptability of the screen for putting a problem before the people in concentrated form. It is unfortunate that the plot itself is not newer in its situations and general treatment. As presented, the feature is one of about average strength.

The story concerns a young politician, named Oliver Barnitz, elected lieutenant governor of his state. He falls in love with Ellen Wilmot, daughter of his father's greatest enemy. In the first two reels, which are the strongest in the offering, an attack is made upon the works of the Wilmot company. This part is staged on quite an elaborate scale, but the blowing up of the small powder house furnishes something of an anti-climax.

Following the attack, both sides to the quarrel appeal to the governor. The executive is then shot and killed by a crank named Poole. The latter is thrust into prison and this brings up in a rather belated way the real motive of the production, which is a plea for the abolishment of capital punishment.

ishment. The lieutenant governor, now in the governor's chair, is made the center of a strong fire from the opposing sides on this question. He at length commutes Poole's sentence, presumably at the expense of his own political future.

William V. Mong wrote and produced the feature. Dorothy Davenport, Charles Perley, Harry Holden and the author have the leading parts.

"Kitty McKay"

Lillian Walker Star of Vitagraph's Five-Reel Version of Catherine Chisholm Cushing's Scotch Stage Drama.

THE screen version of "Kitty Mackay," the bright little stage drama written by Catherine Chisholm Cushing, proves an excellent medium for the display of Lillian Walker's talents, and has been given a meritorious production by the Vitagraph Company. The play had quite a run at the Comedy Theater, New York, its humor, serious interest and amusing studies of Scotch character contributing to its success. The qualities are cleverly brought out in the photoplay.

Laid in the days when hoopskirts were the fashion, the story of the young Scotch girl who suddenly finds herself transplanted from the humble cottage of the McNabs, where she is made to serve as a drudge, to the home of Lord Inglehart and treated as one of the family, although more a comedy than anything else, is strongly sympathetic and filled with characteristic humor. The contrast between Kitty's life in London and her surroundings in the village across the border are as amusing to the spectator as they are surprising to the heroine, and the happy termination of her love affair with Lord Inglehart's son ends the dramatic suspense of the play.

Like all Scotch comedies, character parts abound in "Kitty Mackay," and the cast selected by the Vitagraph is well adapted to its work. The high spirits, love of fun and ready wit of Kitty are brought out by Lillian Walker most entertainingly; she also makes a charming picture in her frocks of sixty years ago. Jewell Hunt is a good second as Kitty's chum, and Charles Kent, Don Cameron, Thomas Mills and Mrs. West form an impressive aristocratic quartette. W. J. Ferguson's embodiment of the canny Scot who was forced to sign the pledge or go to work when Kitty left his house is rich in entertaining qualities. William Shea is also the real article as MacGregor, and Mrs. Nellie Anderson and Beatrice Anderson round out an excellent cast.

"A Mormon Maid"

Mae Murray Is Seen to Advantage in Friedman Subject Treating of Early Days in Utah.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

MAE MURRAY finds herself in "A Mormon Maid," the five-part subject being exploited by Hillier & Wilk for the Friedman Enterprises Corporation. She finds herself not in the role of a light-hearted, romping, dancing, near tom-boy girls such as we see her in the early period of this story. It is in the characterization of a tragic part, when as Dora Hogue, a maid in a Mormon country, she and those she loves are in danger that she comes into her own and reveals power that is genuine.

The subject is being exploited as anti-Mormon propaganda. With that phase of it this reviewer is not concerned. Accepting as accurate the conditions alleged to exist in the fifties in the large territory dominated by the Mormons, or accepting them as an exaggeration, "A Mormon Maid" is an absorbing story, well acted and well produced. There is no suggestion that the situations outlined have anything to do with the present day. It is strong drama, with its full measure of suspense, with its accompaniment of the tragedies that ensue in a primitive region when men of strong will meet at the crossing of the paths.

Hobart Bosworth has the role of Hogue, an American settler, who with his wife and daughter are saved from the Indians by the Mormons and taken into their community. The daughter falls in love with a young Mormon and is coveted by an older and much married fellow-religionist. The latter conspires with his associates to force Hogue into the church that he may secure the daughter. How his plans fail is clearly developed in a thrilling denouement. Mr. Bosworth splendidly brings out the many-sided character of Hogue, the fearless frontiersman who succumbs to major force in order to save his daughter, only later to see his wife commit suicide and his daughter taken from him.

Edythe Chapman is Nancy Hogue, the woman who fears Indians less than she does the Mormons. Frank Borsage is Tom Rigdon, the young lover of Dora. Noah Beery is Burr, the Mormon chieftain. There is a large supporting cast.

The subject is notable from the spectacular side, with its hordes of white garbed "Destroying Angels," its Indians and its impressive ceremonials. Much of the picture is of the open, of big fields and rough mountain country.

"A Mormon Maid" considered solely as a photoplay should prove a strong attraction.

"The Boy Girl"

Five-Reel Bluebird Photoplay Starring Violet Mersereau and Directed by Edwin Stevens Has Lively Heroine.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

FOR the first sixteen years of her life the heroine of "The Boy Girl" regrets that she was born a girl, then falls in love with a good looking young chap and stops regretting. John G. Brownell, the author of this five-reel Bluebird, has taken Violet Mersereau's measure correctly and supplied her with numerous opportunities to run the whole list of "cute tricks," so dear to the heart of the fluffy-haired ingenue. Miss Mersereau can smile, pout and wear boy togs with the best of them, and is an expert at upsetting the dignity of a private boarding school for young ladies, when it comes to being the leader of a midnight pajama party.

The serious interest of "The Boy Girl" centers around an oil well deal. The father of Miss Jack Channing's sweetheart is about to be cheated out of his rights by a rascally employe, but Miss Jack, who has foresworn the wearing of male attire, gets into her cross-saddle riding clothes and saves the day.

The play follows the usual formula for pictures of this class, and Edwin Stevens, who directed the production, has added nothing new in the way of stage business. The mountings are well chosen and the cast meets every requirement. Sidney

"Two Men and a Woman"

Five-Reel Photoplay Written by Willard Mack and Produced by Ivan Film Productions, Inc., Has Excellent Cast.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A MAN'S sacrifice for the woman he loves is the principal motive of "Two Men and a Woman," a five-reel photoplay produced by the Ivan Film Company. Willard Mack, the author of the story, is an expert at dramatic construction, but the scenario for this picture is too long drawn out and choppy.

An ex-naval officer, who is working on the plans of a new diving bell, has a ward, the son of a former comrade. The two love the same woman, but the elder man, believing that the boy has the inside track, does everything in his power to assist him in his love affair. Finding that his rival has compromised himself with an adventuress, Donaldson entraps the woman, at the risk of his own good name. His ward, realizing the extent of the sacrifice, blurts out the truth to his fiancée, learns that Donaldson is the man she really loves, and gives her to him. An attempt by Japanese spies to steal the plans of the diving bell forms another motive. They have little difficulty in getting hold of the plans, as the inventor keeps them in an unlocked drawer in a library table; but Donaldson atones for his carelessness by getting them back at the point of a gun. There is an air of good breeding about nearly all the characters, and every one of them wears good clothes. More light on several of the night scenes would improve the production.

The work of the cast is practically without a blemish. James Morrison as the ward and Guy Coombs as his guardian are the most proficient members. Christine Mayo and Rubye de Remer leading the female contingent. John Reinhard, Helen Arnold and Yuka Yamakura are the other important actors.

"The Planter" Nearing Completion

Nevada Motion Picture Corporation Announces Ten or Twelve Reel Visualization of Popular Novel.

AFTER months of careful preparation and the travel of the company half way around the world, the Nevada Motion Picture Corporation is well along in the production of Herman Whitaker's famous novel, "The Planter." The story is to be shown in ten or twelve reels, and Tyrone Power, who has made such a tremendous hit on both the screen and the stage, is being starred in the remarkable character of "Hertzer."

The company is located at 40 West Mountain street, Pasadena, and three or four tropical film villages have been built in that vicinity for operation of the company immediately upon its return from Guatemala.

The company is now on its way back from Guatemala, where much of the story is laid, after several months spent in the tropics and after some rather strenuous experiences on the part of the cast, both with the climate and the peculiar make-up of that revolutionary country.

The picture promises to be one of the biggest of the big productions so far offered the public. Nearly six months was spent in the preparation of the scenario alone.

The commerciality of the picture is being looked to as well as the artistic side, and the story is being so constructed as to appeal to the masses as well as the classes in a way that will bring the greatest possible returns on its presentation.

The producers promise some of the most intensely dramatic situations and some of the biggest spectacular thrills that have ever been put on the screen. Certainly it should contain some of the greatest characterizations, for the author, Mr. Whitaker, is noted for the strength of the characters of his books and for their unusual development. Over $200,000 has already been spent on the production, and it is expected that it will cost almost as much more before it is finished.

The cast supporting Mr. Power is a notable one, including Helen Reaume, Mabel Wiles, Carmen Phillips, E. Lamar Johnstone, George R. O'Dell, Louis FitzRoy and others.

The picture is being directed by Thos. N. Heffron, who was for over two years with the Famous Players Film Company. Mr. Heffron is particularly noted for his ability to handle intense dramatic situations and to bring out in his characters the actual feeling and living of the parts which they are portraying. The production work and general management are in the hands of Harry C. Drum, who up until last summer was assistant general manager of the World Film Corporation. It is expected that the picture will be ready for release in about three months.

Henry J. Brock on State Rights

President of Enlightenment Photoplays Corporation Prophecies Renewed Interest in This Method of Marketing Pictures.

THE success met with by the Enlightenment Photoplays Corporation in disposing of the state rights to "Enlighten Thy Daughter" has caused Henry J. Brock, president of the company, to see bright prospects ahead for the firms engaged in this method of marketing features. His company has sold the state rights for the Ivan pictures, which it bought outright and which is now having a prosperous run at the Park theater, New York City, to an encouraging number of buyers and at very advantageous terms to both parties. Several of the purchasers are men of good financial standing in other branches of business, that have recognized the opportunity for substantial returns from an investment in a picture of sufficient merit to assure it extended runs at advanced prices.

"In these days," said Mr. Brock, during a recent interview, "when the merger looms large on the commercial horizon and so many of the leading picture companies are going into combines, the only hope for the smaller concerns is the state rights proposition. They can dispose of their products on a cash basis that will prevent their capital from being tied up, and give them a sure and equitable profit on every picture made. Our company is in the market for pictures of the same order of merit as "Enlighten Thy Daughter," and our method of getting independent features before the public is bound to increase in popularity as the distribution of program pictures is narrowed down to a still smaller number of companies."

Happy Nat is a bibulous gentleman, but in his dream he becomes a philanthropist. As the reel closes he awakes and goes to keep the appointment he had. A fair reel.

FOR REWARD OF SERVICE (Selig).—This one-reel comedy-drama has a heart grip and a directness of appeal that absorbs. A clever bit of character delineation is done by George Fawcett. There are several lighter moments in the playlet that amuse. The story tells of an old bookkeeper supposed by his colleagues to be a grouch. They load him down with "phoney" Christmas presents. Light into the old man's past life makes the scoffers sympathetic, and they get real presents. The reel was directed by Al Green. Vivian Reed is seen in the role of the man's daughter. A review was printed on page 866 of the issue of February 10.

A FLYER IN FLAPJACKS (Kalem).—A laughable one-reel comedy with Ham and Bud. This pair get over several laughs, especially during their antics with pancakes. Henry Murdoch and Ethel Teare are also funmakers. Ham and Bud are relentlessly pursued by the cop, and they try all manners of means to make him believe that they have jobs. At least they get into Henry's flapjack joint. There is a battle royal in the restaurant, all sorts of food being the ammunition.

ALL IN A DAY (Essanay).—A split reel embracing a fair comedy and beautiful Alaskan scenic. The comedy is of the knock-about variety. Two physical culturists train a hen-pecked husband and he begins things at home. But the physical culture experts are no match for Friend Wife. The scenic section is enhanced by good photography.

THE SCREENED VAULT (Kalem).—Episode of the "Grant, Police Reporter" series. George Larkin continues to thrill with his daring feats. In this reel he is seen taking several perilous leaps—one from the fourth floor of a building to the ground. The reel is crammed with action and the story interests. It tells of how the reporter frustrates an ex-convict's plot to rob a bank. Ollie Kirkby and Director Robert Ellis are also seen on the screen. Reviewed in another column of this issue.

HARRY'S PIG (Vim).—Harry La Pearl has a lot of fun with a porker in this comedy reel. He performs some funny antics as he rides down the main street of the town. His wife and the grocery store man have something to say and do about Harry's exploits, too. There is quite a bit of fast action in this reel and the laughs are not too scarce.

General Film Company Specials.

DESERTION AND NON-SUPPORT (Essanay).—No. 9 of the "Is Marriage Sacred?" series. In this two-reel unit the abuse of the desertion and non-support laws is dramatically presented. An element of romance helps interest considerably. The story tells of a man who goes West for his health. He falls in love with his nurse. He becomes wealthy, and it is then that his wife sues him for desertion. The court holds that there was desertion on the part of the wife, and not the husband. The Essanay stock company, composed of Marguerite Clayton, Edwards Arnold, Lillian Drew, Thomas Commerford and John Cossar, are seen in this drama.

ASHES ON THE HEARTHSTONE (Essanay).—No. 10 of the "Is Marriage Sacred?" series. This number is a two-reel drama with several commendable features. There are quite a number of tense moments, capably registered by Essanay's stock company. The story tells of the wife who succumbs to the wishes of a rich youth. Too late she comes to a realization of what she has done. She goes to her former home to find her baby dead. The film is a strong indictment of a wife's disloyalty. Those in the cast are Marguerite Clayton, Edward Arnold, Lillian Drew, Sydney Ainsworth and Thomas Commerford.

THE LIGHTED LAMP (Essanay).—One of the "Black Cat" features. Edward Arnold and Anna Mae Walthall are seen in this two-reel drama, which tells on the screen with considerable force of at least one case wherein "cave man" tactics failed to entirely win the girl. The man practically carries the girl off her feet, marrying her without giving her a chance to say anything. A separation comes, during which time the man comes to realize that he was wrong. He comes back to his wife, a changed man, and everything turns out happily. Arthur Koeppel is also in the cast.

THE BLACK RIDER OF TASAJARA (Kalem).—First episode of "The American Girl" series. A review printed in another column states that the success of the series is assured if the forthcoming two-reel episodes are up to the standard set by the first. It is Western melodrama of action and interest. Madge King, the American Girl (Marin Sais), unearths the mysterious masked rider as a respected citizen of a Western town. She is aided by her father and others. This is an exciting number. With Miss Sais in the new series are seen Frank Jonasson, Ronald Bradbury and Edward Hearn.

Art Dramas, Inc.

THE ADVENTURER (U. S. Amusement Co.), Feb. 15.—A very worthy picture full of entertainment and of that holding quality that will make it worth while on the screen as a money getter. Madam Blache has carefully directed it and Marian Swayne has the lead. A longer review can be found in the issue dated February 24.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE BOY GIRL (Bluebird), March 5.—This five-reel comedy-drama is an excellent vehicle for Violet Mersereau, who appears as a horse-loving young person much given to wearing boy's clothes. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Fox Film Corporation.

THE SCARLET LETTER (Fox), Feb. 12.—A five-reel screen version of Hawthorne's famous novel, the picture is well acted and intelligently produced, but is weakened by a happy ending. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

THE HONOR SYSTEM (Fox).—Special release, ten-reel photoplay containing a powerful plea for better prison conditions, this picture has been produced with excellent results and has the advantage of a fine cast. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Greater Vitagraph

KITTY MACKAY (Feb. 19).—Lillian Walker has the title role in this five-reel screen version of the successful stage play. The story is full of Scotch humor, and the star is well suited to the lively Kitty, who wins a lord's son. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

ARSENE LUPIN, Feb. 26.—Earle Williams is the star of this five-reel French detective screen drama. The story is entertaining and has been well produced. It is reviewed at length on another page.

Ivan Film Production, Inc.

TWO MEN AND A WOMAN (Ivan), February.—The cast selected for this five-reel photoplay, written by Willard Mack, is an excellent one. It is the story of a man's sacrifice and touches upon the Japanese spy question. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay.

THE HEART OF TEXAS RYAN (Selig), Feb. 12.—A story of the Texas borderland, abounding in thrilling adventures and a catching love story, in which Tom Mix, George Fawcett, Bessie Eyton and Frank Campeau have strong parts. This story will please all who delight in red-blooded life of the plains. The photography is good and many of the scenes are picturesque.

Metro Pictures Corporation

ONE OF MANY (Arthur James), Feb. 12.—A five-reel photoplay, starring Frances Nelson, this picture tells the story of a young girl's temptation and her rescue by a man who truly loves her. Several errors of construction detract from the merits of the production. The acting is of fair quality.

Mutual Film Corporation

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 75 (Gaumont), Feb. 14.—The subject of this number is "Los Angeles, California." The views shown of this beautiful California city are instructive as well as entertaining and cover the main streets and points of interest in and about the city.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 111 (Feb. 14).—Interesting items of this number are the street cleaning department of New York using military methods to recruit its permanent force, a remarkable series of views of a $500,000 blaze at St. Louis, making the new flag for President Wilson's inauguration, a few hints as to what men are wearing, and the launching of the S. S. "La Perouse" somewhere in France.

JERRY'S BIG MYSTERY (Cub), Feb. 15.—A farce comedy in which Jerry, running from the policeman, takes refuge under the coat tail of a tailor's dummy. With all but his legs concealed, he runs about with the dummy, the fact that its head is knocked off by the policeman adds a gruesome touch that enhances the comedy of the situation. Quite an amusing number.

REEL LIFE, NO. 42 (Gaumont), Feb. 18.—In this number will be found several interesting subjects, among them "Oysters on the Mississippi Coast," "Water," "Making an Individual Dress Form," "Training Man Hunters" and "The Dance of the Rainbow." These subjects are well illustrated and interesting.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

ADVENTURES OF SHORTY HAMILTON, NO. 5 (Monogram), Feb. 12.—"Shorty Turns Wild Man" is the title of this number of the series. In it Shorty starts back to the ranch from the city. On the way his outfit is stolen while he poses as wild man in an attempt to route a couple of thieves who have killed a man to gain the map of a claim where there is said to be a deposit of pitch blend. A circus captures him as he roams hopelessly about, and he is only enabled to escape through the devotion of his horse. A rather entertaining number.

LURED AND CURED (Vogue), Feb. 18.—A two-part farce comedy in which a young woman elopes with the man she loves and is pursued by the man her parents want her to marry. The latter having gained admittance into the house where the girl and her lover are stationed, falls in love with the mistress of the house, whose actions are not such as should be exhibited on the screen. An ordinary and not highly commendable number.

Paramount Pictures Corporation

HER OWN PEOPLE (Pallas), Feb. 8.—Lenore Ulrich is seen in one of her best roles. She has the part of a girl who is half Indian and half white. The story is interesting—there are picturesque settings, large numbers of Indians appear in their sports, and there are strong situations. The story was reviewed in the preceding issue.

THE BLACK WOLF (Lasky), Feb. 12.—Lou-Tellegen and Nell Shipman make an excellent team in this picture of old Spain. They are well supported. The production is well staged, with notable backgrounds and wealth of costuming. It was reviewed last week.

AN AMERICAN CONSUL (Lasky), Feb. 15.—Theodore Roberts has the title role in this five-reel photoplay, which contains character study of good quality, but is not well put together. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

THE WINNING OF SALLIE TEMPLE (Lasky), Feb. 19.—Romance of the days of George III is the keynote of this five-reel photoplay. Fannie Ward, as an actress of Drury Lane Theater, heads the cast. The production is well done. Reviewed in another column.

UNCLE SAM'S WARDS (International), March 4.—A split reel containing travel-educational scenes in and about the Philippine Islands and a "Jerry on the Job" animated cartoon. The travel section shows scenes around Manila, and considerable footage is devoted to the maneuvers of U. S. submarines. In the cartoon section Jerry is seen as a Jack Tar aboard a man-of-war.

FLORENCE ROSE FASHIONS, NO. 21 (Pathe), March 4.—A scenic titled "Picturesque Cadelonia" shares this reel with the Florence Rose Fashions. The scenic views are in Pathecolor, and show scenes about Caledonia, Spain. Several beautiful "shots" have been obtained. The scenic is enhanced by good photography and the Pathecolor. The fashions are, as usual, up to the minute, and of especial interest to women.

DEEP-DYED VILLAINY (Mittenthal), March 4.—One of the Heinie and Louie one-reel comedies, made some time ago, but nevertheless funny. The reel is slapstick comedy in its broadest sense. Several laughs are registered. Heinie and Louie are rivals in love. Each go to lengths that lead to laughs. A fairly funny reel.

Pathe Exchange Inc., Specials

RED DAWN (International), Feb. 25.—Seventh episode of "Patria." Thrills come when Patria (Mrs. Vernon Castle) places her auto in the path of an onrushing freight car loaded with dynamite, and during her race with the car. There are also some good fire scenes, photographed at night. Patria is saved from the proposed wedding to De Lima. A thrilling chapter. Reviewed in another column.

HER BELOVED ENEMY (Thanouser), March 4.—Mystery and romance are interestingly intermingled in this five-reel drama. Doris Grey and Wayne Arey are the leading players. The story tells of a girl who unknowingly falls in love with the man she believes has wrecked her father's life. She is about to be revenged when love triumphs. The man proves to be a secret service agent. A longer review is printed in another column of this issue.

THE FOREIGN ALLIANCE (Astra), March 4.—Twelfth two-reel episode of "Pearl of the Army." Good scenes of a submarine exploded by a revenue cutter's shell are embraced in the chapter. The emissaries of the Foreign Alliance perish in the subsea boat. Pearl and Orderly Adams, on board the Silent Menace's schooner, see him in a stateroom, which allays Pearl's suspicion that Adams is the Menace. The chapter closes with the vessel headed for the sea.

Triangle Film Corporation

STAGESTRUCK (Fine Arts), Feb. 25.—A comedy of theatrical aspiration, with Dorothy Gish as the disillusioned aspirant. Mildly amusing and not rising to its own opportunities is the story.

THE LAST OF THE INGRAMS (Kay-Bee), March 1.—A romantic drama of the Scarlet-Letter type, with William Desmond and Margery Wilson in the leading parts.

Universal Film Mfg. Company

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 59 (Universal), Feb. 14.—A burning coke plant in New York U. S. Army quitting Mexico, police guarding German ships, liners leaving this country to dare U-boats and various other interesting war sidelights are included in this number.

THEY WERE FOUR (Victor), March 1.—A first-class cowboy comedy by Karl R. Coolidge. Neal Hart and three rough-riding men of the plains visit the city for a day. They hold up the guests of a hotel as a joke, just after some real crooks have completed a similar job. All are thrown into jail. But the cowboys get their revenge on the crooks later. This is worked well, with good comedy situations and plenty of action.

A NOVEL ROMANCE (Victor), Feb. 27.—A love story, by Wm. Henry, featuring Flora Parker De Haven and Paul Byron. This pictures the way in which fate throws together two young people, a girl stenographer and a young man fond of romantic novels. There is no special novelty of plot, but the presentation is agreeable and pleasing.

THE RENTED MAN (Rex), March 1.—A splendid two-reel offering of the purely sentimental type, by Annie Hamilton Donnell. Francis Marion appears as an attractive boy of the Little Lord Fauntleroy type. He is wealthy by inheritance, but hates the bousekeeper and pines for a father and mother. The little girl next door, portrayed by Elizabeth Janes, is equipped with the best of parents and the boy envies her exceedingly. He proceeds to rent a father, who, of course, turns out to be his own male parent after all, and he gets a mother into the bargain. A pretty story of decided appeal.

EVIL HANDS (Imp), March 2.—A white slave story, by Willis Woods, featuring Edith Roberts, Malcolm Blevins and Edward H. Hearn. The innocent girl and the underworld types are well portrayed. Red Leary saves the girl at the risk of his own life. The situations are not so broad as sometimes occur in this type of story, but are handled quite dramatically.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE, NO. 8, March 2.—This number contains an item in modern science, showing the Government Radio Station at Arlington, a domestic science demonstration on the making of pie crust by Mrs. A. Louise Andrea, and a detailed illustration of the workings of a newly invented safe deposit vault, in addition to a clever animated clay cartoon by Willie Hopkins.

A BUNDLE OF TROUBLE (Nestor), March 5.—A comedy number, by Karl R. Coolidge, featuring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran as two detectives investigating an international mystery. This is done in first-class burlesque style; they use so many disguises that one detective gets off the original scent and follows the other. This will bring many laughs and is a good offering of the nonsensical type.

Universal Film Mfg. Co. Specials

THE GIRL AND THE CRISIS (Red Feather), Feb. 26.—This five-reel number, written and produced by Wm. V. Mong, features the author, Dorothy Davenport, Charles Perley and Harry Holden. The story opens with an attack upon a reservoir property, following which the governor of the state is shot. The young lieutenant governor becomes executive, and a fight for and against capital punishment for the murderer centers about him. He commutes the death sentence at the cost of his own political future. This makes rather interesting propaganda for the abolishment of capital punishment. The story itself is not handled with any great degree of strength. It makes an average offering.

THE PURPLE MASK, NO. 10 (Special Universal), Feb. 26.—Patsy releases Kelly and his friends from their predicament in the room with movable walls. Some of the action is vague and lacks suspense for this reason, but there are a number of interesting tricks in Patsy's new home which hold the interest fairly well. Patsy finally makes away with a grip full of money to be used in conducting a crooked election, with Kelly following. A fair instalment.

MARY FROM AMERICA (Gold Seal), Feb. 27.—A delightful three-reel subject, from a story by Elizabeth J. Carpenter, featuring Ruth Clifford and Douglas Gerrard. Sir Jasper dies, leaving his vast English estate to Lady Jessica. The heirs appear, all eager for a share. The types are well depicted and the social scenes well handled. There is a love affair between Mary Moore, from America, Lady Jessica's favorite, and the Viscount Yorke. A lame boy who reads fairy tales is also a good character. This is effectively presented and should have wide appeal.

SPIKE'S BUSY BIKE (L-KO), Feb. 28.—A rapid-fire comic, with a strong "sporting" flavor, though not in any way offensive. Dan Russell, Marjorie Ray and Vin Moore appear. The former plays the part of a bicycle rider. The scenes at the training quarters contain some laughable incidents of the knockabout sort. The bicycle chase in the second reel is extremely funny. A good offering of the type.

TANGLED THREADS (Imp), March 4.—This two-reel subject features Lamar Johnstone and Edward Sloman. The former appears as a young novelist in love with the ward of an artist. The young man is lured away by some crooks and becomes implicated in a shooting scrape, but manages to escape. This is crudely handled and not very convincing in certain scenes. It falls considerably below the average in general interest, the plot features being too familiar.

THE PURPLE MASK, NO. 11 (Special Universal), March 5.—Kelly follows Patsy's auto until it breaks down. He then takes her to a cabin as his prisoner. She escapes by aid of the gang. Later she appears at a garden fete conducted by a fake benevolent society and makes away with the funds. Two clever tricks are performed in this number which will bring joy to lovers of mysterious happenings of the sort. This is stronger in interest than some recent instalments.

World Pictures.

TRIANGLE MARCH 11 RELEASES.

Bessie Love and Enid Bennett are the stars of the Triangle feature releases for March 11. Miss Love will appear in a unique Fine Arts comedy entitled "A Daughter of the Poor," written by Anita Loos, and directed by Edward Dillon. Enid Bennett will make her second stellar appearance under the auspices of Thomas H. Ince in an unusually pleasing Kay Bee production entitled "The Little Brother," written by Lois Zellner and directed by Charles Miller.

As the heroine of "A Daughter of the Poor," Bessie Love takes the part of a young girl with an inherent hatred for wealth and all that wealth implies, who finally falls in love with a son of a millionaire, mistaking him for a poor chauffeur. When the girl discovers that her lover is rich instead of being a downtrodden worker, an opportunity is presented for some of the most telling comedy that the little Fine Arts star has yet achieved.

"The Little Brother," Enid Bennett's vehicle, tells the story of Jerry Ress, bright, lovable daughter of the east side, who acts as a home maker for her two brothers, and upon being convinced of the more desirable portion of a man's estate, dons trousers and becomes a "newsie" in order to make both ends meet. Miss Bennett is said to have created a character in Jerry that will not soon be forgotten.

"THE SECRET OF EVE" (Metro).

Metro Pictures Corp. will release February 26 "The Secret of Eve," a five-part feature screen play, with Mme. Petrova as star, written by Aaron Hoffman, directed by Perry Vokroff, and produced by Popular Plays and Players.

"The Secret of Eve" is replete with interesting and unusual features. It affords the star an opportunity to appear in four distinct characterizations. First she is seen as Eve in the Garden of Eden; next she is a gypsy woman; next a young Quakeress, and then a society woman, who finally gives up her purposeless life to devote her energies to unfortunate little children.

In "The Secret of Eve" Mme. Petrova is surrounded by a notable cast. The part of Robert Blair, the millionaire philanthropist, is played by William L. Hinckley. Little Rosa, the child who is blinded, is portrayed by Florence Moore, last seen with Edmund Breese in "The Weakness of Strength," and others are Edward Roseman, Laurie Mackin and George Morrell.

RIALTO WILL PLAY A THIRD BLUEBIRD.

Lynn F. Reynolds' production "Mutiny" will be the third Bluebird to be shown at S. L. Rothapfel's Rialto, either the last week in February or week of March 5. So well pleased was Director Rothapfel with the reception his audiences gave "The Mysterious Mrs. M." and "Polly Redhead" that he decided to continue showing such Bluebirds as he might select for pre-release at his theater. "Mutiny" will be distributed on the regular Bluebird program March 12 and will have Myrtle Gonzalez, Val Paul and George Hernandez as the featured players.

"GOD'S MAN" NEXT FROHMAN PRODUCTION.

Substantiating the assurance recently given by the Frohman Amusement Corp. that that concern would in the future offer to the exhibitors and exchange men of the country nothing but super-productions in motion pictures, announcement is made by President William L. Sherrill that the next offering of this corporation will be a nine-part picturization of the literary success of the present day, "God's Man," written by George Bronson Howard, one of the master minds of American fiction. It is a story which presents tremendous opportunities and great latitude for screen production.

The author has most thrillingly narrated the vicissitudes and trials of a college youth, the quagmires, the dark abyss, the degradation and despair arising through the tremor of New York's gay life until the ultimate coming of the dawn of righteousness. It is vivid depiction of New York in its most somber and gay moments; of its truth and hypocrisy and the pitfalls and underhand methods of its overrated Broadway—all of which go to make the great metropolis, New York, seem like a cosmopolitan enigma.

George Irving, the director of the Frohman success, "The Witching Hour," is again at the helm of production for "God's Man." Director Irving, as usual, has assembled a remarkable cast for the presentation of this extremely dramatic subject, and within a few days promises news of the signing of a contract with a prominent star of the theatrical stage and screen. It is expected that this pretentious picture will have its private trade showing in New York city in about three or four weeks.

SHERRILL CLOSES FOREIGN CONTRACTS.

Within the past week the Frohman Corporation has entered into contract with Bolton, Stewart Imperial Pictures, Ltd., of London, whereby that concern acquires the exclusive rights to all Frohman super-productions for the territory of Great Britain for the period of two years. President William L. Sherrill also concluded contracts with the Co-Operative Film Exchange, Ltd., of Australia, for the entire Frohman output for one year and with Joe Fisher of Cape Town, South Africa, for the exclusive rights to Frohman productions to the South African territory.

"THE FLYING TARGET" (Cub).

"The Flying Target," the Cub comedy release for the Mutual for March 8, evidences an ambitious undertaking in comedy production. Set in a western frontier town, it was necessary to build a big western street scene, a big dancing and gambling hall and other sets representing scenes to be found in a location of that nature. From this standpoint it is a big production, but the picture is big not only in that respect but from a comedy viewpoint as well. A large number of players take part in the picture, with the feature role played by George Ovey, and the more important parts handled by Ray Lincoln as the outlaw, M. J. McCarty as the head of the police, and Helen Gilmore as poor Jane. Milton H. Fahrney directed the picture.

Edgar Lewis Producing

Some Speculation as to How He Will Spend His Own Money—Charles Feature Abrams Helping Him.

SINCE Edgar Lewis is now producing pictures for himself there is a very natural curiosity among the motion picture fraternity in general and the State right and territorial buyers in particular, as to whether Mr. Lewis will spend his own money with the same freedom as he would if he were working on a salary basis. Will he try to retrench—will he be more lavish, or will he use the same level-headed ideas that heretofore have produced the exceptional results that he has achieved in his past performances, for instance, "The Great Divide," "The Nigger," "Samson," "The Bondman," and "The Barrier?"

It is the general belief that he will not cheapen his product in any way, as he has always been known as a "liberal" director, and the wise ones know he will not fall into the fatal trap of trying to make a cheap product.

While there has been some mystery surrounding his present movements it is known that he has been somewhere in the South for the past month, and that he took with him many high grade players, among whom are Mitchell Lewis, who became celebrated in a day as the creator of Poleon Doret, the French-Canadian in the screen version of "The Barrier"; Victor Sutherland (Lieutenant Burrell) in "The Barrier"; Hedda Nova, the young Russian actress whom he "discovered," and who played the juvenile lead under his direction in Anthony Kelly's inspirational drama, "The Light at Dusk"; and others whom he believes are of equal ability. The story is by Anthony Kelly, the foremost motion picture dramatist and adapter of to-day; it is a well known fact that Mr. Kelly demands real money in substantial quantity for his efforts.

E. C. Earle, his head photographer, has photographed all of Mr. Lewis' success of the past year, and as men of his calibre are scarce as hen's teeth he naturally draws one of the largest salaries paid for this line of work.

All in all, we think it safe to predict that Mr. Lewis' forthcoming productions will, if anything, be more carefully made, and, glancing at the list of talent enumerated above, necessarily more costly than any he has thus far made. Anyhow, it is a foregone conclusion that he will give us something worth while.

Charles Abrams, who is handling the distributing end of the business, reports that since "The Barrier"—which Mr. Lewis made—was shown, the demand for this producer's pictures is enormous. Mr. Abrams has cancelled many contracts to handle the Lewis productions, and finding it necessary to have more room for the new venture has taken over the offices in the Candler Building, formerly occupied by the Amalgamated Association.

M. & R. Film Exchange

Pacific Coast Theater Magnates, Entering Exchange Field, Buy H. Grossman's Program.

THE film situation on the Pacific coast is given a new and interesting twist through the organization of the M. & R. Film exchange, Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco. The presence in New York last week of Charles Rosenthal, Jr., explains that he is the "R" of the concern, the other letter standing for Emanuel Mayer. For many years both have been associated in the operation of a string of legitimate theaters in Californian cities. The chain includes the famous Alcazar, from the stage of which were seen the first efforts of some of the foremost stars of the legitimate.

Mr. Mayer, who is the nephew of David Belasco, has labored with Mr. Rosenthal in the building of legitimate theaters, and in later years they were among the first to raise fine edifices for motion pictures. Both are native San Franciscans and have spent practically all of their careers in puffing amusement.

At his hotel in New York Mr. Rosenthal announced that he had secured the territorial rights for the Pacific coast on the new program of H. Grossman, distributor. This is to embrace a substantial arrangement of varied releases, including the Flora Finch Comedies. A feature of the program is to be the monthly issue of one multiple-reel attraction, that will carry with it tremendous weight in the personnel of the producer and stars.

The advent in the exchange field of the M. & R. means a very important change in the film map of the Pacific coast. Heretofore Messrs. Mayer and Rosenthal have dealt with film exchanges in supplying their theaters, but Mr. Rosenthal says that they had been contemplating this move for a long time.

Mr. Rosenthal returns to the coast in a few days to take up actively the management of the film exchange.

NEW SERIES FOR BUSHMAN AND BAYNE.

Work on Metro's stupendous serial, "The Great Secret," in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are the stars, will end in about eighteen days. Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne, under the direction of Wm. Christy Cabanne, who adapted and directed "The Great Secret," will begin on a new series of five-reel productions. Five plays already have been chosen for this series. They will be of a type especially suited to the unusual talents of Mr. Bushman.

New General Film Subjects

Big Distributing Company Said to Be in Best Shape Ever to Please Patrons.

GENERAL Film Company was never in better shape to serve its exhibitors and patrons than at present. "The War," General's great series taken at the battle fronts of France by official British Government photographers, is having tremendous popularity. Branch exchanges of the company have been swamped with inquiries for them. The picture rights are owned by Official Government Pictures, Inc., and all profits from their showing are being given to needy war relief funds, and to support the American Ambulance.

In addition, early in March the two big Kalem series "The American Girl" and "A Daughter of Daring" will commence. The first series features Marin Sais, who astounds her audiences by her daring horsemanship. Frederick R. Bechdolt, the famous fiction writer, will write the stories. It is Mr. Bechdolt's first appearance as a scenario writer, and his first episode "The Black Rider of Tasajara" is a cleverly mysterious plot well developed. The second series features that fair "daughter of daring," Helen Gibson, who has so often risked her pretty neck to give the required thrill to her audience. In "In the Path of Peril," first episode of "A Daughter of Daring," Miss Gibson is called upon to do one of her most thrilling feats.

In addition to these series, General Film's Vitagraph series of two part dramas, featuring Lillian Walker will soon be issued. The first subject will be "Dimples' Baby," and will show Miss Walker to advantage as a young girl whose maternal instinct brings her great happiness.

One other new series which bids fair to become tremendously popular is on General Film's Vitagraph program. This is a series of film versions of stories by that master of all short story writers, O. Henry. "Past One at Rooney's," a story of O. Henry's beloved—"Four Million"—will be the first subject. It deals with the people and places that he loved above all else—the scenes and characters of New York's lower East Side. The hero is a gangster, his lady love a street-walker, the scene of their romance is Rooney's dance hall.

"THE BARRICADE" (Metro).

"The Barricade" is the March 5 release of Metro Pictures Corporation. Charming Mabel Taliaferro is the star of this five-act feature screen drama, directed by Edwin Carewe for Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., and photographed by John Arnold.

"The Barricade" is a vital story of society and the stock market. How "big business" can quickly make or break a man is graphically shown, and is illustrated in the case of Amos Merrill, who fails, and of the Westerner, John Cook, who succeeds beyond his wildest dreams. Thrilling scenes are shown of operations on the "curb" and in New York's stock exchange, when fortunes are lost and won in a moment. The apparent pandemonium that reigns on "the floor" when excitement is at its height has never been more faithfully depicted than in "The Barricade."

In this Metro wonderplay Miss Taliaferro has the part of Hope Merrill, daughter of the man who is ruined. Miss Taliaferro's splendid talents enable her to do full justice to the part of Hope Merrill. Clifford Bruce, last seen on the Metro program as star in "The Devil at His Elbow," has the part of the Western millionaire, John Cook, and Frank Currier, a favorite Metro player, is Amos Merrill. Robert Rendel, an English player brought to this country by the late Charles Frohman, plays the part of Gerald Hastings.

TWO SUBJECTS IN UNIVERSAL FIVE-REELER.

A distinct feature novelty will be presented by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company early in March, when there will be released on their regular program service a five-reel Red Feather production which will be made up of two separate photo-dramas. This five-reel combination will consist of a three-act drama in which Cleo Madison, Molly Malone, Roberta Wilson and Jack Nelson are the principals, and a two-act Western comedy drama with Neal Hart, Edward Hearn and Janet Eastman in the leading roles.

This will be known as the Red Feather Double Attraction, and is an important step inaugurated by the Universal officials in giving the public a five-reel entertainment of two subjects instead of restricting it to one subject padded out with unnecessary details and pretty atmosphere. Both of the subjects are suitable in themselves as complete five-act features, but the policy of the Universal is to afford the maximum entertainment in the minimum time.

"THE VANISHING WOMAN" (Essanay).

A sharp contrast between the old-fashioned woman and the modern woman is drawn in this production—one of the strongest in which Essanay's stock company has yet appeared. This tensely dramatic photoplay is a unit of the "Is Marriage Sacred?" series and, as in previous units of this series, has to do with matrimonial, home-destroying complications. The cast includes such photoplay favorites as Marguerite Clayton, Edward Arnold, Sydney Ainsworth, Lillian Drew and Thomas Commerford. The story has been well written and well staged, with excellent photography. "The Vanishing Woman" has a screen time of 29 minutes. The General Film Service is handling its release.

New Essanay Series

"Do Children Count?" Is the Title—To Be Done in Twelve Installments With a Screen Time of Thirty Minutes Each.

GEORGE K. SPOOR, president of Essanay, announces a new series of short dramatic productions, the general title of which will be "Do Children Count?" Essanay's cycle of matrimonial complications, "Is Marriage Sacred?" has met with tremendous popularity among exhibitors and photoplay patrons alike. This cycle, however, will be concluded early in April. It is to provide a suitable substitute that "Do Children Count?" will be offered.

The two series will have no connection other than that the latter will simply develop further the problems of matrimony. "Do Children Count?" will take up the problems arising from the advent of children in the home.

Charles Mortimer Peck, author of the marriage photoplays, has been secured to write the forthcoming series. There will be twelve in all, each one to have a screen time of approximately thirty minutes. Each will be a separate, distinct photodrama in itself, and if the exhibitor desires, can be booked and run apart from the others.

Little Mary V. McAlister, Essanay's celebrated child star, will be featured in each production. This little girl, though only six years old, has won a place in the hearts of hosts of photoplay patrons. She has developed a remarkable dramatic talent which will fit excellently into the roles for which she is cast in "Do Children Count?"

Among the recent feature productions in which she has appeared were Henry B. Walthall's current drama, "Little Shoes," "The Little Missionary," and many others. A capable stock company has been formed to support the diminutive star.

Underlying these problem plays will be a direct appeal for the children in the home. For that reason the productions should prove of interest to parents as well as children. Each one will have a separate title, as in the "Is Marriage Sacred?" dramas and the Black Cat features. The General film service will handle the releases.

Several powerful dramatic offerings are ready for release under the "Is Marriage Sacred?" title. "The Extravagant Bride," to be presented February 24, presents the problem growing out of the marriage of a rich girl, used to every luxury, to a youth of moderate means. "The Vanishing Woman," for release March 3, draws a contrast between the old fashioned woman and the college girl of today, whose modern ideas get her into trouble. "The Pulse of Madness," to be offered March 10, reveals a young woman who stops at nothing to win the man she loves.

One of the most novel ideas ever put into a short production is offered in "The Five Dollar Bill," a Black Cat feature, to be presented March 6. It demonstrates how that much money can bring happiness, despite the high cost of living and loving. "Aladdin Up-To-Date," to be released March 13, is another decidedly interesting photodrama of this series.

"HEALTH RESORT"—NEXT CHAPLIN.

Charles S. Chaplin, having entirely recovered from the injury received from a falling lamp post during the filming of his last comedy, "Easy Street," has started work on the tenth of his funny pictures. This latest child of the Chaplin brain is entitled "Health Resort" and gives Mr. Chaplin an entirely new angle on which to hang his inimitable funny business. "Health Resort" will be released in March.

LANGSTADT-MEYER GAS SET.

The engraving shows a direct connected gasoline driven generating set which is being manufactured by Langstadt-Meyer Co., of Appleton, Wis., for furnishing electric current to those people outside of town and city where electric power from a central station is not available.

The machine is low speed, which means long life and low maintenance cost, medium weight, compact, and clean. They are especially adapted for furnishing current to theaters situated in small towns where power from a central station is not available. The current supplied enables the owner to operate fans, house lights, and projectors.

An experienced engineer is not necessary, as anyone familiar with the operation of automobiles or marine engines is competent to give the units what little care is needed.

The special feature is the automatic gasoline feed system which forces fuel into the auxiliary tank of one quart capacity from a 60 or 100 gallon main tank buried in the ground outside the building. Fuel flows from the auxiliary tank to the carburetor by gravity. This installation complies with the insurance requirements, as there is never more than one quart of gasoline inside the building at any one time.

These units are built in two sizes, 4KW and 5KW capacity, prices and specifications of which may be obtained from your regular dealer or from the factory, Langstadt-Meyer Company, Appleton, Wisconsin.

Strong Pathe Program

Feature, Two Serials, Comedy, Fashion, Scenic, Cartoon and News Films Make Big Showing for March 4.

A GOLD Rooster Play, two serials, a one-reel comedy, a split reel fashion and scenic, a split reel cartoon and scenic and two issues of the Pathe News make up Pathe's strong program for the week of March 4, 1917.

"Her Beloved Enemy" is the Gold Rooster play produced by Thanhouser, featuring Doris Grey and Wayne Arey, supported by J. H. Gilmour and Gladys Leslie. "Her Beloved Enemy" was written by Philip Lonergan. It is a comedy-melodrama with many of the human touches that characterize the work of Agnes C. Johnston, who is also a Thanhouser photoplaywright.

The advertising matter available through Pathe Exchanges includes one and six sheets and two styles of three sheets, a banner a window card, photographic lobby display and heralds.

"The Flag Despoiler" is the fourteenth episode of "Pearl of the Army" produced by Astra, starring Pearl White. This chapter moves at a fast pace as the story reaches its completion. The episode deals with the attempt of America's enemies to haul down the Stars and Stripes from the Capitol and Pearl's successful campaign against them. In this episode the identity of the Silent Menace is disclosed and the interest stimulated in the love story of the next episode.

The eighth chapter of "Patria," entitled "Red Night" takes its place in the program. The serial written by Louis Joseph Vance features Mrs. Vernon Castle, the best known and best dressed woman in America.

This episode shows a strike at the Channing munition works with Patria bringing it to an end by acceding to the men's demands on the condition that they undergo military training; an explosion which is a reproduction of the Black Tom disaster in New York harbor, and the blowing up of a ship at sea with Patria and Donald clinging to the mast.

"Deep Dyed Villainy" is the title of a Mittenhal comedy in one reel. Heinie stung by Cupid's darts is some gay Lothario. After many adventures he and Louie learn that when a man's married his troubles begin. There is a one-sheet on this picture.

The twenty-first release of popular Florence Rose Fashions is entitled "Morning Hours." It is on the same reel with Picturesque Catalonia, a scenic gem showing the town of Ripol in Catalonia, Spain.

"A Hot Time in the Gym" is the title of George MacManus' "Bringing Up Father" cartoon, animated by Edward Grinham. This is on the same reel with "Government Pets of the Yellowstone Park," a very attractive scenic.

Hearst Pathe News No. 20 and No. 21 round out the program.

No Slip-Ups of "Stingaree"

Five Two-Part Episodes Completed—Release Date Will Not Be Set Until End of Series Is in Sight.

"WE regard any failure of ours to deliver prints of Kalem subjects to all of the General Film exchanges in time to fill first run dates as a breach of good faith," says a representative of the Kalem Company. "Unavoidable delays will occur; bad weather can disrupt the best laid plans, likewise negatives can be delayed in transit, but most of the delays to which exhibitors are subjected are chargeable to a lack of co-operation between studio and factory. It is this kind that we have by hard work practically abolished."

This official went on to say that the Kalem Company has received numerous requests to set a date for the release of the further adventures of "Stingaree," written by E. W. Hornung, and featuring True Boardman, but that it had determined to keep faith with the exhibitors and would therefore make no such announcement until the entire series was practically finished.

Five two-part episodes have been taken and are now undergoing a process of trimming and titling and the company is working on the sixth "Stingaree" adventure. This might seem, on first thought, to be a safe margin upon which to begin releasing the new series, but that is not the Kalem way.

With regard to "The American Girl" and "A Daughter of Daring," the new series productions to be released the first of March, the same policy is in effect. There are never less than three episodes of each on hand in the New York offices and these are edited well in advance of their delivery dates.

VOLCANIC ERUPTION IN HEARST-PATHE NEWS.

What are undoubtedly the most remarkable pictures of a volcanic eruption ever taken are shown in the Hearst-Pathe News No. 13. Kilauea, the famous Hawaiian volcano, is again in eruption, and the Hearst-Pathe news cameraman, standing on the brink of the crater, took many scenes which defy description. Among them are several of a lake of lava so violently agitated by tremendous forces that it resembles a sea in a storm, even to the point of breaking against the surrounding rocks in molten spray. The cameraman in taking these pictures gave an exhibition of nerve which is worthy of the highest commendation. The pictures will create a sensation wherever shown.

Marguerite Clark Heads Paramount

This Time in "The Fortunes of Fifi"—Many Novelties on the Program or the Week of February 26.

MARGUERITE CLARK whose success in "Miss George Washington" and "Snow White," has been widely acclaimed, will make her next appearance on the Paramount Program the week of February 26, when she will be seen in the Famous Players production of "The Fortunes of Fifi," written by Molly Elliot Seawell.

Since the inception of the Paramount Program, two years ago, no productions have created such sensations as those in which Miss Clark recently starred. Her "Snow White" has been heralded from coast to coast as one of the biggest money-getters that exhibitors have ever had, while "Miss George Washington" is a close second from a box office standpoint. Both these productions have compelled hundreds of exhibitors to advertise in front of their theaters on the days the productions were shown, "Standing Room Only."

In "Snow White," Miss Clark played the role of the delightful little princess whose faith in her feathered friends brought her safely through many perils. "Fifi," though equally charming, is quite another character. She is a little minx of a French actress whose colossal conceit makes her believe that she is a great actress despite the failure of the first company with which she becomes connected.

"The Fortunes of Fifi," which was directed by Robert G. Vignola, includes in the supporting cast, William Sorelle, John Sanpolis, Yvonne Chevalier, Kate Lester, Jean Gauthier, and J. K. Murray.

The other five reel feature on the Paramount program for this week will be "Those Without Sin," a Lasky production in which Blanche Sweet plays the leading role, and in which she is supported by Thomas Forman, Chas. H. Geldert, James Neill, Maym Kelso, Mabel Van Buren, Dorothy Abril, Guy Oliver, Chas. Ogle, Edna Wilson, Billy Jacobs, Mrs. Lewis McCord, Jane Wolff and Mrs. Smith. The production was directed by Marshall Neilan, and was taken from the story of George Du Bois Proctor and Thomas Geraghty, while the scenario was written by Harvey Thew.

This production gives Miss Sweet an exceptional and unusual opportunity to display her many inimitable characteristics, and in the character of Melanite Landry, a Richmond girl, prior to the time of the War of the Rebellion, she has a character which fits her in every particular.

Surrounding the program for this week are three exceptional short reel features: the 55th edition of the Paramount-Bray-Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen, in which four very interesting subjects are dealt with; the 56th of the series of "Weekly Trips Around the World," personally conducted by Burton Holmes, in which he takes his fellow travelers to visit exquisite Lake Louise, and a Klever Comedy entitled "Some Doctor," in which Victor Moore plays the title role.

In the 55th edition of the magazine-on-the-screen, Paramount's theater patrons will have a brand new laugh in store for them, for in this release there will be shown for the first time the Quacky Doodle family, for the amusement of the old and young, the family being made up of Quacky Doodles, Danny Doodles and the little Doodles, these having been conceived by Johnny B. Gruelle, who attained international fame when he won the thousand dollar prize offered by the N. Y. Herald for the best comic series of drawings. These creatures were his creation, and they will appear regularly in the Pictographs in connection with "Colonel Heeza Liar" and "Bobby Bumps."

"How Cathedral Windows are Made" is a particularly interesting subject which is treated in this screen magazine, because when once you know how the famous windows of Westminster Abbey were made, and from whence comes the superb jewels and ruby glass in the windows of Notre Dame de Paris, one will look with great respect on the broken soda bottles in their dust bin and greet with joy, the crash of their best berry-bowl, as it splinters on the hard floor of the kitchenette.

Another interesting screen subject, edited by Waldemar Kaempffert of the Popular Science Monthly, is included in this release, entitled "Putting Rivers to Work" and depicts some of the remarkable undertakings by the U. S. Geological Survey Department, who are on the constant lookout for streams and rivers with sufficient flow to turn the wheels of industry. The concluding subject of this release is an amusing one, under the caption of "Two Boobs and a Manatee," which shows two fishermen, who, bent on capturing a swordfish, capture a sea cow or manatee.

A continuous roar of laughter will be found from beginning to end in the latest Klever Comedy, "Some Doctor," to be released by Paramount, February 26, in which the "Some Doctor" is no other than Victor Moore, who, in the title role of an M. D. after he has invented a new contrivance for the healing of all diseases, succeeds in getting himself in a hundred and one complications which not only nearly cause him to lose his entire professional business, but causes great consternation in his community.

Burton Holmes, the world's greatest traveler, will release this week, his 56th "Little Journey," which he has been conducting for Paramount, taking his fellow travelers to exquisite Lake Louise in Canada.

The loveliest beauty spot of all Canada is, without doubt,

Lake Louise. From Banff, Mr. Holmes asks you to go with him through a scenic wonderland, through picturesque canyons, overshadowed by snow-capped mountain peaks, from one of the most complete of up-to-date hotels of today to the lovely chateau which is so placed on the banks of Lake Louise, as to give to the tourist the most perfect outlook. On the way from Banff, you will encounter a shower followed by a rainbow, one of the few absolutely genuine rainbows ever caught by a motion picture camera.

In addition to Lake Louise, Mr. Holmes takes you to Lake Agnes, Mirror Lake, and to Lake O'Hara and Moraine Lake in the Valley of the Ten Peaks, and on other days, up delightful mountain trails to the lakes in the clouds—literally up into cloudland—beside following a real Swiss guide over the surface, and to the ice cave of Victoria Glacier. By this delightful easy chair journey Mr. Holmes will take you to the spot from whence he will begin, one week later, a wonderful climb through the Yoho Valley, another of Canada's celebrated beauty spots.

Some New Fox Players

Several Popular Screen Artists Added to Forces—Irving Cummings Makes Debut.

WILLIAM FOX announces the acquisition of several new players this week. Probably the best known of them all is Larry McLean, the big catcher who was the mainstay of the New York National League team a short time since and who will be with Christy Mathewson's Cincinnati Reds during the coming season. McLean will be seen in a small part in William Nigh's initial Fox production. Appearing with him will be Walter Bennett, one time of the Pittsburgh nine.

Ben L. Taggart, with many Selig pictures, and former "opposite" for Irene Fenwick, with Kleine, has been engaged to play as chief in support of Valeska Suratt. Mr. Taggart, thirty-one years old, probably qualifies as the youngest veteran of the Boer War. Mr. Taggart is a Canadian, and ran away from his home in Ottawa to fight with the English forces in South Africa. After the cessation of hostilities, he was selected as one of the special guard of honor which flanked the late King Edward VII. during his coronation services.

The complete cast has now been picked for the Virginia Pearson subject. It includes, besides the star, Irving Cummings, Nora Cecil, Grace Henderson, Nellie Slattery, Alex K. Shannon, G. De Varney, Charles Craig, Lillian De Vere and Ted Griffin. Miss Cecil, Miss Henderson, Miss Slattery, Miss De Vere and Mr. Griffin are all new to Fox Films. Mr. Craig was in "The Serpent," "Where Love Leads," and "Under Two Flags." Mr. Shannon appeared in "Daredevil Kate," "Ambition," and "The Battle of Life." Mr. De Varney is in "The Tiger Woman," released on Feb. 19.

Irving Cummings has his debut as a Fox photoplayer in "Sister Against Sister," which is scheduled for March 5. He has the role opposite Virginia Pearson. In the company are Walter Law, Maud Hill, Calla Torres, William and Archie Battista and Jane and Katherine Lee.

William Nigh's aggregation of Fox players will go to Tuxedo, N. Y., early next week to complete the outdoor work on his screen drama. The picture will be completed within a fortnight.

Out in the Pacific Coast Studios some big "sets" have been erected for use in various films under way. An enormous ballroom setting was built in the Hollywood plant for the final scenes in the George Walsh subject. On the wind-swept rocks of the San Fernando Valley near Chatsworth, Cal., a great castle has been raised two hundred feet above the plain. Leading down from it are two arms of stairs, seventy in each arm, which descend in horseshoe shape. Beneath are fifty houses, not two of which are painted in the same colors. The effect from the pinnacle of the hill is that of a gorgeously colorful rainbow. The whole set represents the skill and genius of George Grenier, Fox technical director in the West Coast studios. Incidentally, it represents also an outlay of almost $25,000.

"THE GENTLE INTRUDER" A MONEY GETTER.

With a star of the drawing power of Mary Miles Minter, a story of real heart interest handled with the skill and genius of James Kirkwood, and made into a screen drama by the aid of an excellently chosen supporting cast, the release of "The Gentle Intruder," Mary Miles Minter's next Mutual Star production, the week of February 19, will make available to the exhibitor a drama of exceptional box office value.

As "Sylvia" Mary Miles Minter, with her sunny curls on the top of her head—a grown up heroine for the first time—has unprecedented opportunity for real acting in this picture. Her sweet personality dominates the picture and makes a happy ending for all, when, at the close, the true state of affairs is exposed.

In the leading juvenile role opposite Miss Minter is George Fisher, an actor of recognized ability. Eugenie Forde as a proud social climber; Harvey Clarke as her husband, a conscience tortured lawyer; Marie Van Tassel as an invalid spinster, Franklin Ritchie and George Periolat add much to the worth of the play.

"The Gentle Intruder," Miss Minter declares, is her favorite of all the photoplays in which she has appeared.

Mutual Program

Marjorie Rambeau Heads the Week of February 26 With "The Greater Woman"—Many Good Specialties.

MARJORIE RAMBEAU, celebrated stage star, will make her first screen appearance in "The Greater Woman" on February 26. This is the first of a series of pictures which will be released by the Mutual Film Corporation starring Miss Rambeau. This feature, produced by the Frank Powell Producing Corp., is a picturization of the play by the same title by Algernon Boyesen, and is the first of Mr. Boyesen's works to reach the screen.

Supporting Miss Rambeau in "The Greater Woman" are Aubrey Beattie, Hassan Musselli, Frank Ford, Sara Haidez, Josephine Park, Margaret Grey, H. G. Patte and Louis Stern.

On February 26 also will be released the seventh of the "Adventures of Shorty Hamilton" series, "Shorty Hooks a Loan Shark," in which Shorty and his cowboy friends find themselves in the toils of a money lender. It is one thing to have someone handy from whom you can borrow money to pay your gambling debts, but quite another when the day comes around to pay up. Shorty and the boys do not quite dare kill the loan shark, but when they get through with him there is not much left. They decide they have done almost too good a job and so put him in a coffin while he is unconscious and ship him to New York. But Anita Keller arrives just then looking for this same shark, who is wanted by the government, so the money lender is rescued from the coffin only to be placed under arrest.

No. 10 of the Mutual-Niagara series "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters," is entitled "Taking Chances." Helen Green plays the lead in this picture, the story of which tells of a pretty southern girl who attempts to run her father's country newspaper after his death. She makes a failure of this venture, but is a success in a position as reporter for a big metropolitan newspaper. In her first assignment she not only captures a whole gang of criminals, but her skilful handling of the big story also wins her a husband.

George Ovey, Arthur Munns, Clair De Witt, Clair Alexander, and Helen Gilmore furnish all the fun in "Jerry's Romance," a one-reel comedy, released March 1. George Ovey, as Jerry, has to go through the terrible agony of attending the wedding of the girl who has rejected him. He does everything wrong during the wedding party, and also, later, when he attempts to help the husband out in some of the difficulties of married life.

The American contributes two short dramas, "Calamity Ann's Protege," released March 2, in which Louise Lester and J. Warren Kerrigan have the leads, and "Cupid and a Brick," ready March 3, with J. Warren Kerrigan and Jack Richardson playing the principal parts.

In "A Rummy Romance," scheduled for March 4, Paddy McGuire is seen as a country rube and Lillian Hamilton plays the role of his sweetheart. While Paddy is trying to scrape together the thousand dollars which the girl's father says he must possess before they can marry, his sweetheart elopes with a city chap who proves to be a crook. Going to the city to rescue her, Paddy is relieved of his money and then thrown in the cistern and the water turned on. Lillian manages to rescue him, however, before the water becomes too deep, and marries him before any more accidents occur.

"Tours Around the World" No. 17, released February 27, shows Vienna, one of the most picturesque cities in Europe. The pictures include the cake market, the flower market, the Hochstrahlbrunnen, one of the most beautiful fountains in the world; the Schwarzenberg palace, the City Hall, the House of Parliament, the Grand opera house and Emperor Franz Joseph's Votive church. The Gota Elf, Sweden's most important river, connecting Lake Venern with the Kattegat, is also shown. The scenery is typical of Sweden's waterways, and particularly beautiful are the pictures of the Island of Hissingen and the locks around the falls at Trollhattan. Toledo, Spain, situated upon a rugged granite promontory, is also pictured. Of particular interest are the magnificent Gothic cathedral, the fortified bridge at Alcantara and the citadel of Alcazar. Other interesting scenes are the former hospital of Santa Cruz, the baths of Caba and St. Martin's bridge.

On February 28 comes No. 77 of "See America First," with scenes from the battlefields of Chickamauga and Chattanooga. Transferred to the screen from Chickamauga are Vineyard Field, Poe Field and Kelly Field, Brotherton House, Snodgrass Hill and Snodgrass House. There are pictures of the Wisconsin Cavalry memorial and the Second Minnesota monument. The Battle of Chattanooga consisted of three separate engagements—Orchard Knob, Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge. The pictures of the battlefields include where General U. S. Grant had his headquarters, where the Battle Above the Clouds was fought, and a distant view of Chattanooga from Lookout Mountain.

On the same reel is a Gaumont Kartoon Komic, "The Elusive Idea," animated for the screen by Harry Palmer. The pictures tell of the tribulations of an artist in capturing an idea suitable for illustrating.

On February 28 also is released the Mutual Weekly, the news film.

Reel Life No. 44 is scheduled for March 4. This takes up the subjects of "Strange Industries of the Arabs," "Conch Artistry," "Will This Cure Cancer?," "Criminal Cuteness" and "Making Rubber Shoes."

Thirty-One Universals

Big U Program for Week of February 26 Is Full of Meat.

THIRTY-ONE varied and interesting reels ranging from the five part Red Feather feature to the one act comedies and single reel educational are offered on the Universal program for the week of February 25. This is an exceptionally strong program affording all types of motion picture story presented by excellent casts and produced without regard for expense in obtaining the desired results.

The leading feature of the week is the five act Red Feather drama, "The Girl and the Crisis." William V. Mong is the author and producer of this feature, in which Dorothy Davenport plays the leading role supported by Charles Perley, William V. Mong, Harry Holden, Alfred Hollingsworth and Forrest Seaberry. "The Girl and the Crisis," is a stirring drama of love, finance and politics and is replete with dramatic situations relieved by scenes of light comedy. It will be released on Monday, February 26, on which day will appear the Nestor comedy "A Million in Sight," produced by L. W. Chaudet from the scenario of Bess Meredyth and story of Virginia Kirtley with Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts.

"Mary From America," a three part comedy drama released as a Gold Seal, is the feature offering of Tuesday, February 27. This is an unusually interesting photoplay made from the original story of Elizabeth R. Carpenter, by Maude Grange and produced by Douglas Gerrard. Ruth Clifford and Douglas Gerrard head the cast which includes such well known players as Francis Marion, Margaret Whistler, Harry Crane and Percy Challenger. The other release of this date is the Victor comedy drama, "A Novel Romance," with Flora Parker De Haven and Paul Byron furnishing most of the fun.

"Spikes' Bizzy Bike," an L-Ko two-reeler is the chief release of Wednesday, February 28. This is one of the funniest L-Ko's of the year with Dan Russell, Marjorie Ray and Vin Moore adding to the gaiety of the nations. The regular issue of the Universal Animated Weekly comes out on Wednesday.

"The Rented Man," a Rex two-act drama with Claire McDowell, M. K. Wilson and Francis Marion in the leading roles, is the chief offering Thursday, March 1. The story is by Annie Hamilton Donnell and was scenarioized and produced under the direction of Ruth Ann Baldwin. This is a decidedly novel human interest drama in which Francis Marion gives a splendid performance. The Victor comedy, "They Were Four," with Neal Hart, and the Imp drama, "An Hour of Terror," with Matt Moore and Jane Gail, are other Thursday offerings.

The Universal Screen Magazine No. 8, which will appear Friday, March 2, is alive with interesting subjects. Beginning this week the Screen Magazine will be issued weekly instead of twice a month. The Big U two-act war drama, "A Battle of Wits," featuring Harold Lockwood, and the Imp drama, "Evil Hands," with Edith Roberts and Edward Hearn in the leading roles, will also be released on Friday.

On Saturday, March 3, the Bison two-act Western drama, "The Tornado," with Jack Ford in the lead, will appear. The Joker comedy, "Passing the Grip," with William Franey and Gale Henry, and the Laemmle drama, "Undoing Evil," featuring King Baggot, are other Saturday releases.

The Imp underworld drama, "Tangled Threads," with Lorrimer Johnston, the Big U drama, "Buried Alive," with Wallace Reid and Dorothy Davenport, and the Powers split reel, "Mr. Fuller Pep—An Old Bird Pays Him a Visit," a comedy cartoon, and the Dorsey educational, the Land of Buddha, are the Sunday releases.

The tenth episode of the Universal super serial, "The Purple Mask," entitled "The House of Mystery," carries Grace Cunard and Francis Ford through more harrowing adventures.

"MAX WANTS A DIVORCE" (Essanay).

Max Linder is in the midst of the production of his second comedy, "Max Wants a Divorce." The story has to do with Max's flirtatious disposition. He has hardly left the altar rail before his eye rests upon a chic young lady sitting in the front pew at the wedding. Arriving at their honeymoon apartment, Max and his bride, both still in their wedding clothes, began their "life's battle." Having thoroughly wrecked the apartment, baby grand piano, etc., the two enter peace negotiations and it is agreed that Max shall get a divorce at once. The plan is that Max shall compromise himself and his wife shall rush in with detectives and thus get the evidence. The chic young person of the church pew is decided upon as the "other woman." Max engages an apartment for the purpose of the plot, and then invites the c. y. p. to meet him there. Unfortunately both Max and the "other woman" in going to the apartment get mixed and enter the private sanatorium of Dr. Squirrel, specialist in "nuts," across the hallway. They are promptly rushed into padded cells with a score of lunatics. Max believes his fair companion really is crazy, and she believes he is crazy. Each is off the other for good. Then Max's bride and the detectives arrive and also mistake the apartment. They likewise are rushed into the "dippy" cell and the little party is complete. But Max is so joyous over having escaped from the crazy woman's clutches, and the latter ditto, that he promises his wife "never again" in flirting.

Kalem Companies Busy

Several Serials, Ham Comedies and Incidental Subjects Keep Things Going at Los Angeles and Jacksonville.

A PERIOD of bustling activity has settled down upon the Kalem forces in Southern California. It is pretty equally divided between the production of episodes of "The American Girl," "A Daughter of Daring," the further adventures of "Stingaree" and the Ham Comedies.

The quarters at Glendale have taken on an air of perpetual motion. What with the enlarged force of carpenters, masons, plumbers and workmen employed on the new enclosed studio and the large number of extras the directors are demanding for their pictures there is scarcely breathing space for the stars or parking space for their cars.

James W. Horne, who is directing Marin Sais and supporting company in "The American Girl" series, recently staged a raid on a Glendale bank and carried off five thousand dollars in gold while the cashier stood meekly by. Horne had a guard of picked cowboys and has promised to return the money after he has completed "The Golden Eagle Trail," a future episode of the series.

Ham and Bud have had their hands full handling a mob of Mexicans who were engaged to portray the roles of spectators at a comedy bull fight. Glendale offered better facilities for handling this picture than Hollywood and so the arena was built on the newly acquired Glendale land. When the cousins of Villa found that they were parties to a burlesque of their national pastime they struck on the spot, and it required the combined wiles of the entire studio force to make them see it through.

Frank Clark, the noted character actor, who was with Selig for eight years, plays an important part in one of the new "Stingarees." It is anticipated that he will continue in True Boardman's support indefinitely.

Frederick R. Bechdolt, the author of "The American Girl" stories, is so delighted with Glendale that he has rented a bungalow near the Kalem studio and will spend the major portion of his time on locations with the company. Mrs. Bechdolt has also become quite an ardent fan and is anxious to pose, a request which will be granted whenever she is ready.

Phil Lang, scenario chief, while en route to the studio a few days ago in a hired auto, was precipitated to the roadway when the machine he was in collided with another. Beyond some temporary damage to his clothing he came out of the wreck as unharmed as any of the characters he has devised stunts for—and that's saying a lot.

Down in Jacksonville, Florida, Robert Ellis is planning to introduce a new character into the "Grant, Police Reporter" series—a Master Mind, crippled in body but possessed of the cunning of a Sherlock Holmes, although diverted to criminal channels. He will play the role himself as well as direct the succeeding episodes of this popular series of newspaper stories that feature George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby, and are written by Robert Welles Ritchie.

"HELL MORGAN'S GIRL" (Bluebird Special).

Having found an attraction that meets requirements as a special feature, Bluebird will release "Hell Morgan's Girl," March 5, independent of the program. The feature will be handled along State right lines by Bluebird exchanges in quite the same manner "The Eagle's Wings" was circulated by the same firm last December.

"Hell Morgan's Girl" tells a sensational story that leads up to climaxing episodes in the San Francisco earthquake and fire. Dorothy Phillips is the star of the occasion, with Lon Chaney and William Stowell her principal support. Joseph De Grasse directed the feature from Ida May Park's scenario which was based on a story by Harvey Gates entitled "On the Wrong Side of Paradise."

Frisco's Barbary Coast is the location of a great majority of the episodes, the interior of "Hell" Morgan's dance hall and saloon furnishing the dominant scenes. There is a big scene in an artist's studio, as well. But the climax which comes with the earthquake and attendant fire has been made thrilling and realistic, as the principal sensation of the five-act melodrama.

The story ends with a reproduction of scenes at the Presidio, whence thousands fled for safety and succor in the days immediately following the earthquake, nearly eleven years ago. Great throngs are shown in this refuge where the strands of the story center in the concluding episode.

WORK ON GEO. M. COHAN PRODUCTION HELD UP.

Work on the initial George M. Cohan Artcraft production, "Broadway Jones," had to be suspended, due to the fact that practically all the principals in the cast were temporarily blinded from the powerful lights used in the big Knickerbocker Hotel lobby set. The first to become afflicted was George M. Cohan, who had to be led from the studio, and journeyed to Atlantic City to join his wife and children for a short rest. He is rapidly recovering and expects to be back at the studio in a few days. Marguerite Snow, who plays opposite the star, Crawford Kent and Ida Darling were among those compelled to leave the studio, but it is expected that they will be able to resume work shortly.

"SPIRIT OF ROMANCE" TO STAR VIVIAN MARTIN.

Vivian Martin, who scored such a tremendous success in the recent Pallas-Paramount adaptation of G. Vere Tyler's popular story, "The Wax Model," is the star of "The Spirit of Romance," which was written especially for her by George Hopkins. It is scheduled for release by Paramount on March 22.

Though no special claims are made for "The Spirit of Romance" as a spectacular picture, as a matter of fact some of the settings which were used represent a tremendous value—for instance, after Abby-Lou becomes the beneficiary of the supposedly late lamented Joseph Snow, the furniture which was procured for her bedroom is an elaborately enameled Venetian set which was valued at twelve thousand dollars. It was loaned to the producers by one of the wealthiest citizens of Los Angeles. There is another extremely elaborate and expensive set used in a ballroom scene which forms the climax of the picture. It is one of the largest and most elaborately decorated sets ever erected in the Pallas studio.

In the cast supporting Miss Martin there are some of the best known names on the screen, among them the popular Colin Chase, Herbert Standing, George Fisher, John Burton and Elinor Hancock. The production was staged under the direction of E. Mason Hopper.

NEW ENID BENNETT VEHICLE.

"One of the most delightful stores that has been attempted at the Ince studio in months," is the verdict of those who have read the scenario and looked on at the rehearsal scenes of the new starring vehicle that C. Gardner Sullivan has written for Enid Bennett's third appearance on the Triangle program under Ince auspices. Miss Bennett will take the part of a little daughter of the rich. In fact, her family is so very wealthy that its members are viewed with suspicion, servility and awe.

Naturally enough, the child has grown up in such an atmosphere with a reputation for snobbishness. And she is in a fair way of becoming impossible because of her loneliness and isolation. She is sent to a fashionable finishing school by her parents, but there her reputation follows her, and in spite of her shy and pathetic efforts to fraternize with her fellow students, she is virtually ostracized.

How she finally overcomes the obstacles that stand in her way of being her own natural, affectionate self add unique interest to a story of genuine charm. The assurance is given that C. Gardner Sullivan has turned out a worthy successor to such well known hits as "Home," "Plain Jane" and "The Bugle Call."

FRIEDMAN ENTERPRISES, INC., HANDLE "A MORMON MAID."

Benjamin Friedman, one of the foremost exchange men in the country and a prominent figure in film circles in the north-west, has recently organized a company to be known as Friedman Enterprises, Inc., incorporated for $250,000. The corporation headquarters are at 923 Longacre Bldg., New York city, and Hiller & Wilk, Inc., are the representatives for the company.

The purpose of this concern is to handle the larger film productions in the open market. The first of these will be shown at the Strand theater, New York, Wednesday morning, February 14. It is entitled "A Mormon Maid" and is a powerful photodrama of early Mormon days. The picture is five reels in length and presents Mae Murray and Hobart Bosworth in the leading roles.

WARREN COMPLETES CAST.

With the acquisition of Harry Benham, formerly of Than-houser and the "Million Dollar Mystery," and Theodore Frie-bus, known the country over as one of the best stock actors, Edward Warren has completed his cast of principals for his production now known by the title, "The Transgressors." The cast lines up as follows: Walter Hampden, Charlotte Ives, Marie Shotwell, Sheldon Lewis, Harry Benham, and Theodore Frie-bus. It is one of the most expensive cast of players ever assembled for a single production.

Work has been going forward on Mr. Warren's production rapidly. A big bazaar scene built at an expenditure of several thousand dollars will be one of the many big and sensational features of this big picture. After studio work will have been completed the company will go south for exterior settings.

MME. BLACHE ADAPTING STORY FOR ART DRAMA.

Madam Blaché, the producer of those Art Dramas which are released by the U. S. Amusement Corporation, is at work at the present time scenarioizing "Nantas," the celebrated novel written by Emile Zola, the eminent French writer. Although the book has been translated into English, as well as into almost every other modern language, Madam Blaché is basing her screen version on the original French version. Being a countrywoman of Zola's she is particularly well adapted to catch the spirit of the work, and transpose it most effectively to the screen.

"Mormon Maid" Attracts Buyers

Hiller and Wilk, Sales Agents for Friedman Enterprises Production, Swamped With Offers.

JUDGING by the enthusiasm with which the new Friedman Enterprises, Inc., five-reel production, "The Mormon Maid" was received at its trade showing at the Strand Theater last week, Hiller and Wilk, sales agents for the picture, will meet with quick success in disposing of state rights for the production.

The Strand theater was crowded with state rights buyers and their representatives, and every one present evidenced keen interest in the photoplay. This is easily understood when it is realized that the basic theme of the picture—Mormonism—has been treated in a tensely interesting manner in Mormonism's own territory—Utah. The scenic possibilities of that wonderfully scenic state have been utilized with telling effect in "The Mormon Maid." The Mormon marriage beliefs have been treated with utter frankness by the scenarioist, and the development of the story has given opportunity for many dramatic moments, which are forcefully registered in the production.

After the picture had been shown the Strand's foyer temporarily became a salesroom for Hiller and Wilk. So anxious were buyers to secure rights that they did not wait to make offers for the production. Before Hiller and Wilk's office closed for the day more than $150,000 worth of offers had been received. The controllers of the picture announced to the trade, however, that no deal for any section of the country would be closed until after they have given not only New York, but the entire country, further wholesale publicity exploitation. Publicity plans call for the sending broadcast of more than a million post cards; the posting throughout the principal cities of the United States and Canada of 1,000 twenty-four sheet stands, and the use of space in five hundred newspapers throughout the country.

"Girl Who Didn't Think" Forceful

Creative Film Corporation's Photoplay Causes Favorable Comment—Corporation's Officers Lauded.

THE timeliness of the theme and the manner of its presentation in "The Girl Who Didn't Think," the Creative Film Corporation's big feature photoplay feature, have not only aroused the keen interest of state rights buyers, but have also caused much interest to center on the three men most active in the direction of the corporation's affairs—Leon Wagner, Donald Campbell and Jack Weinberg. It is this trio that was mainly responsible for the selection of the subject that is arousing so much comment because of its forceful presentation in the picture by Jane Gail and a worthy supporting cast.

Already letters from sociologists and parents have reached the Creative Corporation, lauding the production. The general tone of the letters is to the effect that the film will have a great power for good, and the opinion is expressed that the picture will make thousands of girls think and "look before they leap." It was the full knowledge that a theme of this kind would hold good for all time that the Messrs. Wagner, Campbell and Weinberg finally decided to produce "The Girl Who Didn't Think." Into the selection of the story went all of the trio's past knowledge of the film business, with the result that a story which not only interests, but teaches, was finally obtained.

There are girls who "do not think" in every village, town, hamlet and city of the country, and it is through its homely appeal—its appeal to every one of us every-day folks—that the picture will leave its lasting lesson. The problems met with by the girl in the Creative production are the problems met with by almost every girl, and it is a certainty that the fortunes of the girl on the screen will be followed with breathless interest by every girl, boy, man or woman who sees it.

PATHE—MAX LINDER COMEDIES.

The Pathe company announces that it has a number of Max Linder comedies on hand—some of which never have been released—which it is about to issue. The first to be issued is "Max's Vacation," which will be released February 25. This will be followed at intervals of two weeks by "Max in a Difficult Position," "Max and the Fair M. D.," "Max's Feet Are Pinched," and "Max, the Lady Killer." Others will be announced later.

There will be a special one-sheet for each of these comedies and also a special stock three-sheet. They were released at least a year and a half ago and the rapidity with which motion picture audiences change assures a new public for these comedies which have shown their worth.

"20,000 LEAGUES" TO CLOSE.

On February 24, the unprecedented run of Universal's "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" will come to a close at the Broadway Theatre, scoring for its producers the second longest run of any picture ever shown in New York and establishing an entirely new record for attendance and box office receipts. Over 300,000 persons have seen the film; 50,000 children and 1,000 societies. In two weeks' time its box office record stood $22,000. If possible, special morning matinees will be arranged during its last days at the Broadway to accommodate patrons appreciating the undersea features made possible by the Williamson inventions.

Kalem Booking Independently

Exhibitors Can Select Their Productions Without Contracting for General's Entire Output.

EXHIBITORS the country over will be interested to know that under an arrangement entered into by the Kalem Company with its distributors, the General Film Company, all Kalem-made pictures, whether series or comedies, can now be booked independently of the other releases on the General Film program.

This plan should be especially beneficial to the exhibitors who are trying to cater to a local demand for a particular brand. If the demand is for Kalem subjects they can be procured easily and economically. It very often happens that such a demand exists. Heretofore the exhibitor has hesitated to obligate himself to take a complete service to obtain the one brand that he knows will draw well.

This arrangement is eminently fair, because it will enable the Kalem Company to materially increase the demand for its productions through its advertising and to receive the entire benefit of such moneys spent.

HALL BUYS JERSEY RIGHTS TO IVAN FILM.

Frank G. Hall, president of the Civilization Film Corporation of New Jersey, has purchased the rights for that state to "Enlighten Thy Daughter." Mr. Hall has also acquired the rights for New Jersey to "Joan the Woman," "Civilization" and "War's Women." Reports from houses in which "Joan" was booked state that Cecil B. De Mille's master production is playing to capacity business.

"MUTINY" (Bluebird).

Another Lynn F. Reynolds release is ready for distribution on the Bluebird program, March 12, under the caption of "Mutiny." Heretofore, this feature has been referred to as "The Cruise of the Alden Besse," but the working title has been abandoned for a shorter and more appropriate caption—for there is a mutiny of love, as well as rebellion at sea, during the unfolding story.

Lynn F. Reynolds has furnished Bluebird a routine of consistently good pictures, largely taken out-of-doors, with wholesome motives and healthy people assembled for the characters. "The Girl of Lost Lake," "The Secret of the Scene from "Mutiny" (Bluebird).

Swamp," "The End of the Rainbow," and "God's Crucible" will be recalled by exhibitors as a standard to establish what they may expect in "Mutiny."

Myrtle Gonzalez, Val Paul and George Hernandez will be the featured players, a trio that has always appeared in the Reynolds Bluebirds. Many stirring scenes are promised during the progress of a sensational story that carries a good purpose and promises to ably sustain the reputation of Bluebird's "nature-study" director.

Trade News of the Week

GATHERED BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS

Charles Goodwin's New Auditorium Opens

Bala-Cynwid, Pa., Has a Handsome New Motion Picture Theater Which Had Its Formal Opening on February 3—Gus Krug Will Manage It.

By F. V. Armato, 144 N. Salford St., Philadelphia, Pa.

BALA-CYNWID, PA.—The Auditorium theater, a strictly modern and handsomely equipped theater of fireproof construction, with a seating capacity of seven hundred, opened its doors for the first time on February 3. The house was built by Charles Goodwin, who is secretary of the Exhibitors' League of Philadelphia, and will be managed by Gus Krug, of Camden, who is one of the pioneers in the motion picture business. Billie Burke in "Peggy," the Triangle special release, was shown on the opening night. It was preferred over more recent releases because it has been tried and not found wanting and a sure fire picture was desired for the premiere. Ten and 15 cents admission is charged.

J. H. Hayes, Sr., Buys Columbia Theater.

Philadelphia, Pa.—J. H. Hayes, Sr., owner of a chain of motion picture theaters, recently acquired the ownership of the Columbia theater at 27th street and Columbia avenue. This theater, which is of fire-proof construction and thoroughly up-to-date, will have an orchestra instead of a piano as heretofore. J. H. Hayes, Jr. has been appointed manager by his father and will take hold immediately. Lewis J. Selznick pictures, the Vitagraph serial, "The Secret Kingdom," Metro's serial, "The Great Secret," and Pathe's reliable "Pearl of the Army," will form part of the program.

To Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Fitzpatrick, a Girl.

Scranton, Pa.—The theater crowds at the Strand, one day not long ago, missed the smiling face of James L. Fitzpatrick, the manager. The Fitzpatrick smile is an institution known to every patron and its absence was felt. Ushers and ticket takers were acting a little nervous and every time the phone rang some one would rush for it, saying, "Maybe that's the news now." Meanwhile Mr. Fitzpatrick, minus the smile, was pacing the corridor of a local hospital, and he too, jumped every time he saw a nurse or doctor headed his way, saying, like the boys down at the theater, "Maybe that's the news now."

At 8.30 o'clock a white capped nurse wearing a smile that put Fitzpatrick's best to shame whispered to him, "It's a girl, Mr. Fitzpatrick."

A little later the telephone at the theater rang again. A voice asked for M. E. Comerford, head of the Comerford amusement company. "This is Fitzpatrick," said the voice. "Her name is Ruth. GOOD BYE!"

The Fitzpatrick smile is again in evidence.

Iris Theater Damaged by Fire.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Iris theater, Kensington avenue near Allegheny, one of the largest moving picture establishments in the Northeast, was badly damaged by fire on Wednesday morning last. The blaze started in a mysterious manner in the basement and soon spread to the street floor. The firemen were obliged to flood the place with water to extinguish the flames.

Local Business During the Week.

Philadelphia, Pa.—A cold wave which has held the city in its grip for some days has delivered a solar plexus blow to business at local theaters. The greatest damage was suffered by the larger theaters, which booked the big and expensive feature productions for the week.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Albert E. Brown, of the Overbrook theater, has recently renovated and redecorated in tasteful colors his Grand theater at 52nd and Market streets at considerable cost. This is the second time improvements have been made here recently, showing the progressive spirit of the management.

Philadelphia, Pa.—H. Osborne, manager of the Pathe exchange, has booked Mrs. Vernon Castle in "Patria" at the Coliseum, commencing this week. This picture was the only added attraction, the feature being Nazimova in "War Brides."

Philadelphia's Week of Features.

Philadelphia, Pa.—New features released here the week of February 12th included "The Crab" at the Arcadia for three days, and William S. Hart in "The Gunfighter," also for three days. At the Stanley, "The Witching Hour," with C. Aubrey Smith, supplemented by two reels of official British war pictures released through the General Film, were in evidence. At the Strand Alice Joyce and Harry T. Morey co-starred in "The Courage of Silence," a Vitagraph feature. Valeska Suratt in "The New York Peacock" played an entire week's engagement at the Palace, 1218 Market street. The Broadway showed "The Primitive Call" with Gladys Coburn and the Victoria "The Scarlet Letter" with Stuart Holmes.

Newark News Letter

By Jacob J. Kalter, 25 Bradford Place, Newark, N. J.

Basil Brady With Local Pathe.

NEWARK, N. J.—Basil Brady, formerly with the International's New York office, has accepted a position as Jersey traveling representative with Pathe. Mr. Brady was formerly with the S. & A. and other film concerns in New York. He is now working directly under Manager Reinlieb.

Cranford Amusement Incorporation.

Cranford, N. J.—With an authorized capital of $10,000, the Cranford amusement company has been organized at this place. The registered agent is Max J. Finkelstein and the concern is authorized to conduct amusements. The incorporators are Harry Bowers, Max J. Finkelstein and Ripley Bowman.

New Theater at Sussex.

Sussex, N. J.—Goble and Smith, Main street, are constructing a one-story brick moving picture theater to seat 550. The general contract is held by Giles & Co., 17 Union street, Middletown, N. Y. The architect is F. P. Grosso, 126 Market street, Sussex, who has drawn plans involving an expenditure of $8,000.

Penns Grove Incorporation.

Penns Grove, N. J.—Penns Grove will have a new theater. The Broad Street amusement company was incorporated Jan. 26 to conduct amusement places. The registered agent is James H. Workman, and the office is 25 South Broad street. The incorporators are L. W. Cook, James H. Workman, C. Doughter. The authorized capital is $50,000.

Jacob Fabian in New Company.

Paterson, N. J.—Jacob Fabian is named as one of the incorporators of the Garden amusement company, with registered offices at 126 Market street. David G. Smith is named as registered agent, and the authorized capital is given at $100,000. The other incorporators are Max Gold and Rose Fabian. The articles of incorporation were filed Jan. 30 at Trenton.

Baltimore News Letter

J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

Church Benefit at Parkway.

BALTIMORE, Md.—Last week, beginning with Tuesday, February 13th, through the courtesy of Bernard Depkin, Jr., manager of the Parkway Theater, 3-9 West North avenue, benefit performances were given in both the afternoons and evenings for the Protestant Episcopal pension fund. As a feature for these performances, choirs from several churches throughout the city sang before the audiences.

"Nation" Scores at Ford's.

Baltimore, Md.—A great two weeks' run of Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" finished up with flying colors on Saturday night, February 10, at Ford's opera house. Not only were all the performances crowded to the capacity of the theater, but on the last day of the run a special breakfast matinee was given at 10:30 in the morning. At this special performance the orphans of St. Anthony's asylum were the guests of John T. and Charles E. Ford, who own and operate this theater.

Basil Morgan Vice-President B. F. of L.

Baltimore, Md.—The annual election of officers of the Baltimore Federation of Labor took place in Carpenter's Hall, Eutaw and Franklin streets, on Wednesday night, February 7th. The Operators' Union, Local 181, is affiliated with this body, and N. Basil Morgan, a prominent member of the local, was elected first vice-president.

New Vitagraph Representative.

Baltimore, Md.—Allen Bachrach, for nearly two years associated with the Washington branch of the Vitagraph company, has now been assigned to duties in this territory. Nat Glasser, who formerly handled the Baltimore section, and who has many friends, has gone back to the Washington office, and is covering a Southern territory. Mr. Bachrach is located at the Caswell Hotel.

Gans to Aid W. Va. Censor Fight.

Baltimore, Md.—Upon reading a letter from M. E. Morgan, of Charleston, W. Va., which was printed in the columns of the Moving Picture World on February 17, regarding the poor support he was receiving in the fight against the censorship bill now proposed for West Virginia, Arthur D. Gans, manager of the American Standard Film Service of this city immediately wrote Mr. Morgan that this company was ready to lend its aid in fighting the passage of the bill. Not only was financial aid offered, but Mr. Gans stated that his company would send letters to all exhibitors of West Virginia and the exchanges furnishing pictures to that territory in an effort to awaken them to the gravity of the situation. Besides the film service, Mr. Gans has now made arrangements by which he can devote some of his time in giving entertainments of moving pictures in lodges, clubs and churches.

New Elektra Bought by Durkee.

Baltimore, Md.—The New Elektra theater, 1039-41 North Gay street, has now come under the jurisdiction of Frank H. Durkee, a prominent theater owner, of Baltimore. Mr. Durkee has had this house entirely renovated and the lighting and heating systems have been entirely rearranged.

Special Matinees at Broadway.

Baltimore, Md.—Through the courtesy of J. Louis Rome, managing director of the Broadway enterprises, special boys' and girls' matinees are now being given once a week for the Children's Play-ground Association. The first was given on Friday, February 2, and the subject shown, "Miss Geo. Washington," delighted those who attended. The performances are from 4 to 6 in the afternoons, one every week. Miss Sligluff, the head of the organization, is now making arrangements to have all the school children in the vicinity included in the treats.

Kerrigan Visits Baltimore.

Baltimore, Md.—"Von Harleman, out on the Pacific Coast, is a pal of mine," said Carlyle R. Robinson, personal representative of J. Warren Kerrigan, when this writer introduced himself at the New theater, 210 West Lexington street, where Mr. Kerrigan was appearing on Friday, February 9, owing to the activities of L. A. DeHoff, the manager, in securing him for three days. Then Mr. Robinson took us into the dressing room of Mr. Kerrigan, and said in a loud tone, "Let me introduce you to the correspondent of the Moving Picture World—you can give this man anything except your money—but keep that." So we heartily shook hands with the big and affable Mr. Kerrigan and proceeded to have a good talk.

"I must say that all through the South, and in fact every place that I have been, I have received the finest treatment imaginable. My observations have led me to believe that there is no particular kind of play that will appeal to all, for all the exhibitors questioned seem to have a different opinion as to what they want. The greatest crowds that I have seen while on my tour were in Birmingham and Atlanta. In the latter city I had to appear every twenty minutes."

During the first part of last week Mr. Kerrigan appeared at the Gertrude McCoy, the Brodie, the Broadway and the Baltimore theaters. At all these theaters large crowds attended the performances, due to the appearance of this favorite of the screen.

More Children's Shows in Washington, D. C.

Parents' League of the Wilson Normal School Is Arranging for Special Shows for Juveniles at the Different School Houses of the City.

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—There is another movement on foot for the giving of motion picture exhibitions of a character suitable for juveniles. The Parents' League of the Wilson normal school is completing arrangements whereby shows can be given to the school children of the community without charge.

A projection machine has been procured and the use of the auditorium of the Wilson normal school has been granted. The use of films is to be requested, and if granted this week, the free shows will start immediately.

Co-operation between the schools in the Third division, in which the Wilson normal is located, is said to be necessary for the complete success of the plan. Usually, it is said, the auditorium of the Wilson normal is engaged, but it is believed that if each school could in turn entertain the children, weekly or semi-weekly shows could be given.

Apparently the other juvenile shows did not prove successful. At any rate, they have been, or will be, largely discontinued. The ladies of the Federation of Women's Clubs, who worked so hard to make a success of these exhibitions, failed to secure the co-operation of the parents and the children for whose benefit the shows were designed.

Late Personals in Capital City.

Harry M. Crandall is enjoying himself immensely these days riding around in his brand new, twin six, eight passenger, four-thousand-dollar Packard automobile. It is a beauty and a regular palace car. Harry Crandall has three known fads—his family, his work, and automobiling, although he does not get very much time for the first or third mentioned enjoyment.

H. C. Wales, who has been the manager of the local office of the World Film Corporation for some few months, has been promoted to the position of special representative of that company, with headquarters in New York City. He will leave Washington next week after turning the office over to a Mr. Smeltzer, who succeeds him here. The World correspondent hopes for the opportunity of introducing the latter through these columns next week, at which time he will also have something additional to say of the past and future activities of Mr. Wales.

Exchange Men to Help Open Richmond Theater.

Washington, D. C.—A number of exchange managers have expressed their intention to go to Richmond on February 20, to be present at the opening by Mrs. Annie E. Thorpe of the new Bluebird theater. The house will open with Universal pictures and gets its name from Bluebird features. Mrs. Thorpe is said to be the first woman entering into the film game in the United States. She has successfully operated other theaters in Virginia and is well known throughout the territory.

A Millionaire's Liking for Films.

Washington, D. C.—Manager R. Berger, of the K-E-S-E exchange, has just completed arrangements for the furnishing of films for the use of John R. McLean, millionaire society man of Washington. These films are to be shown at Friendship, the McLean country home, each Sunday evening. It has been the practice of Mr. McLean for nearly three years to have these private exhibitions every Sunday evening. He is the possessor of a complete equipment for the giving of these shows and has secured the services of an expert operator. In addition to the Sunday shows, it is not uncommon, by any means, for Mr. McLean to telephone in to one of the local exchanges for films suitable for his boy and the latter's playmates, and a number of impromptu exhibitions are thus given.

Washington, D. C.—Sidney B. Lust, who is marketing the Lewis J. Selznick productions in this territory, has entered into an agreement with the Washington Herald for the distribution of 37,000 photographs of Clara Kimball Young. This is a new stunt for Washington and it represents an outlay of nearly $4,000. The pictures are to be delivered to the readers of the Sunday Herald, a one-cent publication, on February 25.

Mr. Lust, who is always alive to publicity opportunities, has also arranged with this paper to publish each week one of the six poems of Ella Wheeler Wilcox around which scenarios have been written and made into films. The poems will appear in the paper the week before the films are shown at the Garden theater, and the exhibitions will be advertised as co-operative exhibitions given jointly by the Washington Herald and Tom Moore, owner of the theater.

William G. Airey Takes Georgia Theater.

Washington, D. C.—William G. Airey has taken over the Georgia theater, on Georgia avenue, northwest, and has put in Universal features. Mr. Airey is one of the best known among the Washington exhibitors, having for many years been identified with the Alhambra and later with the Hippodrome theater. The trade wishes him success.

Manager Mann Pleased with Step Toward Co-operation.

Washington, D. C.—In commenting upon the dinners given by the Famous Players exchange, in Washington, Baltimore, and Wilmington, manager George M. Mann says that, while only a comparatively small proportion of the exhibitors of this territory were present, the enthusiasm at these gatherings has far exceeded his brightest hopes.

A big step has been taken toward bringing into more complete harmony the producer, the exchange man and the exhibitor. Each is vitally important to the success of the other.

Four New Theaters Rumored.

Washington, D. C.—We of the National capital are always hearing rumors of houses to be erected here and there about the city. If all of the houses for which plans have been drawn or reported drawn were built, a great deal of valuable building space would be occupied by motion picture theaters. There are now four big theaters projected for F street. One of these will be operated by the Willard theater company. This organization has just been incorporated and is going ahead with its plans for the erection of a house on the Willard estate.

There is another organization at work on leases. This also will have a great deal of standing, for the men connected with it are well known picture men, who have been looking for an F street site for a considerable period of time. It is understood that they already have options on quite a number of pieces of property and the deal will come to a close before the first of the month.

Among the visitors of the past week was Marcus Loew, who operates the Columbia theater in this city. Mr. Loew was on his way to Memphis, Tenn., to be present at the opening of the new Lyceum theater there.

Cold Weather in Buffalo and Little Coal

Serious Coal Shortage in New York's Lake Metropolis Hits the Amusement Business—Interesting Notes and Personals for the Week.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 5 Lewis Block, Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—A tumbling temperature and a serious coal shortage have damaged the business of the moving picture theaters of Buffalo and western New York in the past two weeks. Buffalonians are shivering these days and prefer to spend their evenings at their homes, no matter how inadequate the heat there may be, instead of going to nearby shows.

"One exhibitor said he would close his theater this week if he couldn't get coal," said Metro Manager C. A. Taylor, who has just returned from a trip through this end of the state. "Just when the weather is the severest, the coal and gas supply is the lowest."

Buffalo film men, while on the road, complain of the lack of heat in hotels.

"I had occasion to visit Oil City, Pa., a few days ago," said G. H. Christoffers, manager of the Mutual. "My room in the hotel, where I was registered, was so cold that I had to break the ice in the wash bowl. All the theaters I visited were losing money because they could not be properly heated on account of the coal shortage."

Shea's Is Showing Films Sundays.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Sunday shows have never been the rule at Shea's vaudeville theater, Buffalo, one of the largest in the country, but lately moving pictures are being shown there on this day. Among the attractions last Sunday were Mrs. Vernon Castle in the third episode of "Patria," Bessie Love in a Triangle feature, "Nina, the Flower Girl," and Charlie Chaplin in "Easy Street." The Sunday admission is ten, fifteen and twenty-five cents. The management fortunately anticipated the present fuel shortage and piled up a mountain of coal in advance "when the going was good."

"Is Marriage Sacred?" Showing.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The series of twelve pictures, "Is Marriage Sacred?" are being shown at the following theaters: Lyric, New Ariel, Lilly, Broadway Lyceum, New Theater, Art, Hopf Star, Sylvia, Maxine, Pastime, Liberty, Temple, Savoy, Rialto and Kosciuszko, all of Buffalo, and the Lumberg, Niagara Falls; Elite, Kenmore, Flash, Tonawanda; Elite, Niagara Falls, and Golden Palace, Lockport.

H. S. Gans with Buffalo Pathe.

Buffalo, N. Y.—H. S. Gans has been appointed cashier of the Pathe exchange, Buffalo. He was formerly with the Pathe in Chicago.

R. J. Lowry's 63d Birthday.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Several years in the show business has given R. J. Lowry, who has just celebrated his 63d birthday, and is manager of the Allendale moving picture theater, Buffalo, a world of valuable experience in knowing the wants of the public in the amusement line. Mr. Lowry was a musical director for sixteen years. When Mitchel H. Mark and Rudolph Wagner of this city originated and controlled many of the penny arcades of the country, Mr. Lowry was their general manager for a long time. As a theatrical manager he is an adept in providing ways and means of increasing the box office receipts.

Mr. Lowry proves that headwork, not necessarily footwork, is an essential requisite for the successful management of a moving picture theater. Footwork is specified, because Mr. Lowry, who was sick for four years, now walks with the aid of two canes. With this handicap he cannot fly from one end of the theater to another or rush madly to the film exchanges, even if he were disposed to act this way, when some minor thing goes wrong. Instead he uses his head, and by a little systematizing and deputizing, his difficulties vanish as does snow under the action of the summer sun.

C. H. Barloet Goes to Triangle.

Buffalo, N. Y.—G. A. Hickey, manager of the Triangle, has appointed C. H. Barloet road representative. "We are increasing our office force and business was never better," said Mr. Hickey, who has just returned from a visit to the exhibitors of Syracuse and nearby places. Mrs. Hickey, who has mastered many details of the exchange business, has recovered from a two weeks' illness.

Earl L. Crabb's an Inventor.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Earl L. Crabb, manager of the Strand moving picture theater, Buffalo, has invented and secured patents on an automatic film fire extinguisher, which he hopes to market shortly.

Regorson Co. to Take the Picadilly.

Buffalo, N. Y.—A recent report from Rochester says: "The Regorson Co., which now controls and operates the Regent and Gordon theaters in this city, will, according to well defined rumors, assume the management of the Picadilly, Rochester's newest moving picture house."

It is reported that George E. Simpson, president and general manager of the Regorson Co., will continue to act in that capacity after the merger. The directors of the Regorson Co. are Nathan H. Gordon of Boston; Jacob Gordon and George E. Simpson of Rochester. It is reported that Thomas J. Swanton and William Deininger will be added to the directorate as representatives of the Picadilly interests. It is not believed that there will be any change of policy in any of the three houses.

The Palace theater, Olean, N. Y., will open in a few weeks. It is said that this will be one of the most beautiful theaters in the state.

"The Palace will use Paramount Service exclusively," said Howard F. Brink, traveling representative of the William L. Sherry offices, Buffalo.

NOTES FROM CLEVELAND.

By M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Bldg., Cleveland, Ohio.

Cold Days Bring Little Business.

CLEVELAND, O.—Cold weather has just about put business on the blink in this section. It has been the coldest winter for many years. Snow falls nearly every day and the mercury hovers around zero. Last Monday, Feb. 12, it was ten below.

Managers report receipts are so small they can hardly be seen. One man took in $2.85 one night. Another said he took in 90 cents. These, of course, are two extreme cases, but they are not exaggerated.

Another trouble which the exhibitors are up against is the transportation delay. There are so many switches these days that an exhibitor has to be on the job tracing his films all day long if he wants to be sure and have the picture he advertises. The cold weather is blamed for the express delays.

Mayor Davis Dislikes "Nation" Film.

Cleveland.—Mayor Davis has come out with the statement that he is not in favor of showing "The Birth of a Nation" in Cleveland. He says that while he doesn't think he can bar it, because the censors have passed the production, he doesn't think it ought to be shown.

F. P. Woda Books Exclusive Vitagraphs.

Cleveland.—F. P. Woda, owner of the Orpheum theater, has contracted with the Vitagraph company to use its features and releases exclusively.

Mr. Woda runs the Vitagraph pictures each a week, also the "Secret Kingdom" and other releases.

F. P. WODA.

Dayton, O.—The run of the great Ince film, "Civilization," at the Majestic theater, has broken all Dayton records in the length of the engagement, the prices secured for seats and the number of persons attending the exhibitions. The Majestic management charged 25 and 50 cents for seats at the matinee performances and 25 to $1 for seats in the evening, and in spite of these high prices there were full houses at every performance.

Cincinnati News Letter

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First Natl. Bank Bldg., Cincinnati.

New Fountain Square Theater Announced.

CINCINNATI, O.—The much talked-of new theater on Fountain square, the subject of rumor for several years, seems finally to be approaching actuality. It is announced by the Gayety Amusement Company, which controls about sixty feet on the north side of Fountain square, near the corner of Walnut street, that plans are being prepared by Lamb & Sons, designers of the famous Hippodrome, of New York, for a house on Fountain square, to seat 1,500 persons, at a cost of about $150,000. Col. Edward Hart and Harry Hart are among those interested in the project.

Exchange Men Commend Mayor.

Cincinnati, O.—Although opinions differed decidedly on the artistic merits and moral flavor of "Purity," which held the boards at the Walnut theater for two weeks, the Associated Film Exchanges took occasion to express in a letter to Mayor Puchta their appreciation of his action in refusing to assume authority to interfere with the exhibition of the picture. The view taken by the mayor which called out the approval of the exchange men was that the Ohio Board of Censors is properly vested with authority to pass upon the fitness of pictures for exhibition, and that after it has approved a picture any clash with municipal authorities growing out of a difference of opinion would be unbecoming. Incidentally, it should be said that the Walnut management, following the effort of some people to have the Juvenile Court take action, barred young people under eighteen from seeing the picture, and Juvenile Judge Hoffman, viewing the picture at the invitation of the management, expressed the opinion that children should not be permitted to see it.

"How Molly Made Good" Shown.

Cincinnati, O.—The first Ohio run of "How Molly Made Good," a production by the Cooley Features Co., for which McMahan & Jackson have secured state rights, was held at the Forest theater, Avondale, a few days ago, with excellent results, judging by the approval of the audience. The film deals with the experiences of a girl reporter, a part taken by Margaret Gale, and in the courses of her work she interviews more than a dozen stage celebrities, including Robert Edeson, Henry Kolker, Julian Eltinge, Cyril Scott, Julia Dean and others, adding much interest to the production.

"Nation" Film at Grand Opera House.

Cincinnati, O.—After all these years of waiting Cincinnati is at last to see "The Birth of a Nation," following its recent admission to exhibition by the censors' change of heart. The Grand opera house has been secured for the picture's Cincinnati premiere, and it will begin an indefinite run on March 19. So far there has been no objection in Cincinnati to the exhibition of the picture, although Cincinnati's colored legislator has attempted to secure the enactment of a law directed against the picture, and colored people at Columbus have protested. At Dayton, the colored brethren have petitioned the mayor to prevent the exhibition of the picture. None of these moves has so far met with success.

Star Announces First Run Vitaphones.

Cincinnati, O.—Manager Tom Corby, of the Star theater, which some time ago went over to the ranks of theaters showing features only, with a ten-cent admission charge, has announced the first run of all Greater Vitaphone productions. This is a splendid stroke for the Star, and places it beyond question on a parity with other leading downtown houses. The Star has done very well in the several months since it went under the new plan, and the move in question shows further progress.

Trying to Stamp Out Spitting Habit.

Hamilton, O.—Spitting on the floors of theaters has become such a nuisance in Hamilton that managers of the leading houses met a few days ago with Mayor John A. Holzberger and the chief of police to take measures to stamp out the evil. It was agreed by the managers, including Messrs. J. H. Broomhall, John Schwalm, William Schalk, W. M. Goodwin, Adam Hammerle and Joseph Baki, to run slides at each performance warning patrons against the offense, and if this does not do the work the police will see if a few arrests will not have the desired result.

Gayety Theater at Fairville Changes Hands

T. J. O'Rourke Buys the New Brunswick Picture House—Other Theater Changes and Interesting Notes of the Maritime Provinces.

By F. F. Sully, 68 Landsdowne Ave., St. John, N. B.

FAIRVILLE, N. B.—T. J. O'Rourke, for five years manager of F. G. Spencer's theater at Yarmouth, N. S., recently purchased the Gayety theater here, which was formerly managed and owned by William C. Smith, now running the Empress in Carleton. Several managements have not found the Gayety a successful venture, but Mr. O'Rourke, with a Universal program, is so far satisfied with results.

Islesboro, N. S.—Charles R. Steeves, proprietor of the Scenic theater, has recently taken his brother into partnership and the theater is now being conducted under the firm name of Steeves Brothers.

Moncton, N. B.—It is reported that the Dreamland theater, owned and run by Mrs. Davidson, is to close temporarily on account of a falling off in business, brought on largely by the extreme cold weather. The inability to get coal for fuel has also worked much hardship on many exhibitors.

Joggins Mines, N. S.—T. J. Burke, proprietor of the Wonderland theater, has booked "The Battle of the Somme," the "Yellow Menace," and several other good features. In a town of 1,500 people Mr. Burke has succeeded in running out the only opposition, Hood's theater, but an

More New Theaters in Ontario

In the Midst of a War that Drains Province of Men and Money the Film Industry Is Experiencing a Vigorous and Natural Growth—Loew Interests to Build Several Houses—Other New Theaters in Ontario.

Wm. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard St. E., Toronto, Ont.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.—An anomalous state of affairs exists in Ontario moving picture circles. While the nation is in the midst of war, with thousands of men in the firing line far from home, the film industry is becoming more firmly entrenched than ever. Substantial houses are appearing in all parts of the province and many more are contemplated.

The information was confided to the Toronto correspondent of Moving Picture World that the Marcus Loew's Theaters, Limited, had arranged for the erection of five new theaters in eastern Canada, the houses to be built at Montreal, Hamilton, Ottawa, Kingston and London. Incorporation papers for Loew's Hamilton Theaters, Limited, with a capitalization at $1,000,000, were taken out at Ottawa on February 10 to provide for the erection of the Loew house in Hamilton, Loew's franchise in this instance having been assigned to R. R. Bongard and W. S. Morlock.

The site of the new $150,000 moving picture theater at Richmond and Victoria streets, Toronto, is being cleared, despite the cold weather, so that building operations may be started just as soon as the frost quits the ground. It is variously reported that this theater is being built for William Fox or for Jules and J. J. Allen. The latter have a string of theaters in Western Canada and are also in control of the Famous Players film service throughout the Dominion. The architects for this job are withholding the name of the owners.

Announcement has also been made that Bryson & Valey, 745 Dovercourt road, Toronto, owners of the theater at Bloor and Dovercourt road, have arranged for a $25,000 addition to this house. The extension will be a large two-story addition of concrete and steel.

Word has also been received in Toronto that local interests at Copper Cliff, northern Ontario, are arranging for the erection of a 1,000 seat picture theater in that town.

Bright moving picture theaters which have been opened around Ontario since the first of the year include the Crown theater, Toronto, 900 seats; Princess, Sault Ste. Marie, 900 seats; and the Patricia, London, 1,000 seats.

Another advance in the Canadian film business has also been the establishment of the Canadian National Features, Limited, with studios at Trenton, Ontario, where picture operations were officially started on February 15.

Leslie McIntosh Managing Allfeatures.

Toronto, Ont.—Mr. Robson has been succeeded as manager of Allfeatures, Limited, by Leslie McIntosh, who had been with this exchange for two years after being with John Griffin. W. Kennedy, formerly with A. J. Small and John Griffin, is now on the road for Allfeatures.

Mr. Green, formerly attached to the Strand's staff, is now in the employ of Regal Films, Limited, World distributors in Canada.

"Intolerance" Starts on Tour.

Toronto, Ont.—After a highly successful and auspicious opening at the Grand opera house, Toronto, the one Canadian print of the D. W. Griffith masterpiece, "Intolerance," is now on circuit in Ontario, under the direction of B. S. Courtney, Toronto, owner of the print. The picture is being presented on an elaborate scale with an immense orchestra, choir, etc., and it will be shown only in the largest theaters.

Mr. Courtney will shortly take off the two prints of "The Birth of a Nation," which have been screened in every city and town in the Dominion. The "Nation" picture will be given a rest until the opportunity presents itself for a revival.

The Ontario Board of Censors accepted the "Intolerance" feature almost in toto, practically the only elimination being a scene in the Huguenot story, which was considered to be a reflection on France, the present ally of Britain.

Will Supply Projectors and Accessories.

Toronto, Ont.—George F. Perkins of the Perkins electric company, with offices and salesrooms in Toronto, Montreal and Winnipeg, has announced that he will shortly open three more branches of the company in Canada. The Perkins company is the exclusive distributor in the Dominion for Simplex projectors, Powers' Camera-graphs, Minusa screens, Speer carbons, Martin rotary converters and other lines.

Title Making, Poster Mounting Company.

Toronto, Ont.—Stanley Adams, a Toronto exhibitor, has organized the National film company, 10 Alice street, Toronto, for the purpose of handling the considerable local trade of title making, poster mounting, etc.

Exchange Men—Business Notes.

Toronto, Ontario.—Mr. Sid Taube, Ontario manager of the Regal Films, Limited, Canadian distributors of World releases, has gone to Vancouver to open a branch of the company in that city.

Harry Price, well-known locally as an employe of the Famous Players film service, has been appointed Montreal manager for the Monarch film company, bookers in Canada for Clara Kimball Young productions.

To Begin Strand Next Month.

St. John, N. B.—Fred G. Spencer has returned from a business trip to Boston and Amherst, N. S. Mr. Spencer, while in Boston, arranged details for the building of the Strand, which is to be commenced next month. While there he also received notice of the destruction of the Empress theater in Amherst, for which he had a 20 year lease. He hurried to Nova Scotia at once to ascertain the extent of his losses and to make arrangements for future housing for his interests.

Signal Company Reopens the Majestic

Chattanooga Theater Has Been Redecorated and Enlarged and Is Now Part of a Chain of Houses—Shows Vaudeville and Pictures.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville, Tenn.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.—After extensive improvements and alterations, including a new lobby and theater front, enlarged stage and seating facilities, and a complete renovation, the Majestic theater, recently acquired by the Signal amusement company, has been reopened to the public under the name of the Rialto. The Signal amusement company has a six year lease on the property, and will conduct the theater on the highest possible basis of quality. Pictures and Keith vaudeville comprise the bill at present, but during the summer months screen subjects exclusively will probably hold the boards.

William H. Lindsey, president of the company, is located at Nashville, and recently stated to the WORLD man that several thousand dollars has been expended in making repairs to the house, and that it now ranked with the leading theaters in the state. Clifford Stiff has been appointed manager of the house, succeeding R. M. Watkins, who operated the Majestic. The Signal amusement company now controls and operates every important picture house in Chattanooga with one exception. W. E. Watkins, secretary of the company, is the Chattanooga representative of the Nashville interests. Other members of the organization are F. H. Dowler, Jr., F. H. Dowler, Sr., Chattanooga; Wm. H. Lindsey and T. A. Clark-son, Nashville.

The Rialto has installed a capable orchestra, under the direction of Prof. John S. Crowley, and furnishes music at all performances.

"Civilization" in the South.

Nashville, Tenn.—The All-Star features company, Jacksonville, Fla., has acquired the state rights on "Civilization," the Thomas Ince spectacle, for Tennessee, as well as Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Virginia, Kentucky, Georgia, North and South Carolina. The deal was consummated through the efforts of J. Parker Read, general manager of the Harper film corporation of New York. Messrs. Randolph and Davis are at the head of the All-Star features company, and are conducting an extensive campaign for "Civilization," having also sent out six salesmen. The offices of the All-Star features company are located in the Realty building, Jacksonville, Fla., and southern exhibitors are advised that bookings with the company should be arranged with the Jacksonville headquarters.

Essanay Studio for Chattanooga.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—Officials of the Essanay company of Chicago have been in the city looking over the site for a proposed southern studio for that company. Some months ago E. H. Calvert, Richard Travers and other members of the stock company were in Chattanooga, and produced some creditable features in the Chattanooga mountain country. While some metropolitan scenes would be required for southern production, the larger part of this work would consist of mountain and river scenes, and the Chattanooga territory has been strongly recommended by members of the producing company for exterior photography. In the event the studio is established, it will be made a permanent division of the Chicago plant, and maintain a full working force at all times.

Road Show Flivvers at Bijou.

Nashville, Tenn.—"No more road shows for me," stated manager Milton Starr of the Bijou, the largest house for colored patronage in this section. "The one I had here last week fell down flat after filling the house with an expectant audience, and many of them clamored for their money back." Mr. Starr intends to hold strictly to the pictures in future. The "Liberty" serial finished its run on Wednesday last week, and the first episode was again started on Friday of the same week at this theater, it proving one of the most popular serials ever placed before the negro patrons in Tennessee.

"Daughter of the Gods" in Chattanooga.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—The Lyric theater is featuring "A Daughter of the Gods," during the entire week of February 19. The Lyric is one of the leading road show houses in Chattanooga, and the Keller-mann attraction comes in between two high class stage productions for its week's run. Advanced prices have been placed in effect, and special orchestral music furnished for the picture. The policy of the Lyric throughout the current season will be to run a number of the ultra-features of the screen in connection with its regular stage shows.

New Amusement Company.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—Articles of incorporation have been granted the Mutual amusement company of this city by the county court house. The incorporators are named as M. H. Silverman, Ben Silverman, and Abe Slobosky.

Walthall in Alabama Picture.

Montgomery, Ala.—Henry B. Walthall, native son of Alabama, and one of the leading lights of the screen today, is featured in a film in Alabama, which shows to advantage the different sections of the state. The picture was produced under the auspices of the Alabama Chamber of Commerce, and was recently shown at the Grand theater for the first time. The film is booked for a four days' run in Birmingham, and will then follow a regular schedule over the state, including the Mobile Mardi Gras festivities.

Louisville News Letter

By Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Building, Louisville, Ky.

Gateway M. P. Company Incorporates.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—The Gateway motion picture company, with a capital of $10,000, divided into shares of the par value of $1, has filed papers. The incorporators are J. B. Bowling, H. F. Crawley and W. W. Dickerson, each listed as holding three shares of stock. The corporation is authorized to incur an indebtedness not to exceed $5,000.

The new company is associated with the Calnay cinema corporation of Louisville, and will have offices in the Republic building. The new company expects to produce one or more two reel subjects each week, these films to be sold through the parent corporation and M. M. Feely & Co., of New York. The Calnay company proposes to furnish the camera man, director and stock. W. W. Dickerson is president of the new company.

The Calnay company was recently organized in Louisville by the same interests back of the Dixie film company, incorporated a few months ago at Nashville, Tenn., with a capital of $5,000.

Hotel's Picture Show Burns.

West Baden, Ind.—The opera house, used as a moving picture theater, and owned by the operators of the West Baden Hotel Co., together with the spring water bottling plant and the sanitarium, were burned to the ground by fire starting shortly after 7 o'clock on the evening of February 11.

Nelson Van H. Gurnee Inherits Fortune.

Lexington, Ky.—Nelson Van H. Gurnee, head of the Gurnee amusement company, operating the Ada Meada theater, of Lexington, learned last week that he was one of the heirs to a division of a $32,000,000 estate of his aunt, Mrs. Dehlia Gurnee, of New York, who died in January. Mr. Gurnee is one of about eight heirs who will receive the property.

Clyde Gains Gets Blue Law Changed.

Irvine, Ky.—Clyde Gains, formerly a moving picture exhibitor of Winchester, Ky., was recently elected a member of the Irvine City Council, and has forced a repeal of the so called Sunday "lid" ordinance, which went through on a solid vote of 5-0. He argued that Sunday was the only day that many oil operators of the city had time or rest enough to care about diversions, and that such men should be given an opportunity of enjoying their day of rest. Mr. Gains as an old moving picture man, understands the Sunday closing laws better than most people, and had little difficulty in getting the matter through. The ordinance repealed required all business houses with the exception of hotels, restaurants and livery stables to remain closed on Sunday. Under the new ordinance, the picture house now being rebuilt, following the recent severe fire, will be open on Sunday. Mr. Gains has been very successful since he dropped pictures for crude oil, and recently sold his holdings in one oil company for approximately $50,000.

Sunday Closing Items.

Ashland, Ky.—One of the pool rooms in Ironton, defied the blue law remaining open all day Sunday and taking in nearly $200, and it is claimed that the picture houses will follow suit.

Princeton, Ky.—Even the drug stores are being forced to close on Sunday mornings during Sunday school and church hours and one half hour previous to evening services. The moving picture houses are all dark on Sundays, and still a movement has been started for a stricter observance of the Sunday closing laws.

Kentucky Theater Notes.

Paintsville, Ky.—Will Cain, of Louisa, Ky., has assumed management of the Stafford theater, and recently gave his first show. He has had several years' experience in eastern Kentucky, understanding both the people and the business.

Murray, Ky.—T. B. Gardner, connected with the Dixie amusement company of Paris, Ky., who for some time has been managing the Dixie theater, at Humboldt, Tenn., has taken charge of the Woodruff theater, of Murray, Ky., and is contemplating a number of improvements.

Falmouth, Ky.—The Duncan moving picture theater has been sold by Stamler & Chambers, of Walton, Ky., to Elmer Woodhead, of Falmouth, who has taken active management of the business. Several years ago Mr. Woodhead had charge of the Dreamland theater, of Falmouth.

Danville, Ky.—Manager Stout, of the Danville opera house, which features moving pictures, has announced that the building will be remodeled, and a new entrance cut through a storeroom. The seating capacity will be greatly increased.

Somerset, Ky.—The Dixie theater has been sold by Charles Mize to Garvel Burton.

Hopkinsville, Ky.—Manager Stockley, of the Princess theater, has again installed his former orchestra.

Terre Haute, Ind.—The Bankers' & Brokers' theater company, of Chicago, has closed an agreement to lease the ground now occupied by the Varieties theater, at Eighth and Wabash, for a period of thirty-five years. It is stated that a new building will be started by April 1.

Atlanta News Letter

A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Ave.,
Atlanta, Ga.

Many Plans to Welcome Jack Sherrill

ATLANTA, GA.—Jack Sherrill is going to have a home coming. The noted motion picture star, who once played baseball in the back lots of Atlanta and wore out the knees of his pants shooting marbles in the back yard of the old Layden house, next door to the governor's mansion, will make a personal appearance at the Criterion theater, February 19, 20, 21 and 22 in connection with the screening of "The Conquest of Canaan," in which he is co-starred with Edith Taliferro.

Jack Sherrill spent all his days beginning April 14, 1898, in Atlanta, until he left home to attend the Staunton military academy.

Sherrill has many friends and relatives here and several social events have been planned during his stay. He will make personal appearances at the Criterion theater at every performance and will be the inspiration for a number of club events.

New Theater in Valdosta.

Valdosta, Ga.—A deal has been closed by Tyson Bros., owners of the Strand theater here, for the erection of a handsome new theater. Two buildings adjoining the Strand, on Patterson street, now occupied by a cigar store and a photographer's studio, are to be torn down to make way for the new structure. The theater will have a seating capacity of 800.

"The Birth of the Star-Spangled Banner" was the special children's moving picture show at the Grand theater Saturday morning, Feb. 10.

IN WISCONSIN.

By Frank H. Madison, 328 S. Wabash ave., Chicago, Ill.

Wisconsin Theater Notes.

CASHTON, WIS.—F. W. Schreier has purchased the interest of his partner Rhine Graw in the moving picture theater here. Princeton, Wis.—A moving picture theater has been opened here by Mrs. A. Florence & Son.

Union Grove, Wis.—The moving picture theater operated by Fred Dixon has been closed temporarily because of lack of business.

Avoca, Wis.—A moving picture theater has been opened by Fred Paulick.

Maiden Rock, Wis.—H. Smith is a member of committee which is planning to erect an opera house here.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Milwaukee moving picture theater managers have unanimously agreed to aid in a campaign to raise a fund for the Lincoln memorial.

Hazen, N. D.—Jack McFarlane has sold his interest in the Foto-Pla theater to George N. Freer, who is now sole owner.

Fullerton, N. D.—Ed. Arenstein has purchased a moving picture theater here.

New Michigan Corporations.

Detroit, Mich.—The State Film Co., capitalized for $3,000. Col. W. S. Butterfield, principal stockholder.

The Madison Film Exchange; capital stock $6,000. John H. Kunsy and George W. Trendle, principal stockholders.

Rialto theaters, Detroit, increased to $200,000.

The Wolverine Film Manufacturing Co., Grand Haven, capitalized for $10,000 to make pictures.

Detroit Jottings.

M. D. Martin, manager of the Knickerbocker theater, Detroit, expects to pay a visit to New Orleans, his old stamping ground, some time very soon.

The Palace-Hippodrome in Saginaw is still closed, pending the adjustment of its $30,000 indebtedness.

Coal Shortage Hits Michigan Theaters

Secretary Shiek of the Detroit Exhibitors' League Writes a Letter to Theater Managers Asking Them to Economize on Their Electricity.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—Owing to the shortage of coal in Detroit and the embargo of Detroit by the railroad companies, the Detroit Edison company has asked all of the moving picture theaters to curtail their use of electricity and to be as economical and saving as possible. On top of this, secretary Shiek of the Detroit Exhibitors' League has sent a letter to every Detroit exhibitor asking for co-operation in the matter. The situation is really serious and only the unexpected, coupled with mild weather, can save a shortage of electric current, which would hamper the theaters to the extent that many of them would have to close temporarily.

New Madison Theater to Open March 3.

Detroit, Mich.—March 3 is the date definitely set for the opening of the New Madison theater, which will be the largest of the John H. Kunsy theaters, seating around 3,000, and playing big features, a full week. M. Harlan Starr, formerly manager of the Washington theater, is to be the manager of the New Madison. R. G. McGaw goes from the Liberty to the Washington, succeeding Mr. Starr.

Barnett Opens "20,000 Leagues" Office

Detroit, Mich.—B. Barnett has arrived in Detroit with a full organization to open a Detroit exchange. Mr. Barnett has purchased the Michigan and Ohio rights to "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" and "Joan the Woman." The submarine picture is now playing an indefinite engagement at the Washington theater to tremendous business. Leo Eckstein is personally in charge of the picture at the Washington and will be right with it when it shows elsewhere in the state. Mr. Barnett expects to announce permanent Detroit quarters within a few weeks at the latest, and is now looking for suitable quarters.

W. A. Kent to Manage Tri-State Branch.

Detroit, Mich.—Bert Graham has resigned as manager of the Detroit branch of the Tri-State film company, and has been succeeded by W. A. Kent, formerly booking manager. Mr. Graham expects to announce a new connection very shortly. Howard O. Pierce, recently with Bluebird, and formerly with the John H. Kunsy enterprises, has joined the Tri-State as Michigan representative and publicity manager.

John L. McCurdy, formerly of the Bluebird photoplays, has cast his lot with the Tri-State, controlling the Michigan and Ohio rights to Art Drama productions. Mr. McCurdy will travel out of the Cleveland office, covering Northern Ohio.

"The Crisis" Is Rebooked.

Detroit, Mich.—On account of the numerous requests, "The Crisis" has been rebooked for the Washington theater, Detroit, the engagement to start soon. Previously it played the Washington for three weeks to smashing business.

"The Crisis," by the way, was shown to the prisoners of Jackson Prison on Sunday, February 4, through the courtesy of John H. Kunsy of Detroit, who controls the Michigan rights. More than a thousand prisoners viewed the picture, and you never saw a more enthusiastic and interested audience. Every seat and all of the available standing room in the auditorium was occupied. The Detroit party consisted of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Kunsy, Mr. and Mrs. George Trendle, Harry Guest, publicity director for Mr. Kunsy, and J. O. Brooks, manager of the Madison film exchange, which is selling the production in Michigan.

New Theater in Monroe.

Monroe, Mich.—This city is to have a new $55,000 theater and it will be operated by J. R. Denniston. He says it will be ready around September 1. The theater will be 45 by 150 feet, two stories high, of brick and steel construction, with a seating capacity for 1,000 people. The front will be of light colored brick. J. R. Denniston is proprietor of the Family theater in Monroe. Six years ago he took it over after it had undergone a series of financial failures made by six proprietors in two years. It only goes to prove that the right man can always succeed.

Charles E. Eldridge to Manage the Majestic.

Detroit, Mich.—Charles E. Eldridge is the new house manager at the Majestic theater, Detroit. He has been connected with the theater and the production of the highest form of amusement for more than a score of years, being familiar with the front and back of the theater. He was induced to come to Detroit by M. W. McGee, managing director of the Majestic, with whom Mr. Eldridge was for a long time associated in the east.

Grand Opening of State Film Company.

Detroit, Mich.—Charles Muelman, general manager for the State film company, of Detroit, took up his new duties on February 10. The company has offices at 228 Broadway Market building. Mr. Muelman has been associated with Thomas H. Ince for the past nine months, handling "Civilization" in the state of Indiana. The State film company is the owner of this picture for Michigan and it will be released shortly from the Detroit offices. It will have its first presentation in Detroit at the Washington theater in the very near future and the run will be indefinite. A grand opening of the State film company exchange took place Thursday, February 15. Col. W. S. Butterfield, president, was on hand to meet the Michigan exhibitors who paid their respects. Other pictures to be released soon are "Libertine," "The Conquest of Canaan" and "The Mormon Maid."

Michigan Theaters Ass'n Opens Offices.

The Michigan Theaters Association, a co-operative booking and publicity organization, has opened offices at 923 Peter Smith building, Detroit, under the management of E. R. Bloom, formerly with Metro. This association has one member in each of the larger cities of Michigan, and its object is to co-operate both on bookings and publicity matter. The association has already booked "The Girl Philippa" and "The Barrier," guaranteeing the exchanges 25 days' solid bookings.

F. A. Coleman Heads U. Exchange.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—B. S. Davis, manager of the Universal exchange at Grand Rapids, has resigned, and has been succeeded by F. A. Coleman, formerly in charge of Universal affairs in the Saginaw valley district.

Jerome Abrams Visits Detroit.

Detroit, Mich.—Jerome Abrams, personal representative for M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Universal and Bluebird exchanges, is spending the month of February in Detroit. He is on his way to the Pacific coast, and will visit all of the Universal exchanges en route. Mrs. Abrams accompanies him.

Labor Rebukes Rockford Mayor

Mayor's High-Handed Disregard of the Popular Referendum on the Sunday Opening of Picture Theaters Disapproval of by Local Labor Unions—Pledge Themselves to Work at the Ballot Boxes.

By Frank H. Madison, 628 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

ROCKFORD, Ill.—Organized labor has formally expressed its disapproval of the action of the mayor and city council in attempting to close Sunday moving picture shows. Resolutions have been passed by the Rockford Central Labor Union and by the Carpenters' and Joiners' Union declaring that union men protest the overriding the will of the majority of the people, as expressed in a referendum election, and that the members of these unions have pledged themselves to work at the ballot box against all candidates who have disregarded the will of the people. The carpenters' union in its resolution declares that the moving picture parlors have become the only place of amusement and recreation that the average working man can afford to patronize, and sees the attempt of the city council to completely close these places as injurious to the welfare of the working man.

Illinois Exhibitors and Theaters.

Morris, Ill.—Lee Osomonsen has leased the Royal theater from Mrs. Nellie Smith of Marseilles. The theater has been under a sub-lease to Mrs. Gage, of Sandwich, for a year. Russell Wright will remain in charge of the projection.

Shawneetown, Ill.—T. O. Sloan has sold the Grand theater to Charles Willis, of Bowlesville township.

Waukegan, Ill.—Plans have been under way to reopen the old Majestic theater as a feature moving picture house. It also will play theatrical attractions.

Farmington, Ill.—A. Mason & Co. have opened a moving picture show in the opera house. A three piece orchestra is furnishing music.

Rockford, Ill.—The new Princess theater which has been opened at 322 West State street, with Robert Hopper as manager, plans to remodel its front soon.

Taylorville, Ill.—Moving picture theaters at Tovey were closed because of an epidemic of small pox.

Rockford, Ill.—The Orpheum theater has booked "The Daughter of the Gods" for February 22-25.

Sydney, Ill.—W. S. Temple, a local exhibitor, promised to donate to the Sidney band, 40 per cent. of his receipts on Tuesday evenings in February and March.

Michigan Theater Jottings.

Lansing, Mich.—The Flint Palace theater company, Battle Creek and Flint, has been issued articles of incorporation, with capital $20,000; amusement places. Stockholders, Walter S. Butterfield, Charles K. Taylor, E. C. Beatty, all of Battle Creek.

Lansing, Mich.—J. Scheiber, who has the state rights to "Charity," gave a special showing of that film to state senators and representatives at the Majestic theater.

Vermontville, Mich.—Barber Bros. have purchased a building which will be remodeled as a moving picture theater.

St. Ignace, Mich.—The Grand theater owned by Charles Kynoch & Co., was destroyed by fire. The loss was $7,000 with $1,000 insurance. The origin of the fire was not known.

Muskegon, Mich.—The Lion theater had a fire which caused much smoke but little damage.

Owosso, Mich.—A fire in the operating room at the Majestic theater destroyed 1,000 feet of film.

Three Rivers, Mich.—By moving the stage and screen back, the Vaudeville theater has added 70 seats.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—Ward Brown, who has been manager of the Strand theater, has succeeded David Kline as manager of Majestic Gardens. Kline going to Ohio to handle a state right film. Cedric Lawrence, who has been treasurer at the Majestic Gardens, will be manager at the Strand.

Minneapolis News Letter

By John L. Johnston, 604 Film Exchange Building, Minneapolis, Minn.

Strand to Show First Run Metros.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—According to an announcement given out by A. A. Hixon, of the Minneapolis Metro exchange, the Lyric, Elliott & Sherman's large local theater will display first run Metro productions in the future. The Lyric began a run of "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" Sunday, February 11, and since last September has displayed big state rights features almost exclusively. "Itamona," "The Crisis," "A Daughter of the Gods" and "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" are among the big features to enjoy runs of two weeks or more at the Lyric.

"The White Raven," with Ethel Barrymore in the lead, will open at the Lyric February 25 if present plans carry, and "One of Many," featuring Frances Nelson, the St. Paul actress; "The Promise," and "Secret of Eve" will follow. The Strand formerly displayed first run Metro pictures here.

Adding Vaudeville Attractions.

Minneapolis, Minn.—"Extra added attractions" are finding their way into local picture theaters. Two weeks ago the New Garden had a troupe of Hawaiian dancers and singers added to its bill, and last week a singer was put on extra. The week of February 11 saw five Winnipeg-St. Paul dog derby drivers and their teams added to the bill at the Strand, and the New Garlick added a concert pianist to its program.

A Busy Road Man.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Dan Cupid is out of the trenches and charging through the ranks of local film men. Frank Thayer, manager of the Calhoun here, and A. McClenaghan, manager of the Alhambra, have just announced that they have succumbed to Dan's ferocious attack and have joined the ranks of the benedicts, while Dan himself has gone into the Supreme Feature Film Company exchange (according to reports) and is mobilizing there. Two employees of that exchange (names deleted by censor) are soon to be married, the World writer is informed, and upstairs over the Supreme exchange Cupid has signed up Edward J. Frye for life. Dan missed two healthy looking bachelors at the Supreme, Lee Horn and Mike Conhaim being out to lunch.

Mrs. W. S. Baldwin Dies.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Mrs. W. S. Baldwin, wife of the general manager of the "Civilization" department of the Supreme exchange, died here last week following a long illness. Mrs. Baldwin was a sister of Rose Melville (Sis Hopkins) and interested in theatrical work since childhood.

Montevideo Manager Fills a Gap.

Montevideo, Minn.—Manager E. E. Marsh, of the local opera house, broke into the limelight here recently and in an unusual yet pleasing way. The extraordinary fall of snow held a westbound train here all of Sunday afternoon. While the train crew worked to clear the track Mr. Marsh brought his picture machine and features from his theater to the train, connected his machine to the generator in the baggage car, and displayed films for the benefit of passengers for several hours. Several film men were among the passengers who crowded into the car in which the pictures were being shown.

St. Paul, Minn.—Manager S. R. Thompson, of the Feature Film Company, has announced that three reels of St. Paul carnival films and one reel of the Winnipeg-St. Paul dog derby race have been completed and are now ready for booking.

Duluth, Minn.—Manager John Wilander, of the Progress Feature Film Company, has gone to New York city in search of new features for his exchange. Mr. Wilander intends to remain in the east about two weeks.

Monogram and Lochren Merge.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The Monogram Film Company of this city has merged with the Lochran Film Manufacturing and Advertising service, Film Exchange building, and its future business will be conducted under the name of the Monogram slide division of the Lochran firm. G. C. Johnston will remain in charge of the slide department. John Fournier has been added to the sales force of the organization.

Green and Steffes Buy "Ignorance."

Minneapolis, Minn.—Harry H. Green, Dewey theater, and W. A. Steffes, Northern theater here, have purchased the right to distribute "Ignorance" in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Montana and the Dakotas. The film will be given its initial showing in Minneapolis within a few weeks.

Among Local Exchangemen.

Minneapolis, Minn.—C. L. Booth, Twin City salesman for the Greater Vitagraph, has discovered in the Vitagraph Bulletin that he led the salesmen of the United States last month in getting business.

Manager W. K. Howard, of the Vitagraph exchange, has received numerous requests for bookings of "The Fall of a Nation" and "Battle Cry of Peace" since the German-American break.

Manie Gottlieb, manager of the Favorite exchange here, has begun booking "Captivating Mary Carstairs" simultaneously with the initial installment of the story of the play in the Minneapolis Journal. Norma Talmadge is the star of the photoplay.

Joseph McDermott, formerly with three local papers and European war correspondent, has been secured by J. V. Bryson to assist with the publicity work on "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea."

Buy Rights for "The Spoilers."

Minneapolis, Minn.—Frank Woskie, of the Favorite feature exchange, and Ted Karatz, formerly with the Supreme feature exchange, have bought the rights on "The Spoilers" for Delaware, District of Columbia, West Virginia, Kentucky and Maryland, and Mr. Karatz has gone east to open offices. Baltimore will likely be selected.

C. F. Rose Joins Artcraft.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager R. C. Fox, of the Artcraft, has added C. F. Rose to his road staff. Another salesman will be added to the staff shortly.

Secures "Doc Yak" Rights.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Edward Frye, Film Exchange building, has secured rights to distribute "Doc Yak" cartoon comics in this territory. Incidentally, Mr. Frye is to become a benedict shortly.

Two New Vitagraph Road Men.

Minneapolis, Minn.—E. S. Flynn and Benjamin Hall have been added to the road staff of the local Vitagraph exchange.

Manager Howard now has six salesmen on the road.

George Comer Goes to Elliott-Sherman.

Minneapolis, Minn.—George Comer has left the Zehith Feature Film Company exchange and joined the "Ramona" department of the Elliott-Sherman exchange.

Duluth, Minn.—The Clinton Amusement Company, controlling the Sunbeam and Strand theaters here, has just contracted with the Minneapolis exchange for future Fox features.

Theater Changes and Notes.

Cedar Rapids, Ia.—F. J. Smid has sold the Ideal theater here to W. M. Giffin of Columbus Junction.

Hankinson, N. D.—William Mefers and A. J. Winchell of Jamestown, N. D., have bought the Gem theater here.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Managers Al Kells and Fran W. Thayer of the Bijou and Calhoun theaters, respectively, have booked Selznick features for future showing at their theater. Mr. Kelly plans to increase the admission price at the Bijou.

Owatonna, Minn.—Fire did slight damage to the operating room of the Palace theater here recently.

Crookston, Minn.—The Bijou has been closed by city officials because it did not pay its license fee in time.

Crystal, N. D.—E. F. Doran has opened a picture theater here.

St. Paul, Minn.—The Alhambra theater here has begun displaying "The Great Secret" Metro serial, in addition to its regular program of Triangle releases. The Alhambra is owned and managed by J. G. Gilosky, president, North West Exhibitors' corporation.

Indiana's Sunday Opening Bill

Indiana Exhibitors' League Is Preparing to Push the Bill Recently Introduced in the General Assembly Authorizing Sabbath Shows in State—Churches Will Make a Hot Fight to Defeat the Measure.

From the Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—Senator McCray, of Indianapolis, introduced a bill in the Indiana general assembly last week providing for the legal opening on Sunday of moving picture show houses throughout the state. The Indiana Exhibitors' League is preparing to make a hard fight to have the bill passed, but from all indications is going to meet with considerable outside opposition.

That the churches of the state will be asked to oppose the measure is evident from a statement issued by Dr. A. B. Storms, president of the Indiana Church Federation, and the Rev. Morton C. Pearson, secretary of the Indianapolis Church Federation. The statement says:

"Senate bill No. 259, which provides for the legalization of moving picture shows on Sunday throughout the state of Indiana, should by all means be defeated. We can not make ourselves believe that the members of the present legislature will consent to pass such a measure. This legislature has been too historic, and has been fixed on too high a plane to come down to the low level of making legal the operation of moving picture shows on a day which has been designated for years as the day of rest and worship. In order, however, that the members of the present assembly should know the feeling of the churches of Indiana, we respectfully suggest that letters, telegrams and petitions be forwarded at once to all members of the assembly, asking them to vote against said bill, and to safeguard the high and holy interests of the Sabbath day."

Representatives of the exhibitors expect to be able to point out to the legislators the fact that the people of the state are demanding the opening of the motion picture houses on Sunday. "The time has come," said one prominent exhibitor, "when the church should realize that it is unjust discrimination to permit Sunday shows in some cities of the state and not in others. Should the people be restrained from attending Sunday shows just because they live in a small town? They are all citizens and should be entitled to the same privileges. The same law which prohibits the opening of Sunday shows does not compel the people to go to church. In view of this what are the churches going to provide for the thousands of idle people to do on Sunday afternoons and evenings? The Sunday show can be made both educational and religious."

Indiana Exhibitors and Theaters.

Delphi, Ind.—The Bradshaw room on the north side of the public square, which has been unoccupied for several months, will be reopened next week by F. E. Wallace, who is installing equipment for a motion picture show. Mr. Wallace has decorated the interior and expects to have one of the coziest little theaters in the city.

Stage Directors in Picture Theaters?

Terre Haute, Ind.—Moving picture theater owners, at a recent meeting, perfected plans for a campaign against the bill introduced in the Indiana general assembly by John L. Cronin, representative from Vigo county. The bill requires all theaters, including motion picture houses, to have a competent stage director.

Huntington Sunday Exhibitors Fined.

Huntington, Ind.—Huntington will not have Sunday picture shows so far as the Huntington Motion Picture Company, which controls two local photoplay houses, is concerned. In a test case in the Huntington circuit court last week the jury returned a verdict of guilty and the defendants were fined $1 and costs for violating the law prohibiting Sunday opening. T. Guy Perfect, president of the company, and Elmer Fouse, his house manager, were the defendants. No future attempts will be made to reopen the houses on Sunday.

Start Local Censorship in Crawfordsville

Crawfordsville, Ind.—The city council of this city, at a recent meeting, passed an ordinance providing for a board of censorship for all motion picture shows. Seven Crawfordsville citizens, including three women, were named as members of the board. The passing of the ordinance grew out of an indignation meeting held several weeks ago, at which it was decided to impress on members of the council the need of a censorship board.

Monroeville, Ind.—F. J. White has sold his motion picture theater here to W. H. Hyatt, of Churubusco.

Bluffton, Ind.—Charles W. Decker has purchased a half interest in the Grand opera house, recently purchased by John H. Painter. The house has been leased to the Gaiety Theater Company, operators of several motion picture shows, for a period of ten years.

Sunday Opening Bill in Nebraska Senate

Senator Tanner of Douglas Has Introduced a Bill to Legalize Sunday Shows—Carries an Occupation Tax of from $2 to $10.

By Frank H. Madison, 628 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

LINCOLN, Neb.—Broadminded legislators are endeavoring to secure the passage of laws which will make the Nebraska exhibitor who gives a moving picture show less like an outcast. Senator Tanner of Douglas has introduced in the state senate bill No. 224, which legalizes Sunday shows. The bill provides for an occupation tax from $10 a month down to $2, according to the size of the town. It also carries an emergency clause, which would enable the law to go into effect immediately after its passage by both houses of the legislature and its approval by the governor. Representative Regan of Platte has introduced into the house bill No. 529, which provides that cities and villages may permit Sunday shows by a majority vote. This vote may be taken either at a regular or a special election.

Reel Fellows' Club of Nebraska Organized.

Omaha, Neb.—Exchange managers, exhibitors, supply men, etc., of Omaha, have organized the Reel Fellows' Club of Nebraska, with C. W. Taylor, local manager of the General Film, as president. The membership at present is local, but as indicated by the name it plans to have the organization cover the entire state. It has been suggested that as soon as the neighboring film men have become members a moving picture week will be held in Omaha, and a grand ball given as a climax.

Other officers elected are as follows: C. W. Taylor, president; H. M. Thomas, manager of the Strand, vice-president; R. D. Shirley, Muse, secretary; J. E. Kirk, local manager of Pathe Film Company, treasurer; S. H. Goldberg, Sun, J. W. Rachman, Grand, and H. B. Watts of the Bee were elected on the board of directors.

Missouri Valley Film Company Suit.

Lincoln, Neb.—Suit has been filed in the district court in behalf of holders of ninety-eight shares of stock in the Missouri Valley Film Company against Charles Strader, president, Robert R. Smith, treasurer, and Hugh B. Werner, secretary. The company was incorporated in March last year by Strader, Smith, Milton H. Wright and Byrne C. Marcellus. It is charged that the defendants conspired to appropriate to their own use a large amount of capital stock by making a false showing on the books as to payments, Strader and Smith crediting themselves for investment accounts and also merchandise accounts of $2,550.

The investment account is said to represent antiquated films and supplies not worth more than $1,000.

The defendants are charged with issuing $1,500 worth of treasury stock to Nellie A. Vail, and $500 of the same to Carlyle King, appropriating the proceeds, and last October to have sold $4,200 worth of stock for cash to B. H. Cabbage, not accounting for the money.

Choosing Films to Suit Community.

Omaha, Neb.—Special children's programs for the Strand and Muse theaters by the Omaha Woman's Club proved so satisfactory that other neighborhoods have asked this organization to choose films for theaters in their vicinity. As a result programs at the Besse theater on the south side and at the Boulevard theater are now picked by the women. The Besse theater opened its shows with the "Battle Hymn of the Republic," and the Boulevard with "The Boy Scouts." The interest in these programs is heightened by concerted action, such as observing bird day by use of appropriate films in the theaters.

New Orleans Considers Sunday Closing

Moral Uplift by Means of the Screen Is Not Over Popular with Many in Gulf State Communities—Yet These Pictures Fill Theaters.

N. E. Thatcher, 3801 Canal street, New Orleans, La.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—This city is just now undergoing a moral upheaval and it is possible that the spasm of Sunday closing may reach the motion picture theaters. Already the question has been under consideration by the authorities, but their position is not entirely clear in the matter and they have hesitated about taking a decided step. The people of New Orleans set big store by the picture shows and all of them are doing a good business.

It is a noticeable fact that the problem productions and "moral lessons" draw the best crowds, and exhibitors are on the lookout at all times for shows that present a moral uplift through the medium of one or more nude women. For instance, "The Garden of Knowledge," which was supposed to teach a dense but eager populace all that it had been missing relative to eugenics, broke all records for continuous runs in this city, having been shown for twenty-five days at advanced prices. Then it was sent out into the country towns, and it at once encountered rough sledding.

At Baton Rouge an attempt was made to stop its exhibition, but none of the self-constituted censors would look at the picture, and the authorities in the absence of personal complaints refused to suppress the feature. At Lake Charles the objection to the showing of the picture assumed the proportions of a public uprising, and the press was drawn into the controversy. Other towns have been none the less pronounced in their position with regard to moral uplift through the medium of the screen, and it is not certain what the final outcome will be.

May Employ Expert to Teach Care of Film

Torn Condition of Film Returned to New Orleans Exchanges Suggests Use of Able Operator to Travel and Adjust Machines.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—For several weeks long and inordinate wails have been going up from the various exchanges because of the dilapidated condition in which films are returned to the home offices. These cries of annoyance are not without their sufficient reason. It has almost become the rule that when a perfectly good film is sent out it will be returned all "chewed to pieces" and the poor exchange man is confronted with the alternative of raising a row and losing a customer or of standing the loss and looking pleasant. Last week a new copy of a World Film feature was sent to a theater in one of the better towns of the state where it might be assumed that it would have reasonably good treatment. It came back practically ruined. There were sprocket marks down the center of nearly the entire five reels, and the worst about it was that the World manager is a woman and could not swear—leastwise audibly. Because of the almost habitual return of films in bad condition, Manager Karl A. Bugbee has suggested that the exchange managers combine to employ an expert operator to visit every theater in this territory and go over the projection machines and put them in first-class condition. The calculation is made that the cost of sending out such an operator will be much less than the loss to films because of the defective condition of the machines in the great majority of the theaters. The matter has been given serious consideration, and it is quite likely that country exhibitors will have the opportunity to have their equipment put in good condition without expense to themselves.

New Orleans' Strand Opening Delayed

Management Not Dissatisfied at the Chance to Organize and Properly Train Its House Staff—No Break in Triangle Programs.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—The opening of the new Strand theater has been somewhat delayed by reason of the inability of the contractors to obtain supplies on time, but Manager Richards has provided against any disappointment to the devotees to the Triangle feature program by leasing the Lafayette theater for a term of weeks, and the Triangle program will be presented in this theater until the Strand is ready.

The Triangle program will be discontinued at the Triangle theater on Saturday, February 17, and will be followed by the Paramount service. Manager Boehinger proposes to present the Paramount with same attention to detail that he has given to the Triangle and he asserts that he expects no appreciable fluctuation of patronage because of the change, maintaining that it is the theater and its management, and not the pictures entirely, that build and hold the clientele.

There is no disguising the fact that the Triangle program has won an immense following in New Orleans and on this account the Saenger amusement company has arranged that there shall be no lull in the presentation of the pictures pending the completion of their new theater. And, besides this, they regard the delay as not without its compensations, for it will enable the organization to train its house crews so that perfect service shall be accorded to the patrons of the Strand. It is the intention of the Strand management to offer its patrons an entertainment, not a mere picture show, and to this end every person connected with the organization is being impressed with the importance of rendering considerate attention to the patrons and to have each showing of the program attended with high-class attention to every detail.

A Hustling Exchange Man.

New Orleans, La.—Al Dunning, the Nestor of the film salesmen of the New Orleans territory, has just returned from a trip to Birmingham, Ala., where he closed some motion picture deals that won for him the unstinted commendation of Manager Stephens of the Mutual.

Mr. Dunning goes to Birmingham on an average quarterly and the results of his trips heretofore have been a little better than an average, but he was not throwing himself especially until his last journey. He is an old-time exhibitor and knows the game up one side and down the other. He has a wide circle of friends in this territory and is glad that the fellows who are his enemies are his enemies. In the early days of the exhibitor's tribulations he had his share of grief. He not only ran his own house with due regard for his patrons and public decorum, but he constituted himself a terror to the fellow who attempted to run any house in any other manner. He has been instrumental in closing several houses for the benefit of the public and he is still a firm advocate of the policy of having things just as they should be. He wants the best shows and he wants his customers to have them. He has the faculty of helping the new exhibitor over many of the rough places in the amusement road and his advice is counted good by men who are reasonably well versed in the exhibition game. Dunning is quiet and unassuming, but he has the faculty of getting what he goes after in the way of film business.

KANSAS CITY NEWS LETTER.

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Bldg.

Fatty Arbuckle Day at Kansas City.

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—This city is to have a Fatty Arbuckle day soon, if all the plans work out satisfactorily. Mr. Arbuckle is coming through late in February from the coast, and the children, as well as the men and women of this city will have a chance to see him. The plans call for a formal reception by officials of the city, and attendance on various associations such as the Rotary Club and the Screen Club. There will be a banquet in the evening.

"Snow White" Party in Topeka.

Topeka, Kan.—The Topeka Daily Capital and the Topeka Daily Journal are joining hands in giving a "Snow White" party to the people of Topeka and vicinity. This will be given in the Auditorium, February 18, these papers having made arrangements with the Paramount exhibitors to secure the film. The same plan which the Kansas City Star used will be followed out.

Ida M. Waldon Remodeling Her Theater.

Hastings, Neb.—Miss Ida M. Waldon, manager of the Wonderland theater, Hastings, Neb., is in Kansas City making arrangements for draperies and fixtures for her theater, which is now being remodeled. This remodeling will consist of taking out two pillars and using a girder, thereby making every seat in the house available. The Wonderland seats 600.

Miss Waldon enjoys the endorsement of the Parent-Teachers' Association and other such organizations. She shows Paramount films four days a week and on family group night she adds a Burton Holmes travel picture.

Kansas Theater Notes and Changes.

Guthrie, Okla.—Med Pedigo, Guthrie, has purchased the Highland theater.

Howardon, Kan.—H. L. Jones, manager and owner of the Lyric at Howardon, has sold his playhouse to Scrivon Brothers, of Sioux Falls, Kan.

Salina, Kan.—Herbert Thatcher, manager of the Strand in Salina, has booked the first Max Linder comedy in this territory.

Clay Center, Kan.—The Rex theater, Clay Center, Kan., has been adorned with a new front.

El Dorado, Kan.—S. S. Voigt has received a contract to erect a two-story building, 25x120 feet, in El Dorado, for a moving picture theater.

Abilene, Kan.—Howard Collins, formerly proprietor of the Lyric at Abilene, Kan., has leased the Seelye theater there. Mr. Collins now owns and operates theaters at Solomon and Lindsborg.

Winfield, Kan.—C. L. Lathrop and R. E. Rankin have bought the Novelty theater, Winfield, Kan. Mr. Lathrop will be the active manager.

Yates Center, Kan.—F. E. De Vore, who recently purchased the Star theater at Yates Center, has installed new equipment and will also remodel the building.

Guthrie, Okla.—Med Pedigo, Guthrie, has purchased the Highland theater at that place.

Missouri Theater Notes.

Butler, Mo.—Charles L. Fisk, who recently bought the opera house at Butler, has announced that he will reopen the theater with pictures.

Gallatin, Mo.—Victor Newton has bought the Isis theater, Gallatin, from J. S. Turck. Mr. Newton was formerly with the Newton Supply Company, Des Moines, Ia.

Kansas City Exchange Notes.

Kansas City, Mo.—John W. Hicks, manager of the General Film branch at Kansas City, visited Milwaukee on the return trip from the convention of managers at Chicago.

V. A. Kingsley, a new traveler for the Bluebird, was formerly with the Kansas City Feature Film Company in this territory.

C. D. Struble, one of the old-timers in the film business in the Kansas City district, is now managing the Kansas City office of Triangle. Mr. Struble was formerly manager of the General office here, then manager of Monarch, and recently was handling "Where Are My Children?"

A. J. Reed, formerly on the road for Vitagraph, is now handling the McClure series department at Triangle headquarters. The opening of the series at the Wonderland was auspicious, with large advertisements and keen interest among exhibitors, as well as patrons.

C. M. Hood with Local Vitagraph.

Kansas City, Mo.—In a recent issue of the World, C. M. Hood was mentioned as being connected with the Universal. This was a mistake as Mr. Hood is connected with the Vitagraph exchange in Kansas City, Mo.

F. F. Nine, who has been with the Vitagraph exchange in Kansas City for some time in the capacity of booker, has accepted the position of assistant manager of the exchange. Mr. Nine is an experienced man in the trade, and is well known. With his experience and ability he will doubtless make a valuable aid to the success of the firm. Mr. Nine has booked "The Girl Philippa" for two weeks solid. This picture is going big in Kansas City and quite a bit of interest is being evidenced, not only by the exhibitors, but also by the public.

George H. Bowles Becomes Bluebird Manager.

Kansas City, Mo.—George H. Bowles, district publicity manager for Universal at Kansas City, has succeeded W. B. Emrich as manager of the Bluebird distribution.

Texas Managers Association Grows

Headquarters of State Amusement Managers' Association Have Been Opened in Austin, Texas—Will Be Run in Conjunction with the Dallas Office—Secretary Campbell Will Spend His Time Between the Two Addresses.

By N. E. Flanagan, 516 North Ervay St., Dallas, Texas.

DALLAS, TEXAS.—Practically all of El Paso motion picture houses have affiliated with the Texas Amusement Managers' Association. Ben B. Lewis, formerly of Dallas and Houston, was the leading spirit in the organization movement there. El Paso is a live organization town, anyway, and much valuable co-operation is expected from them.

Four of the Austin houses are now members of the Texas Managers' Association. Headquarters for the state have been opened in the Majestic theater building there in addition to the Dallas office. The office is in charge of Grace Alvis. Secretary R. H. Campbell spends his time between the Dallas and Austin offices, looking after the organization work out over the state.

P. G. Cameron, of the Crystal theater, Dallas, made a trip last week to Bonham, in the interest of the state association. His trip was very successful and the result was that the Texas legislature will hear from that section of the state in no unmistakable terms. Cameron is a live organization man and a great strength to the body.

A Rigid Bill Proposed.

A rigid bill is now in the legislature to govern the construction of all theaters where motion pictures are exhibited. This bill is most exacting in its specifications and if it passes and an attempt is made to enforce its provisions, fully one-half of the shows in the smaller towns will be forced out of business, at least temporarily, and a complete reorganization of the whole show business will be necessary. Fully two thirds of the Dallas houses will have to be abandoned because of the requirements for rear exits, and exits from the balconies.

A "John Barleycorn" Campaign Coming.

Dallas, Texas.—Texas prohibitionists are going to make a campaign over the state with the film "John Barleycorn." The anti-saloon league has purchased the film for Texas and it has been delivered by Mrs. M. E. Fulton, now of Austin. As soon as the legislature is over the film will be used in the churches through the entire state. It is possible that several copies of the film will be operated at one time.

Waco Managers and Operators Agree.

Waco, Texas.—Waco managers and operators met Friday, February 2, to negotiate a new contract. The operators had asked for a scale of $30 per week and the managers felt that in view of the poor business at present they could not afford the increase. It was finally agreed between the managers and the union's committee that the old scale should stand, or in event that a new one was negotiated that it be the Dallas scale which is $25 per week of seven days, and in case the seventh day is not worked the scale remain the same. The meeting was presided over by secretary of the state association, Robert H. Campbell, who was called there by the union and the managers as a mediator.

Texas Exhibitors and Theaters.

Waco, Texas.—Leroy Bickle has sold out his interest in the Rex theater in Waco and hereafter will devote all his time to the bookings for the Central feature film company, which has offices in Dallas and Waco.

Dallas, Tex.—Tom Parker has been appointed manager of the World Film in Dallas. Nat Barach, present manager, has been assigned to special work under the Southern division manager, G. E. Weaver, assistant Southern division manager, is here now and will remain here for a month.

J. H. Snively, former owner of the Princess theater, of Paris, is now manager of the Royal theater at Texarkana.

The Majestic theater at Decatur, Tex., burned several days ago. Fire in the light plant put the Regal theater and the Queen theater of the same place out of business last week. But they are in good shape this week.

"The Secret Kingdom," serial of the Vitagraph Company, is creating a favorable stir in Texas. Many telegrams of congratulations have been received.

Galveston, Texas.—E. H. Hulsey, of Dallas, Houston, Waco and Galveston, has just added another house to that string. He has recently acquired the Crystal theater of Galveston. Mr. Hulsey is now interested in four amusement houses there, including the Grand opera house.

J. E. Huey Back With Vitagraph.

J. E. Huey, formerly with Kleine-Edison, has resumed his old post as booker for the Vitagraph Co.

Visitors in Dallas.

Dallas, Texas.—Lyttle Eppstein, of the Royal theater, San Antonio, has been in Dallas for the past two days. Mike Murphy of the Sweetwater theater, Sweetwater, Texas, was here and contracted with the World-Brady service. J. A. Holton of the Pierce theater, Port Arthur, Texas, visited Dallas and arranged to use the World's Clara Kimball Young subjects.

C. E. Tandy Talks to Exhibitors.

Dallas, Texas.—C. E. Tandy, general manager of the Southern Paramount, was booked to talk to exhibitors from all over the state on Feb. 11 at a conference in Dallas. All exhibitors, whether Paramount or not, have been invited. He will stay here but two days, as numerous telegrams have been received urging him to attend the conference at Oklahoma City next week. Many local film men will also attend. A large number from Dallas were present at the convention in Little Rock last week.

Refusing Objectionable Films

Moving Picture Distributors in the Rocky Mountain District Make a Friendly Agreement with Mothers' Congress and Parent Teachers to Handle No Films of the Trouble Making Kind—Women Will Co-operate on the Good Films.

E. C. Day, Denver Correspondent.

DENVER, COLO.—A friendly agreement binding virtually every moving picture agent in the Rocky Mountain district to handle no objectionable films has been entered into by the Film Exchange Board of Trade and the Denver district of the Mothers' Congress.

This is the outcome of a plan by which the mothers and the film men have been working in co-operation during the past several months to provide shows suitable for children, and which were approved by the women. Friday and Saturday were set aside each week for the showing of especially appropriate plays for women and children. A committee of film men meets weekly with a committee representing the Mothers' Congress and the Parent-Teachers' Association and endorsement is given to one or more pictures scheduled to appear in local houses.

The film men have made an earnest effort to provide high-class entertainment and the women reciprocated by going out of their way to recommend patronage of the photoplay houses. Both have profited by the plan—the women by winning their point for "better pictures" and the exhibitors through increased business.

Women Against Censorship.

As a result the women, instead of advocating censorship as has been the common practice, are opposed to this form of what they term "political graft" and are satisfied that more can be accomplished by working in friendly co-operation with the film men.

At a meeting of the Mothers' Congress on February 7 the Film Exchange Board of Trade of Denver agreed in writing to continue the same friendly relations that have existed since the beginning of the plan outlined above.

The Formal Agreement.

The document says: "Every film exchange in Denver agrees and pledges itself that all eliminations ordered by the National Board of Review and Mrs. Margaret B. Conway, local amusement inspector, shall be permanent. The eliminations will be made before the films are shown in Denver and will not under any circumstance be reinserted in the film after first showing.

"We desire to congratulate you on actually accomplishing more and better practical results along the lines of your work than has been achieved anywhere in the United States. This has been done without expense to the state or city and we feel that the results will be permanent, because, under the somewhat novel system you adopted, the returns to the moving picture theater proprietors will be increased, which naturally will in itself strengthen the movement until it becomes universal."

The agreement was signed by H. H. Buckwalter, president of the Board of Trade, and A. E. Fair and W. E. Scott, members of the committee.

A Drastic Sunday Closing Bill.

Denver, Colo.—The moving picture industry in Colorado is now menaced by a Sunday closing law. The danger lurks in the public welfare bill, which has been introduced in the state legislature. This is the fourth measure now pending which has to do with the film business in this state. It has been introduced in both branches of the law making body, in the senate by Coldren and Schermerhorn, and in the house by Houtchens. Coldren and Houtchens introduced two of the three censorship laws,

The welfare bill is the most sweeping ever introduced in this state. Under it the welfare boards proposed for the various cities and towns in the state will be given unlimited power and unlimited funds with which to carry out their desires.

It is possible under the provisions of the bill to close theaters on Sunday, revoke theater licenses and in fact absolutely control every form of amusement and recreation.

The bill does not specify Sunday closing of theaters as one of its objects, but that it is the intention of its backers to do this if the measure should become a law was stated by Theodore Hansen, the Kansas preacher, who was responsible for the introduction of the various proposed laws against moving pictures.

It is the consensus of opinion among those in touch with legislative affairs that the bill will fail of passage because of its too drastic provisions.

The bill is being opposed by all the women's organizations of the state on the ground that the work now being done by these bodies, without cost to the state, will be placed under the supervision of welfare boards, and probably revolutionized to the dislike of the women.

A clause in the measure which says that the welfare boards shall have "supervision of all matters of public welfare pertaining to public health and morals" also has aroused much indignation because it is claimed that under this provision it would be possible to interfere seriously with the teachings and practices of the Christian Science Church.

Iowa News Letter

By Dorothy Day, Register-Tribune, Des Moines, Ia.

Film Notes Over the State.

AMES, Ia.—J. E. Foley, of the firm of Matlock & Foley, sold his half interests in the Princess and Palm theaters in Ames to W. E. Matlock, the other member.

Perry, Ia.—C. R. Marckres, owner of the Rex theater in Perry, has installed a four-piece orchestra in his theater for the accompaniment of all his pictures.

Belle Plaine, Ia.—Mr. Fredericks, formerly connected with the Universal in Sioux Falls, South Dakota, has purchased the American theater in Belle Plaine from W. A. Huffman.

Scandia, Ia.—J. W. Albertson succeeds Carl Sullivan in the management of the Electric theater in Scandia, Ia.

Marion, Ia.—One of the biggest prices ever paid for an Iowa motion picture theater was paid by Joe Mulherois, a retired farmer of Ringgold, Ia., when he gave Wm. Umbrecht $25,000 for the Garden theater in Marion. Mr. Umbrecht was making no effort to sell his theater, but simply named that price as the lowest at which he would sell.

Morrison, Ia.—The Electric theater operated in the opera house at Morrison was destroyed by fire last week. W. F. Stewart was the owner.

Jessup, Ia.—W. J. Campbell has opened up the Grand opera house in Jessup, Ia., and is now showing pictures and booking a few road shows there.

Queasqueton, Ia.—In three or four weeks the town of Queasqueton will have a motion picture house. No other house has been opened in this town of some 800 people. Mr. Bettinger is the name of the manager of the new house, Independence, Ia.—Mr. Kelly has purchased the Allerton theater in Independence from a Mr. Klatt. Mr. Kelly is from Early, Ia., and is a new man in the motion picture business.

Mount Pleasant, Ia.—J. R. Reichling, of South Dakota, purchased the Princess theater in Mount Pleasant from O'Connor & Co. and opened same about the 23d of January.

Terrill, Ia.—Wilson and Tess are the new owners of the Isis theater in Terrill, Ia., and they were in Des Moines last week negotiating with the Mutual Film for service.

Newton, Ia.—F. P. Leman has purchased the Lyric theater in Newton from the Real amusement company, of which corporation he was formerly a member. The Real amusement owns theaters in Colfax, Wapello and Newton. Mr. Leman is drawing plans for a big 750-seat house in Newton, which, from the plans, will be one of the finest houses in the state when completed. It is Mr. Leman's plan to abandon the Lyric upon the completion of his new theater.

Creston, Ia.—Hal Kelly, formerly a resident of Creston but more recently an owner of a motion picture house in Beatrice, Nebraska, has been negotiating for the rental of the Willard theater in Creston. The Gilbert is the name of Kelly's house in Beatrice.

Lime Springs, Ia.—R. H. Farrar has purchased the Star theater in Lime Springs from the Peterson Bros.

Dubuque, Ia.—The Strand theater in Fort Dodge was burned almost to the ground last week and will not be rebuilt for a picture house. Billos, Thannos and Yannias, the owners, will transfer their bookings for the Strand to their other house, the Princess.

Webster City, Ia.—A. C. Schuneman, of the Isis theater in Webster City, is installing a new organ in his theater at a cost of $10,000. This theater will open about the 1st of March with Clara Kimball Young in "The Common Law."

Waterloo, Ia.—W. F. Hostetler, formerly of Wayne, Nebraska, has purchased the Crystal theater in Waterloo. The Crystal is a big second-run house on the East Side.

L. A. Sheridan Is Appointed Secretary of Association.

Des Moines, Ia.—The exchange men of Des Moines are all more than pleased with their newly formed association, the Des Moines Film Men's Association. Mr. Stombaugh, who was first appointed secretary and treasurer, has resigned because of having to spend so much of his time on the road, and L. A. Sheridan has been appointed in his place.

A Mr. Daly of the Clapp Block has been appointed the local secretary for the Hoy reporting system, which system has been installed in this new association.

Hippodrome Battles for 5-Cent Admission.

Keokuk, Ia.—The three motion picture theaters in Keokuk are having a war on prices. The Grand started the trouble when it raised prices to twenty-five cents on regular feature nights, when showing Paramount, Metro and Triangle. Soon after the Orpheum joined forces with the Garden and on the only three nights, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, that they are open, they, too, charged twenty-five cents for feature subjects. The opposition, the Hippodrome, is battling hard, showing the biggest features it can secure for only five cents.

Des Moines Visitors and Happenings.

Des Moines, Ia.—The film men of Des Moines have received letters from Sam Benjamin, of the Bliebird offices in Oklahoma City, to the effect that he will be in this city soon to pay a visit to all his friends.

Local Exchange Men—Business Notes.

Des Moines, Ia.—E. L. Meyers, formerly assistant to Manager Ballantyne in the local Mutual, has been appointed road man for that company in Eastern Iowa.

Jess Hartman, who recently joined the roadmen of the Mid West Photoplay, is reported to have done big business with the McClure's "Seven Deadly Sins" in his week's trip over the north central part of Iowa.

Hugh Bennett, who until very recently was road man for the Interstate Film, has been appointed general manager of the Feature Distributing company of Minneapolis, and will handle "Twilight Sleep" and other features over six states.

W. F. Lindsey, manager of the Idle Hour in Leon and editor of the Journal, one of the weekly papers in that county seat, was in Des Moines last week attending the state editors' association. He visited the Mutual and Pathe exchanges during his stay. Mr. Lindsey was unfortunately enough to have his theater seriously damaged by water and smoke when the store building next to his theater was burned a couple of weeks ago. However, by quick work he was able to open his doors when the time came the next evening.

San Francisco News.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Sequoia Film Company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $100,000 by F. Cooley, O. N. Freebyer, M. R. Mackinstry, B. Greene and R. E. Handlos.

T. L. Tally, a theater owner of Los Angeles, arrived here recently for a short stay, and Mr. Williams, of the Photo theater, Fresno, Cal., is also in town.

The National Film Company, 5 Kearny street, has been taking moving pictures of the state militia for recruiting purposes.

G. A. Metcalfe has furnished the projection equipment being used at the Pacific coast automobile show by the H. O. Harrison Company to advertise the Hudson automobile.

Miss Stella Uri, an attractive member of the office staff of the California film exchange, is to be married at an early date.

S. S. Theller, of the Yreka opera house, of Yreka, Cal., in the extreme northern part of the state, was a recent visitor here. Some trouble has been experienced in getting service on time, owing to the unusually hard winter.

The American Photoplayer Company has filed articles of incorporation increasing its capital stock from $100,000 to $2,000,000. The incorporators are H. J. Werner, P. J. Jacobus, Jr., G. C. Ringolsky, A. L. Abrams, J. C. McKinstry, Charles L. Firebaugh, all of San Francisco, and L. P. Brunbaum, of Boise, Idaho. It is intended to increase the capacity of the Berkeley factory at once and to establish selling agencies throughout the United States.

The Bell theater on Mission road has been sold to a Mr. Bailey.

The George Breck Photoplay Supply Company has furnished two projection machines for the Bell theater at Redwood City, Cal., now being remodeled, and has also shipped one to the Indian school at Greenville, Cal.

The Theater St. Francis has been strongly featuring the "See America First" series of films, made by the well known local cameraman, E. W. Castle.

The Polk theater has been rebuilt, following the recent fire, and is again in operation.

The first release of "Motor Pictorial" was shown recently at the Portola theater, these showing typical scenes in California, where motoring is a year-around pleasure.

Robert F. Abrahams, manager of the New Mission theater, was chairman at a smoker and meeting of the Mission Street Merchants' Association, held recently, the meeting being known as "theatrical men's night."

New California Bills Wait for Attention

Legislature Takes a Recess to Give Public Time to Examine Many Measures that Have Been Proposed—Watching Picture Bills Closely.

From T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.—The California legislature has been adjourned for a recess of one month to enable the general public to examine the many measures that have been introduced and to get in touch with their representatives at the state capitol. Several measures of decided interest to the moving picture industry have already been introduced and several others have been drawn up to be presented following the recess. At a meeting of exhibitors and exchange interests, held in this city on February 9, it was stated that a minor bill, designed to prevent the appearance of children under sixteen years of age at public entertainments, unless accompanied by parents or guardians, had been introduced into the legislature, together with one giving the right to each locality to have a local board of censorship. Added to these are measures along humane lines, one bill prohibiting the taking of moving pictures of suffering animals, another to put an end to the "bulldogging" of steers at rodeos and before the moving picture camera. The Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco is ready to send a representative to Sacramento as soon as the most important of these measures are brought up for final discussion, and the exhibitors will also be represented at these hearings.

P. T. Sherman, Theater Owner, Dies.

San Francisco, Cal.—P. T. Sherman, proprietor of the Liberty theater, 354 Haight street, passed away at the German hospital on the morning of February 8 following a stroke of apoplexy. He was taken ill while on a street car the evening before and was ejected and left in the street by the men in charge of the car, on the assumption that he was intoxicated. Their action was witnessed by a woman, who summoned aid, and the stricken man was hurried to the hospital, but failed to recover. Mr. Sherman was well known and well liked here, and died at the early age of 31 years, being survived by his widow and son. The theater will be conducted temporarily under the direction of M. M. Morris, of the Western Poster Company.

"The Crisis" Proves Drawing Card.

San Francisco, Cal.—"The Crisis," the only photoplay attraction booked for the Columbia theater during the present season, has completed a two weeks' engagement at this beautiful theater. In spite of counter attractions of unusual magnitude a very satisfactory business was done and the engagement would have been extended, had it been possible to have secured the house for a longer period. The production will be shown next at the Kinema in Oakland and the advance seat sales indicate that crowded houses will be the rule. Manager J. L. Warner, of the Warner film attractions, which controls the California rights to this photoplay, is well pleased with the initial showing that has been made and with applications for bookings coming in from the outside.

"Civilization" Run to Be Extended.

San Francisco, Cal.—The demand to see "Civilization" has been so marked that Sol L. Lesser has made arrangements to extend its engagement at the Alcazar theater to three weeks, in place of one week. A number of novel advertising stunts have been placed into effect by Mr. Lesser and John McCormick, who is handling the publicity. Six uniformed boys on bicycles have been riding up and down the main streets, large letters on their wheels spelling the word "Civilization." A king, resplendent in gold braid, has been riding through the streets in a victoria, on which has been a sign of the Alcazar theater, while an armored tank car has appeared daily in the downtown district, with guns, from which free tickets to see the production have been shot.

Music Comes High.

San Francisco, Cal.—The high cost of music at the Columbia theater is a feature that promoters of attractions are commencing to take into account when planning to use this house. No orchestra is used at this theater when the usual run of plays is in order, so that when a photoplay production or other entertainment requiring music is booked, the musicians must be paid the rate for traveling musicians, or $40 a week, as compared with the usual rate of $35, a considerable difference when there is a large orchestra.

General Manager Home.

San Francisco, Cal.—H. H. Hicks, manager of the local office of the General Film Company, is home from the conference at Chicago and is very enthusiastic over the outlook for 1917 and the releases that this concern will have to offer. He found it very cold through the middle west, especially in contrast to the climate of this city, where the temperature has rarely ever touched the freezing point.

Triangle Exchange News.

San Francisco, Cal.—A very successful trade showing of the first of the McClure pictures was given early in the month in Photoplayer Hall. O. E. Child, who came here recently from New York to handle these productions, is meeting with good success in securing bookings. C. B. Price, division manager of McClure pictures, is expected here within a few days. M. F. Lowery, Triangle representative, is out on a three weeks' trip and is sending in reports of good business from the country districts.

Film Exchange Moves.

San Francisco, Cal.—The De Luxe Film-Lasky Company, which has been located in the Humboldt bank building since entering this field, has moved to 100 Golden Gate avenue, where quarters are being shared with the Peerless film service. A balcony is being constructed here to afford the additional room needed, and other improvements are under way. Mark A. Lasky, president of the firm, expresses himself as being well pleased with the change, which was made for the purpose of getting in closer touch with exhibitors.

Film Exchange Gets New Blood.

San Francisco, Cal.—R. E. Hasbrook, well known in film exchange circles in this city, as well as in Honolulu, has joined the Western Feature Film Company, Golden Gate avenue and Leavenworth street, taking an interest in this concern. This film exchange recently took over the rights to "A Trip Through China," made by the China Cinema Company, and Dan Markowitz, who organized the exchange, has left for New York in connection with this and on other business.

E. B. Johnson to Visit Theaters.

San Francisco, Cal.—E. B. Johnson, secretary of the Turner & Dahnken circuit, which conducts a chain of large moving picture houses in California and Nevada, will leave at once for a trip of several weeks' duration to inspect theaters throughout the country for the purpose of securing ideas to be incorporated in the new houses to be erected shortly. He will first visit the Pacific northwest and will then go to Salt Lake City, Kansas City, Chicago and other prominent amusement centers.

Puyallup, Wash., Needed a Ten Cent Show

Interesting Account of a Ten Cent Show Breaking Into a Five Cent Show City—Quantity Not Quality Had Ruled.

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE, Wash.—A little over a year ago there were only five cent theaters in the small town of Puyallup, Wash., and the house that put on the most reels for the money got the patronage; consequently managers were not very particular about what they booked, so long as they got enough of it. The motion picture situation has reached such a state that the Commercial club and the Parent-Teachers' association of the town brought up the question of getting better pictures for the community.

It was then that J. C. Ehrlich came to town and bought the Stewart theater. He fixed up the house with the best equipment, and signed contracts for some of the best service. When he opened the theater the old card in the box office window had given place to a new one announcing "Admission 10 cents." People looked askance at that ten cent sign for a while, but the lobby display was enticing and they had read a lot in the papers about the wonderful pictures to be shown at the Stewart; so at length they began going in, and when they came out they told their friends all about the new picture show. And Mr. Ehrlich kept busy all the time inventing new schemes to attract their attention and keep them coming. Now he not only has the satisfaction of making a success of a ten cent show in a former five cent house, but he has gained the outspoken approval of the leading citizens of the community for raising the standard of the motion picture shows of the town. The Commercial club sent him a vote of thanks for what he has done, and the heads of several other organizations have expressed their gratitude and offered to help him in any way they could. One of these suggested that Mr. Ehrlich give him some complimentary tickets to enclose in some circulars he was sending out for his association, and the official went to the trouble to write personal letters to send along with each ticket, telling what a good program the Stewart always had. Mr. Ehrlich made these tickets good for the two nights of the week that were ordinarily his poorest show nights, and sent them out at the rate of 250 per week for six weeks. The result was that nearly every "comp" brought three or four good ones, and the regular patronage has been materially increased thereby.

Changes at the Coliseum.

Seattle, Wash.—With the opening of the Rialto in Butte, the latest addition to the Greater Theaters company's string of motion picture houses in the Northwest, there have been several changes in the office at the Coliseum, the company's largest Seattle house. C. S. Jensen, of the firm of Jensen & von Herberg, which has expanded into The Greater Theaters Company, is leaving Seattle in a few days to take charge of the Rialto. His place as manager of the Coliseum has already been taken by E. D. Tate, who recently came to Seattle in the interests of W. H. Clune's latest release, "The Eyes of the World."

Mr. Tate is by no means a stranger to the industry in Seattle, having been in the film business here for five years, from 1910 to 1915. Another addition to the Coliseum's force is J. O. Hovick, who takes the position of advertising manager.

A. W. Eden, New Fox Manager, Arrives.

Seattle, Wash.—Harry Lenhardt, western manager for Fox, arrived in the city this week with a new manager for the northwest territory. The man who will immediately take up the managerial duties in the Seattle Fox office is Albert W. Eden, who comes here from the Denver office, where he was manager. Mr. Eden's advancements in the Fox organization have been swift and steady, and all along the line he has made friends who are eager for a chance to speak a good word for him. He was for a while road man out of the Seattle office, from which he was transferred to the same position out of the Los Angeles office. From there he went as manager to Denver, and then came this last promotion.

K-E-S-E Manager Back from Idaho Trip.

Seattle, Wash.—Carl Stern, K-E-S-E northwest manager, has just returned from a trip through Washington and Idaho, booking "The Truant Soul" and the Max Linder comedies. Mr. Stern says that the future looks very bright for the industry in these two states.

Theater Transfers.

Camas, Wash.—Mrs. Lyman K. Ward has sold her interest in the Grand theater at Camas to Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Durham.

Goldendale, Wash.—J. B. Ledbetter has bought the Star theater, Goldendale, formerly operated by Brooks and Campbell.

Exchange Men Star Fight Against Censorship.

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

Seattle, Wash.—At the regular meeting of the Exchange Managers' Club on Tuesday, February 6, it was decided to send a representative down to Olympia to lobby against the Davis bill, which provides for a state board of censors. The bill is at present still in committee, but it is expected that it will be brought before the House within the next ten days. Frank S. Fountain, northwest manager for Progressive, was the one appointed to undertake the mission. He left Seattle for Olympia on the day following the managers' meeting.

Cavorting Chaplin Dummy Brings Crowds.

Seattle, Wash.—As a lobby attraction for the new Chaplin comedy, "Easy Street," Manager W. H. Smyth of the Strand has a jointed wax model of the inimitable Charlie made and clothed in a policeman's uniform. He placed it in front of his theater on a revolving platform, and as the platform goes around the figure does a very good imitation of the famous Chaplin walk. A greater part of the crowd that gathers around the figure goes into the theater eventually, and when they come out the grins they wear stay with them down the street.

The added feature at the Strand is Rex Beach's story, "Pardners."

No Censor Appeal Provided for in Portland

Mayor Albee and Civil Service Board Get Their Censor Bill Through—Only One of the Commissioners Voted with the Picture Men.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, Ore.—Portland's new censor ordinance was passed February 7 without providing for an appeal from censors' decisions to the courts.

A committee from the Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association, composed of Messrs. Simonton, Sperry, Reed, Kofeldt, Samuelson and Jackson, was on hand to plead with the commissioners for the right of appeal, but it was no use. The ordinance introduced by the mayor went through slicker'n a whistle, with but one dissenting vote, that of Commissioner George L. Baker, who sided with the picture men.

At the time of the campaign last summer to get an appeal to the courts, city officials intimated that they were for ninst changing ordinances ever and anon to suit everybody, so the exhibitors waited until the commissioners themselves asked for a change, then came in with their little request, but their wait availed nothing.

Portland Is Justly Indignant.

Portland, Ore.—Mrs. E. B. Colwell, secretary of the Portland censors, came to the rescue of the city's fair name recently when New England lawmakers tried to exhibit the Rose City as a horrible example of iniquity and immorality, due directly to the alleged evil influences of moving pictures.

It seems that up in Montpelier, Vt., the legislature is, or was on January 23, convened for the purpose of passing laws, and that a state censorship bill was demanding attention. A horrible example of conditions in a state not having a general censor was evidently needed, and Senator Dunton, father of the "movie" bills pending, picked Oregon, maybe because the state was far away.

Mrs. Colwell, censor secretary, voiced her resentment publicly and Portland moving picture men were very indignant that their city should be put in such a light, declared by them to be entirely false, when it is reputed to have the most drastic censorship in the United States.

Two Distinguished Visitors.

Portland, Ore.—G. A. Reed, manager for Mutual, entertained T. L. Tally, of Tally's

Broadway, Los Angeles, and J. D. Williams, theatrical magnate of Sidney, Australia, the same day. Mr. Reed says these gentlemen were both very enthusiastic about the famous Columbia river highway, over which an automobile trip was taken.

"Patria" Contest.

Portland, Ore.—W. W. Kofeldt, cashier of the local Pathe exchange, planned and conducted a "Patria" contest, in which twenty-four of Portland's big stores entered show windows decorated with figures of the International star and suggestive of the picture.

The first prize, a silver cup presented by James' Broadway theater, was awarded to the Eastern Outfitting Company; the second prize went to Powers Furniture Company, and the third to the Novelty Candy Company. The Judges were Edwin F. James, City Commissioner George L. Baker and Mrs. Frank McTaggart.

Gets Far East Trade.

Portland, Ore.—A. W. Walker, of Robinson & Walker, Seattle, visited his old stamping grounds on Film Row and told about his fast maturing plans. The firm conducts an exporting and importing business between the Pacific coast and the Netherlands Indies, having several exclusive agencies for machines and supplies in the Far East. Mr. Walker reports his venture very successful.

Heard on Portland's Film Row.

Portland, Ore.—George E. Jackson, formerly with Mutual at Minneapolis, has become connected with the Portland office. He was salesman in the East and will undoubtedly hold the same position here.

It is reported that Harry Bennett will open the Laurel theater, East 28th and Burnside streets, about March 1.

A. T. Lambson, who has the rights to the Moss film, "The Girl Who Doesn't Know," was a recent visitor here. He placed his picture at the Star for February 25.

L. A. Todd, G. F. manager, has returned from Chicago after an absence of two weeks.

M. A. Levy, of Levy, Chatkin & Feldstein, Chicago, spent a few days in Portland arranging the affairs of the United here.

The Ellte theater, Sandy boulevard and East 47th street, has been sold by E. H. Young to a Mr. Mitchell.

Sunday closing bills cropping up in the legislature are not being favorably received by the lawmakers, and the indications are that none will be passed this session. This situation is undoubtedly due to the decisive vote of the people last election whereby the old blue law was repealed.

WESTERN CANADA NOTES.

Winnipeg Women Want Recall on Films.

Winnipeg, Man.—The local Council of Women has presented to the government a petition recommending legislation whereby, on the demand of twenty-five women in the city, certain films objected to will be censored. As films are already censored before being shown, the authorities were somewhat puzzled until they received an explanatory letter from Mrs. R. F. McWilliams, who informed Hon. Edward Brown, provincial treasurer, that the petition has the object of giving the women of Winnipeg the right to appeal to the board of censors if a film is passed which they think should not be passed. At present the moving picture men only have the right to appeal—but in the other direction.

W. Walkley Has a Son Born.

Vancouver, B. C.—W. Walkley, booker at the local office of the Universal, announces the arrival of a son, who is doing finely. The young man is said to have already expressed a preference for Universal films, and he is being trained to become an exchange manager.

Best wishes, sonny!

Spokane's Auditorium to Present Pictures

Manager Charles York Has Had a Perfect Booth Constructed—Big, Bright Sign Over York Street—Lobby Tastefully Furnished.

By S. Clark Patchin, E. 1811 Eleventh Ave., Spokane, Wash.

SPokane, WASH.—At a cost of $700 the Auditorium theater has completed the construction of a new fireproof operator's booth to enable it to present picture features from time to time in compliance with city ordinances. Manager Charles York has gone much farther than the ordinance demands, and has built his booth entirely outside the theater auditorium.

The Auditorium has also erected an illuminated sign over Post street. This is the largest in the city, the small letters being six feet high. The letters are in old English, making an attractive electric sign. New lights are also being erected over the marquee to announce the attractions.

The lobby has been equipped with mission seats on both sides of its entire length, where people may wait comfortably to meet friends. Frames for lobby displays have been installed to match the seats and all the lobby display pictures will be shown under glass. Heretofore the Auditorium was never properly equipped for the presentation of picture spectacles.

Pathe Exchange Moves.

Spokane, Wash.—Peter Carroll, manager of the Pathe exchange, has found it necessary to take larger quarters, according to Peter Carroll, manager. The new home of the Pathe is located at 12 So. Washington street. The room is three times as large as the old quarters.

The Pathe exchange originated first in the parlor of Mr. Carroll's home, then to the office on First avenue, and now into the present location.

Mr. Carroll announces they have placed

Province Not City Should Watch Operators

Men Prefer the Advantages of Having the Provincial Authority Examine and Give Licenses—City Not Equipped to Do the Work.

By E. C. Thomas, 821 Rogers Building, Vancouver, B. C.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—The Civic Fire and Police Commission rescinded a previous action toward an amendment to the new provincial act governing all moving picture theaters and operators so as to allow the city to have supervision over the latter, has decided to let the matter drop.

This followed representations made by a delegation from the Trades and Labor Council and the Moving Picture Operators' Union (Local No. 348, I. A. T. S. E.) J. H. McVety, president of the Trades and Labor Council, acted as spokesman for the delegation and pointed out that the provincial act met with the favor and hearty support of the moving picture operators, for it permitted them to operate anywhere in the province.

For his side of the case City Electrician C. H. Fletcher explained that he did not wish to take the work of examination out of the hands of the government officials but pointed out that as the act stands he has no control whatever over the operators. He suggested that the granting of an operator's license be subject to the approval of the city authorities, as he wished to have power to discipline operators who were found infringing the law. In the course of his rounds, he said, he had found operators who were not living up to the regulations, but when he spoke to them about it they had simply asked, "Well, what are you going to do about it?"

Replying to a question by Alderman Gale, Mr. Fletcher said that there was one government inspector who visited each theater only once in three or four months. In reply to this, Mr. McVety declared that the delegation could produce evidence that when the inspection was under the control of the city officials, some theaters were never visited at all, and that at least one operator had worked during the whole of 1916 without having secured a license.

The majority of the aldermen seemed to think that the government officials, as they controlled all other details of the moving picture business, were the proper ones to supervise the operators, and on motion of Alderman Gale it was decided to recommend to the City Council that no action be taken toward securing an amendment to the Moving Pictures Act.

S. B. Taube Finds New World Film Co.

Vancouver, B. C.—S. B. Taube, formerly manager of the Universal branch in this city, and now associated with Regal Films, Ltd., Canadian distributors of World Brady-made productions, has arrived in Vancouver, and has been busy during the past few days greeting a host of old friends. His company has decided to enter the western field, and Mr. Taube has secured a suite of offices on the third floor of the Orpheum theater building, the film center of the city. He will at once select a manager for the Vancouver office, and will remain here until things are running smoothly. H. Nathanson has been appointed Regal representative in Calgary.

Mr. Taube encountered a queer proposition a few days after his arrival in Vancouver. Regal Films, Ltd., as is well known, has acquired the World Film distribution rights for Canada. It happens that a few weeks ago a new company, which is reported to be offering a part of its stock for sale, was incorporated in British Columbia under the name of World Films, Ltd. Hearing of this company, Mr. Taube called at its office in the Dominion building, and discovered several new World Film posters on the walls. Explaining his connection, Mr. Taube asked that these be removed, as if they were left on display confusion might result as to who had the rights for the distribution of the films. At this the man in charge of the office coolly informed Mr. Taube that it would be impossible for Regal Films, Ltd., to release or distribute any World films in British Columbia, as his new company had acquired all rights to the World film name.

When last seen Mr. Taube was scratching his head and wondering whether he ought to get mad or take it as a joke.

George Murdoch Preparing for Topical Work.

Vancouver, B. C.—On a recent trip to Victoria the World man had an interesting talk with George Murdoch, manager of L. J. Quagliotti's Variety theater, and now also Victoria representative of the Universal Animated Weekly and Screen Magazine. Mr. Murdoch has just purchased a new Williamson camera, and is preparing for an active campaign in photographing topical and educational subjects.

Benefit at Empire Theater.

Peace River, Alberta.—A benefit was given at the Empire theater on a recent evening in aid of the local firemen's fund, the entire receipts, amounting to $81.85, being donated to the fire fighters as a mark of appreciation of their efforts in saving the theater from destruction during a fire on adjoining premises a few days before. In addition to the picture program, numbers were contributed by various local people.

"The Americano" Breaks Record.

Spokane, Wash.—All box office records at the Liberty theater were again broken Sunday, February 4, by the crowds that paid to see Douglas Fairbanks in "The Americano," according to Manager Ralph Ruffner. The day's business was a climax to a series of record-breaking engagements recently by Fairbanks and W. S. Hart.

W. H. Clune's picturization of Helen Hunt Jackson's novel, "Ramona" shown at a trial run last week, has been booked at the Liberty for an indefinite run beginning February 25. "War Brides," beginning March 4. Lucille Zintheo, a Spokane girl, makes her screen debut in a minor role in this production.

!!!!And This Means You

The film situation reminds us of an old story.

A young clerk in a store made his appearance one morning at 11 o'clock. His Hebrew employer admonished him in more or less the following fashion:

"My boy, I myself opened the store to-day at 8 o'clock. At 9 I saw the owner of the building already on the job. At 10 Mr. Astor took the surface car around the corner, and at 10:30 Mr. Morgan passed our window on his way downtown.

"WHO THE DICKENS ARE YOU TO SHOW UP FOR WORK AT 11 O'CLOCK?"

Something similar could be said to many of our producers.

The U. S. Steel Company operates branch offices in all the important cities of Latin-America.

The Harvester Trust states that a very large percentage of its enormous profits are derived from its Latin-American trade.

The Ford Company has sold 6,400 taxicabs in Havana alone, a city of scarcely 350,000 inhabitants.

The U. S. Rubber Co. has been doing a wonderful business with Latin-America practically since its foundation.

Every American manufacturer of any consequence is getting or trying to get a share of this trade, and a look through the pages of the New York export papers will bear us out.

And now, with due respect and in all seriousness, we beg to ask:

"WHO THE DICKENS ARE YOU, MR. PRODUCER, THAT CAN AFFORD TO OVERLOOK THESE MARKETS?"

The New Mission Theatre

A THEATRE of beauty, of comfort, of refinement—a moving picture temple of the world's finest in pictures and equipment; and crowning all of its artistic triumphs it offers the best in music; music that blends with every action of the picture.

Experts in music for the pictures designed and built this instrument that has attracted the attention of all theatre men; the same experts can produce the same results for you; they study your house and your needs and plan for your success. No theatre is too small and no theatre is too large.

This beautiful instrument is a perfect symphony of orchestra and organ and its subtle, delicate sound tints mirror the very timbered character of every known instrument; the musician plays by hand and may also use the hand cut rolls of the world's famous artists and composers.

Stories of the Films

VIM.

THE NEWLYWEDS' MISTAKE.—Mr. and Mrs. Newlywed decide to spend a day at the beach, but before leaving Mrs. Newlywed insists upon purchasing a little beauty powder. While she is getting the powder her husband decides to get some smokes. Willy returns first and mistaking a man in a passing auto for Mr. Newlywed gives chase.

Hubby in the meantime returns and while waiting anxiously for Willy mistakes a woman for her. He follows his supposed wife in another car. Arriving at the beach both husband and wife search bathing houses, and cafes looking for each other. They search in vain and dejected leave for home feeling that it was a case of mistaken identity. Mrs. Newlywed arrives home first, closely followed by her spouse. Explanations ensue and hubby and Willy decide to spend their future holidays at home.

ART AND PAINT.—Mr. A. Suburb decides to have his dwelling renovated and selects Stooze, a painter with artistic ideas, who has a helper named Boozo, to do the work. Boozo's favorite pastime is reposing in empty dry goods boxes and it is in one of these haunts Stooze finds his trusty assistant. After considerable difficulty Stooze succeeds in arousing Boozo and hooked together with a painter's ladder they depart for the field of endeavor.

Upon their arrival they proceed to erect a scaffold and in doing this prove themselves acrobats. Their artistic tastes do not appeal to Mr. Suburb's peculiar fancy and they are dismissed but not dismayed for Dame Fortune smiles sweetly upon them and they become heirs to $5,000. They decide to open a studio and become artists. Their first customer, a six-footer, is not pleased with their conception of him and, aided by his powerful physique, cleans out the studio and deposits the artists in a garbage wagon. Here the dreams of the ambitious painters end.

WINGED DIAMONDS (No. 18 of "Grant, Police Reporter").—The cast: Tom Grant, police reporter (George Larklin); Daddy Greelick (Robert Ellis); Natalie (Ollie Kirkby); Gallo-way, chief of detectives (Harry Gordon); Grandon Rice (Cyril Courtney). Written by Robert Welles Ritchie. Directed by Robert Ellis.

Micky, a boy of the tenements, discovers a strange pigeon in his coop atop the ugly tenement where he lives. Attached to its leg by a string is a valuable diamond ring. Micky takes the bird to the police station. Grant, police reporter on the Chronicle, is there to pick up a story. He writes a note requesting audience with the owner of the bird, ties the note to its leg and sets it free.

Meanwhile Natalie, Mrs. Grandon Rice's French maid, has rifled her employer's wall safe, using a stethoscope to determine the fall of the tumblers. We see Natalie go to her room and take a carrier pigeon from the lower compartment of her washstand. Around its neck she places the pendant and chain and sets it free up a flue hole. She is searched and questioned about the robbery but there being no evidence she cannot be held.

Daddy Greelick, a notorious "fence," shows up at the appointed meeting place in answer to the blind message carried by the pigeon earlier in the day. When he makes a getaway, Grant hurries to the "fence's" pawnshop and finding it locked mounts to the roof by the most convenient way—a rear fire escape. He and Greelick have a desperate fight on the roof and Grant is left senseless. When he recovers he slides down a rope to an adjoining building just in time to help capture the crook who had locked all doors behind him as he fled.

THE SCREENED VAULT (No. 19 of "Grant, Police Reporter").—The cast: Tom Grant (George Larklin); Chris Monk (Robert Ellis); Inez Monk (Ollie Kirkby); Jimson (Harry Gordon); Maddox (Cyril Courtney). Written by Robert Welles Ritchie. Directed by Robert Ellis.

Grant, police reporter on the New York Chronicle, visits his hank to make a deposit. While filling out his deposit slip a piece of plaster falls from the ceiling to the desk. As he passes out and across the street he happens to look up at the window of an office directly over the banking rooms. A shade is hastily drawn—by a young woman.

Grant, his suspicions aroused, proceeds to the second floor. He knocks just as the silhouette of a woman's head is revealed on the ground glass of the door. On his way to the office he meets Maddox, a detective, and tells him his suspicions. Maddox laughs. A daylight attempt to rob the bank! Only one crook on record—Chris Monk—would have the nerve to attempt it and he is lying low.

Grant digs up some old clippings concerning this clever safecracker. One of them pictures Inez Monk obtaining a parole for her father.

His suspicions confirmed, at six that evening Grant returns to the hank. He discovers a hole cut in the floor of the room above the hank, but is caught by the crooks and tied up. Monk descends into the hank below by means of a rope ladder, bearing a painted screen to set up before the vault door and so trick the watchman peering in from the street. Inez stands guard in the hall. Grant, left alone, begins to work at his hands. He manages to reach the telephone and jiggles a Morse code message to Central. Maddox responds with the reserves. Monk and Jimson are trapped in the hank building. Grant is now called upon for a supreme test of his nerve. Monk leaps through the window, across a narrow ledge to a building opposite before which a scaffold has been left, and starts to slide down a rope to his freedom. Grant leaps to the scaffolding, and seeing that his prisoner will escape, makes the big leap to the ground and luckily lands on a sand pile. He has no difficulty holding Monk until the detectives handcuff him.

A FLYER IN FLAPJACKS (Ham & Bud Comedy).—The cast: The Highflyers (Ham and Bud); Pancratius Pancake (Henry Murdoch); Flossie Flapper (Ethel Teare).

Ham and Bud are making bad weather of it under the eagle eye of the merciless cop who insists that they can decorate the village cooler for all he cares if they do not immediately get to work. They try various jobs but looting on a park bench seems to be their forte.

Engaged in this congenial occupation they become aware of the nearby presence of Flossie Flapper. Ham provides Bud with a police whistle and orders him to keep one eye open for their common enemy while he, Ham, disports himself in idle conversation with the fair damsel.

Again the cop; and again our heroes take refuge in flight. As they pass a pancake emporium, Bud has a brilliant idea. Ham approves of it. They seize Pancratius Pancake, the talented flipper of flapjacks, and drop him into his own flour barrel, covering it securely with a table. Hastily donning aprons they are soon engaged in executing orders for browned wheats.

What goes up comes down is no more definite a proposition than what happens to Ham and Bud in their newly found roles of syrup slingers. Flossie—but really, you must come and see the answer for yourself.

THE MODEL JANITOR (Ham and Bud Comedy).—A famous sculptor here we see—Professor Henry Clay Debris; of clay he takes a shapeless pulp and from it sculpts a little sculpt.

Fair Flossie now we introduce; for men of clay she has no use. A live one she prefers, you see, but quite unknown to Pop Debris. The sculptor's model, Tommy Keefe, is posing as "The Indian Chief." He'd pose all day without a sound as long as Flossie sticks around.

Our janitors now make their how, who like all janitors, allow their work can all be done next week; and so they're playing hide and seek. His masterpiece completion nears and as the sculptor sculpts and smears, the lovers steal a kiss so sly. What's this? The old man hits the sky.

'Twas Fate that brought Ham to the scene, for in a flash Debris has seen in this great mass of brown and heft the model of his Indian chief. "Your name," he cried in accents full, "My name," said Ham, "is Trowing Bull."

Now Flossie looks at Dad's new chief and straightaway forgets her grief. Meanwhile Bud's search of every floor reveals no ponderous janitor. Almost despairing he finds his man posing as an Indian and while the battle rages there Tommy carries off the maiden fair.

To shout and swear is of no use and so our intimates find good excuse to frisk and frolic on the lawn the while a cop looks calmly on.

SELIG.

A STRANGE ADVENTURE (No. 21718).—The cast: Princess Olga (Bessie Eyton); Luther Terroll Van Horn, of New York (Jack Pickford); Prince Arneah (Harry Lonsdale). Written and produced by Marshall Nellan.

Luther T. Van Horn, a young man of leisure, is smitten with the charms of a beautiful girl, a new arrival at the resort, and asks one of the servants to find out who she is.

At dinner the coffee percolator boils over and Luther arrives opportunely and wins a smile from the girl of mystery.

He goes bathing and is seized with an inspiration. He makes it appear that he is about to drown and the girl goes to his rescue. Just as she is about to reach him another swimmer saves Van Horn and his plan to become acquainted with the girl is circumvented.

A Hindu that night gives the girl a note reading: "If you would save your throne come to the House of the Striped Awl-nags." She accompanies the Hindu and when she enters she is confronted by a prince, who says: "Marry me or you will never leave this house alive!"

The girl has been followed by Van Horn, who enters just in time to save her life. Then Mr. Van Horn suddenly awakens and realizes that it is all a dream.

THE REDEMPTION OF RED MULLIN (Three parts).—The cast: Red Mullin (Fred Eckart); Betty (Cressy Gotschalk); Mrs. Fleming (Cora Lambert); Blake (Roy Sutherland). Written by Edward Arden. Directed by Otis Thayer.

Red Mullin returns to his old home after having completed a penitentiary sentence. His underworld friends greet him and there is a celebration. The merry making is so loud, that Mrs. Fleming appears and asks for quietness, stating that her baby is near death, in the flat below. They throw her out; she summons the police and following a free-for-all fight Red Mullin escapes.

Betty, Red's sweetheart, throws the police off Mullin's track. In his attempt to escape Mullin hides in Mrs. Fleming's house. The Fleming baby awakens and calls so pitifully for toys, that Red comes from his hiding place and determines he will get the baby some play things.

Finding the toy shop closed, Mullin forces entrance and, taking what he wishes, leaves a bill on the counter with a note explaining his action. Going out again, he meets an old friend, a taxicab driver, and getting into the taxi with the toys, makes for the home of the child, while the driver thinks the man has robbed a house.

Betty goes to the drug store for medicine for Mrs. Fleming's baby, and there she overhears the taxicab driver telephoning the police. Red, returning to the Fleming flat, unloads the toys. Hearing the police coming, he endeavors to escape, fails and is taken prisoner. After the police investigate, they release Red Mullin, who rejoins his sweetheart.

FOR REWARD OF SERVICE.—The cast: "Cross" Allen (George Fawcett); Mrs. Allen (Mrs. Evelyn); Pettison (Charles Gardner); His Chief Clerk (Charles Le Moyné). Written by Grace Keon. Produced by Al. Green.

EXPERT CAMERAMAN WANTED

AT ONCE. Address "Camera," Moving Picture World, 17 Madison Ave., New York City.

"Cross" Allen, familiarly known as Old Grouchy, is a bookkeeper. The younger clerks resolve to "wish" a lot of phoney Christmas presents on him.

Thomas Pettison, the boss, gives his employees a day off to prepare for Christmas festivities. Old Grouchy is given numerous packages, which really contain bricks, sawdust, etc., and he is urged not to open them until Christmas. He takes them to his home, believing they are Christmas presents. He and his aged wife then plan to enjoy the good things which they think have been given them by the office force.

In the meantime at the office, the clerks hear the story of Old Grouchy—of how each one of his sons has met some tragic fate. The clerks regret their thoughtlessness, wrap up real presents for the old man and arrive at his home in time to exchange them for the bogus presents, which luckily had not been opened.

ESSANAY.

A FOUR CENT COURTSHIP (Black Cat Feature—2 Parts).—The cast: Emmet Payne (Bryant Washburn); Miriam York (Hazel Daly).

The evening Emmet Payne has set aside to propose to Miriam York, his room-mate makes one of those "life-or-death" touches which leaves Emmet with only four cents. With this capital he is dated up to take Miriam to the opera, then supper, then taxicab home. The wily Payne gets carfare by politely tearing two tickets from a fat man's hand. He gets opera tickets by posing as a dramatic critic. He sells the tickets to a speculator for $30 and with this money finances the trip to another theatre and then supper in an expensive restaurant. It happens that the fat man, the dramatic critic and the speculator all are seated in the same cafe. A terrible row ensues and Emmet is about to be arrested when his room-mate turns up with money to square all accounts. Miriam, innocent of the trouble, has had such a delightful time she says "Yes" to Emmet's proposal.

CANIMATED NOOZ PICTORIAL NO. 25 (Cartoon Comedy).—The Canimated cameraman was fortunate enough to catch the latest shipment to John D. Lotsadough. Under heavily armed guard, the special train stopped at Chicago, Ill., momentarily and its treasure was filmed. It was a dozen fresh eggs. At Be-Swell Beach, Cal., the sons and daughters of wealth are shown alring their pet pigs, pet monkeys, Angora goats, etc. It is difficult to tell which are the pets. A valuable hint is given to husbands coming home late at night on how to find the keyhole. A string with a cat at the other end makes the job easy. The recent baseball game in Honk-Honk, China, between the Chop Suey nine and the Washee-Washee team is depicted. Ty Cobbee saves the game in the ninth inning by slamming out a homer. Scenes in the lake region of Western Canada complete the film.

IS MARRIAGE SACRED? (No. 11, The Extravagant Bride—2 Parts).—The cast: Edith Ralston (Marguerite Clayton); John Allison (Edw. Arnold); Mrs. Gaynor (Lillian Drew); Harold Spencer (Sydney Alnsworth); Samuel Ralston (Thomas Commerford).

Edith Ralston, reared in luxury, weds John Allison, of moderate means. Her extravagance finally drives Allison to the brink of bankruptcy. Harold Spencer, whom Edith rejected to become John's wife, is revengeful. He learns of Allison's financial straits and at a reception places a wallet containing a large sum of money on a table where it will tempt John to become a thief. Allison finds the wallet and takes it up to seek the owner. Spencer proclaims that he has been robbed and discovers the wallet in John's pocket. Edith believes her husband guilty and declares it was her extravagance that drove him to theft. Mrs. Gaynor, a gay divorcee who has been spurned by Spencer, has witnessed part of his trap for Allison and tells the truth. John is exonerated.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

JOKER.

PASSING THE GRIP (March 3).—The cast: Bill (William Franey); Gale (Gale Henry); Heinle (Charles Conklin); Lillian (Lillian Peacock); Moranti (Milburn Moranti).

Bill, the henpecked husband, arrives at the hotel with Gale, carrying her dog and a grip. There is a sign which says "No Dogs Allowed," so he hides the pup in the grip. The hotel clerk has been warned to look out for an anarchist, and when Bill acts queerly about his grip, the clerk demands that he open it. Bill refuses. The Anarchist appears, and his grip gets changed with Bill's. Then Heinle and Lillian arrive, and Bill again changes his grip for Lillian's. The clerk sends for the police, who open Bill's grip and find lady's finger.

Bill has the grip with the luggerie, the anarchist the grip with the dog and Lillian and Heinle the one with the bomb. Gale takes Bill's clothes to have them pressed, leaving him in his underwear. He finds that he has his wrong grip and goes out to hunt for the one with the dog. Gale comes back, and the anarchist starts hunting for his bomb. He has opened the grip with the dog and been scared by it. Every one gets into the wrong room, and keeps finding the wrong grip. At last the dog gets the bomb in his mouth, and they all chase him with it through the hotel. The bomb finally explodes and blows up the anarchist with it.

UNDOING EVIL (March 13).—A man who has always been a shepherd determines to become a wanderer. He enters a village at nightfall, and sees through a lighted window a woman and her lover. He learns that the woman has a husband. He saves the husband from killing himself, as he is about to yield to his despair over the loss of his wife's affection. He meets the lover on his way from the woman, and persuades him to write a promise not to see her any more. He then visits the wife, and finds her writing a farewell to her husband. He talks with her, but cannot dissuade her from her purpose. At last he changes the notes, so that the farewell shall be received by the lover, who goes away. The shepherd later succeeds in reuniting the husband and wife.

NESTOR.

A MILLION IN SIGHT (Feb 26).—The cast: Eddie (Eddie Lyons); Janitor (Lee Moran); Eddie's Wife (Edith Roberts). Scenario by Bess Meredith. Produced by L. W. Chaudet.

Cupid smiles sweetly on one happily married couple, Eddie and his wife, while in the same apartment, the maid and iceman have eyes for no one but each other. However, the world is all wrong in the eyes of the janitor and he sneers at his conjugal bliss.

Trouble begins when mother-in-law arrives with her many pets. The clever iceman deludes the janitor into believing that mother is going to settle a million dollars on the man who marries her within a month. Mother and the janitor are married and the news reaches the young couple just as Eddie is leaving to live at the club during the remainder of mother's visit. Mother says she can live with them always now. But Eddie and his wife move into a different apartment house and leave mother boss of theirs.

THE LAND OF BUDDHA (March 4).—The Land of Buddha was visited by Doctor Dorsey. He shows us in this educational, the Dagoba Ruanwell, the largest brick building in the world, which is surrounded by white marble colonnades. There are thousands of niches in the pillars and in each one is a statue of Buddha, or of an ancient king. The platform upon which this tomb rests, is supported by four hundred sculptured elephants, which are now hardly recognizable. The work is being restored, under the direction of the chief priest, whose house is shown. This process has been under his direction for years. In 2500 years there have been few changes in the local methods of building and working.

MR. FULLER PEP—AN OLD BIRD PAYS HIM A VISIT (On Same Reel as Foregoing).—The stork with his basket goes out in search of Mr. Fuller Pep's residence, and has many adventures on the way. He calls at the home of the bachelor and is kicked out with no attempt at apology. He meets the same fate from the old maid. At last he comes to Mr. Fuller Pep. He offers his basket, and Fuller takes a baby out of it. But when the stork tries to get him to take two, Fuller protests.

UNIVERSAL.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE (Issue No. 8—March 2).—The greatest of radio stations at Arlington, Va., is shown first in Issue No. 8 of the Universal Screen Magazine. These pictures are particularly interesting because the public is not admitted to the plant.

A domestic science lesson, by one of the most expert cooks in America, Mrs. A. Louise Andrea, winner of the Gold Medal at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, follows. She shows how to make pie without the usual soft dough bottom.

A new invention is shown next. This is the "last word" in safety deposit vaults of the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York. The issue closes with Animated Sculpture by Willie Hopkins.

BIG U.

A BATTLE OF WITS (Two parts—March 2).—Valanza is an admirer of Paula. But Paula rejects Valanza for Wallace. Aquinaldo, a Mexican general, orders Wallace taken as spy. Paula's father, who is dying, gives her a map showing just where his wealth is buried. A few days later he dies. She is forced to give up her home to Valanza, to be used as his headquarters. During a struggle with Valanza, he tears the map in two. One-half Paula manages to retain. Valanza takes possession of the other half. She is thrown out of her own home. Paula disguises herself as an old woman and goes to the prison with a basket of fruit to give to the guards. Hidden in the fruit she has some small tools to give to Wallace who later escapes.

Wallace notifies the American General of the Mexicans' law-breaking. The Americans set out to capture Alquinado, who gave Valanza the orders to take Wallace as prisoner. On the way they capture a few of Alquinado's officers who have had a dispute with their general. Wallace tells the Mexicans that they will not be punished by the Americans if they will take some of the Americans to the Mexican camps and pretend that they had been captured, while the rest of them will follow a short distance behind.

This the Mexicans agree to do. The Mexican officers lead the Americans into Alquinado's camp. They explain how they captured the Americans. Just then the rest of the Americans enter the ground and together they make a clean sweep, while Wallace gets the other half of Paula's papers from Valanza.

BURIED ALIVE (March 4).—Dorothy and her father have staked all their hopes on their mine. They have sent for an expert to appraise it. Pedro, a Mexican, has designs on Dorothy. Reid, the expert, arrives and is taken to the mine, but not before he has fallen under the spell of Dorothy's beauty. At the mine he discovers that he has left an essential instrument at the house. He returns and finds Pedro holding Dorothy in his arms. He drives away the Mexican, who plans revenge. Reid is forced to pronounce the mine worthless. Dorothy begs him to make a more thorough investigation the next day. Pedro listens at the door and hears him agree to do so. He goes to the mine and prepares a charge of dynamite. When Reid appears at the mine, Pedro explodes the charge and Reid is hurled alive. Dorothy and her father feel the shock of the explosion, and he goes to the rescue, while she rides to town for help.

VICTOR.

A NOVEL ROMANCE (Feb. 27).—The cast: Rosealice (Flora Parker De Haven); Thomas Harden (Calvert Carter); Robert Davanel (Paul Byron). Written by W. Henry. Produced by Harry Millarde.

Rosealice, a stenographer employed in the law office of Thomas Harden, lives in a fairy world of her own fancy. The latest "best sellers" are a temptation to her—she cannot resist them even if it means going without her lunch.

Going hack and forth each day on the same car is Robert Davanel, a professor of mathematics. Though supposed to be very staid, he, too, dwells in a world of romance. One day he is greatly surprised to find as a hookmark in one of the new novels he is reading a lady's perfumed handkerchief. Rosealice is as much surprised to find a little note saying that if ever the writer could find a person like the Rose depicted in the story, he certainly would fall in love with her.

Robert had invested in some mining stock, but for a long time it appeared worthless. He receives word from Harden that the stock has some value. Rosealice in transcribing the letter thinks the name of Davanel very romantic. The next day she is ill and unable to go to work. Robert calls upon Harden and the latter suggests that they take a ride out to his stenographer's home. So he discovers the girl he has been so long admiring.

THEY WERE FOUR (March 1).—The cast: Joe (Joe Rickson); Pedro (Pedro Leon); Tommy (Tom Grimes); Bud (Bud Osborne); Neal (Neal Hart); Jack (Jack Walters). Scenario by Karl R. Coolidge. Produced by George Marshall.

Joe, Jack, Pedro, Tommy, Bud and Neal have just arrived from the cowlands with a load of steers. When Pete, the owner of the steers comes out to pay them, Neal takes all the money, explaining that the boys figured to stampede the town and that he had been elected guardian. They rush to a Ford and hire it to take them to a hotel.

Meanwhile two crooks enter the lobby, and force the people to hold up their hands. They hear a great deal of noise and dash up the stairs to hide. The cowboys have arrived, but the people think it is some more thieves and put up their arms again. The boys think they have gone crazy. While Neal is playing with the cash register, thinking it a piano, the clerk phones the police.

The policemen arrive and the boys are glad to fight, although they are ignorant of the cause. Neal and Bud run up the stairs and into an old woman's room. She climbs into bed and covers herself with the blankets. The cops follow the boys into the woman's room and think they have caught the crooks, but she utters a piercing scream. Neal and Bud are in the lobby, when the crooks sneak upon them and are just about to relieve Neal of the roll of bills, when the cops appear. Neal says, "Me and the boys were just looking for excitement and we reckon we got it."

AN HOUR OF TERROR (March 1).—As a child Jane had been frightened by fire and had lost her speech. Matt loves her and always hopes that she will regain it. Jane's great amusement is the phonograph. One day she is alone and thieves enter the house. She is unable to call for help, but she takes the receiver of the telephone off the hook and places the phonograph near the phone. She then plays "Listen to This Cry of Help."

The operator understands the message, and sends the police. Before they arrive, the thieves hear the machine and try to enter the room. She piles furniture against the door to keep them out. Matt appears just as they are about to break in. He fights them both. The excitement restores to Jane the power of speech. The police arrive and take the thieves into custody.

EVIL HANDS (March 2).—The cast: Red Leary (Edward Hearn); Mary Blakewell (Edith Roberts); China Moll (Mrs. Roberts); Jake Lewis (Wilbur Highy); Sol (Malcolm Blevins); Chan Loo (T. Du Crow). Scenario by Willis and Woods. Produced by John McDermott.

Mary arrives in the city with her brother's card, but she has lost the address. She falls into the hands of Jake Lewis, who takes her to a Chinese joint, operated by Chan Loo. Red Leary has just finished a jail sentence, and returned to the joint. He passes his gun hurriedly to Chan as a policeman enters, Chan hides it under some papers. Red seems startled at the glimpse he has of the young girl, when Jake brings her in. He quietly phones the police, but he is overheard and attacked by Sol. There is a fight, and Red knocks out Sol. Then he enters the room where Jake has taken Mary. He knocks down Jake, and takes his hat and coat. He then rescues Mary, and giving her money, sends her home to the country. He then returns to the den and gives himself up to the police.

TANGLED THREADS (Two parts—March 4).—The cast: The Orphan (Jessie Beaton); The Young Lawyer (Lorimer Johnson); The Crook (Ted Sloman); The Artist (John Bruno). Scenario by William Seiter. Produced by Alan Forrest.

A young author lives in a poor neighborhood, and feels sorry for a girl, who has just been left an orphan by the death of her mother. He takes her to the home of an artist friend of his, an elderly man, who offers her a home. The author and the girl become attached to each other. A day comes when the artist can no longer find a market for his work. The author meets the girl returning with an unsold picture, and gives her the money for it, though it is all that he has. She goes to buy the first good meal that they have had for days. An auto knocks her down, and she sustains a spinal injury. The doctor advises the services of a specialist. The artist and the author do not know where to turn, as they cannot afford the specialist's prices. Discouraged, the author goes out, and enters a saloon. He is joined by a crook, who offers him $1,000 if he will help him pull off a job. The author accepts. The crook plans to rob a rich man's home. He instructs the author to go upstairs. In his inexperience, the author knocks down a statue. The owner of the house catches the author and a fight ensues. The crook fires, and kills the owner. The police hear the noise and force their way in. The crook and the author escape as the officers enter by the front.

A detective finds a footprint, and traces the owner of it to a saloon. Here he finds the author and the crook, and attempts to take them prisoners. He offers them a light sentence if they will give the names of the rest of the gang. The crook appears to consent, but then knocks over the lamp. In the confusion the author escapes to his own home. Later he reads in the paper that the killer of the house owner has confessed in jail, and that he himself is not implicated. He receives word that his play has been accepted and that he will be paid a good sum in advance. With joy he goes to the artist's house and tells him and the girl. She is ultimately cured by an operation, and marries the author.

BISON.

THE TORNADO (Two parts—March 3).—The cast: Jack Dayton (Jack Ford); His Irish Mother (Jean Hathaway); Slick, his partner (John Duffy); Pendleton, Mayor of Rock River (Pete Gerald); His Daughter Bess (Elsie Thornton); Chief of the Coyote Gang (Duke Worne).

All the men in the neighborhood love Bess, the daughter of the Mayor of Rockville, but she treats them coldly. Among this number is Jack Dayton, a son of Old Ireland known as the "No-Gun-Man" and Lesparre, leader of the Coyote gang.

Lesparre brings his gang to town, holds up the bartender, secures all the whiskey they want, then robs the bank belonging to the Mayor, who offers $5,000 reward for the return of the stolen property. Jack's great desire is to get enough money to send to his mother in Ireland, to pay for the cottage in which she lives; so he starts after the bandits unarmed, although he is urged to take a gun.

In the meantime, Lesparre has also kidnapped Bess and taken her to a place in the hills known as Coyote Hole. When Jack learns of this, he redoubles his efforts. He allows himself to be captured by the bandits, and on being taken before the chief, tells him he wishes to join the gang; and the chief finally consents.

As soon as everyone is asleep, Jack enters the room in which Bess is imprisoned, and helps her to escape. He then wraps his blanket about him, again and goes to sleep. In the morning the loss of the girl is discovered and Jack is suspected; and is locked in the room in which Bess was imprisoned. He finds the money and papers hidden in the bed, watches his chance, attacks the two men who are guarding him, defeats them after a desperate fight and escapes with the money. He reaches the railroad and climbs on a passing freight train. The gang follows closely, and after a fight, Jack throws Lesparre off the train. He finally reaches Rock River, is acclaimed a hero, returns the money and papers to the Mayor, and receives the girl in exchange.

GOLD SEAL.

MARY FROM AMERICA (Three parts—Feb. 27).—The cast: Mary Moore (Ruth Clifford); Viscount Yorke (Douglas Gerrard); John Jenkins (Percy Challenger); Harold Jenkins (Francis Marion); the Rev. Wm. Snodgrass (L. De Noskoski); Uriah Snodgrass, K. C. (Harry Crane); Lady Jessica (Margaret Whistler). Scenario by Maude Grange. Produced by Douglas Gerrard.

Two English lawyers have just finished reading of the death of John Jasper, who has left his fortune in charge of Lady Jessica, to be disposed of as she sees fit. The heirs are to be called together to await the coming of Lady Jessica at Shipley Manor. The lawyers chuckle for they well know how John detested his fawning heirs and trusted nobody but Jessica, who snubbed him.

At the lodge live Harold Jenkins and his grandfather. The boy is a cripple and spends his time reading fairy tales. He watches each passing vehicle. Viscount Yorke smiles and tosses him a coin. A sweet-faced girl throws him a bunch of flowers. The child believes that the Fairy Prince and Princess have appeared. Mary shyly enters the mansion. The others look at her with contempt. The housekeeper sends her to an attic room. Only Viscount Yorke treats her civilly.

Yorke and Mary gradually become friends, though she makes fun of his monocle. The two spend a great deal of time with Harold. Finally, the girl talks with John Jenkins about an operation for his grandson and is told that they are too poor. She appeals to the Jasper heirs but is ignored by all except Yorke, who consents to pay all expenses. The heirs become impatient because of the non-appearance of Lady Jessica. At last she arrives and they immediately begin to fawn upon her. But she sees through them and asks for Mary and all are surprised. Mary appears, attired in an exquisite gown. Everyone is astounded, while Lady Jessica hobbles to meet the girl, who greets her with affectionate familiarity, and hands her a paper.

The heirs are uneasy, as Lady Jessica says, "I knew you would fawn on me, so I sent Mary. She is my heiress and has no need of the Jasper millions. Here is her decision which is also mine." Then the lawyer reads that the estates are to be divided among the people who have labored on them; hospital for crippled children is to be founded; one-fourth is to be settled on Harold, and the remainder to be divided equally among the heirs.

Mary has slipped away and has gone to see Harold, who is still in bed from his operation. Yorke has arrived before her, and she hears him questioning the child as to whether a princess ever loved an ass. Harold sees Mary and tells her that the Prince loves her, but is afraid to say so, because he's hewitched and thinks he is an ass. Mary hides her face in the child's pillow, half laughing, half crying, and Yorke laughs aloud, holding out his hand to her. Harold puts Mary's hand in Yorke's and says solemnly, "And they lived happy ever after." Yorke draws Mary into his arms.

AFTER THE BALLED-UP BALL (Two Parts—Feb. 21). The cast: The Ball Guest (Phil Dunham); The Lovely Lady (Lucille Hutton); The Fat Lady (Merta Stirling); Lucille's Husband (Charles Inslee).

Lucille persuades her husband that she must go to Mrs. Highlife's ball, even though he does not want to go. Phil decides to go, too. He gets into his antiquated dress-suit, puts a flask in his pocket.

The fat lady dresses up in her very best gown and goes to the ball, too. Phil gets thirsty from dancing, and finding the punchbowl, he adds something from his flask to give it a little more flavor. Then he drains the bowl.

While the fat lady is crossing the hall Phil steps on the train of her dress, tearing it. All the guests are shocked, and the hostess brings the fat lady her cloak. She goes home. Lucille's husband relents after she has gone, and turns up at the ball. He is jealous of the attentions which his wife receives. As Mrs. Fat Lady is on her way home, a policeman tries to arrest her for not being properly dressed, and so she discovers that half of her gown is missing.

Phil, Lucille and her husband, and the fat lady, return to the apartment house where they live. Phil has a hard time finding his door. He enters Lucille's room by mistake. Then ensues a general mix-up.

The police are called, and chase Phil to the roof. Lucille's husband follows them, shooting madly. They all run around the edge of the roof and down the fire escape. Phil takes a bicycle from an old man, and Lucille's husband chases him in a Ford. The chase takes them all to a pier and they end up in the water.

SPIKE'S BIZZY BIKE (Two parts—Feb. 28).—The cast: M. T. Head (Dan Russell); Sweetheart (Marjorie Ray); Jess Cuckoo (Vin Moore). Directed by Craig Hutchinson.

Dan, a bicycle rider, is entered for the six-day race. His rival is Jess Cuckoo, and both are determined to win, for both love the same girl. Dan trains vigorously as he is told he must reduce. The trainer is a bearded pedagogue, in whose luxuriant whiskers Dan finds a little bird. In a boxing bout the trainer gets decidedly the better of it, until Dan discovers a horseshoe and a hammer head in his gloves. Then everything comes Dan's way. Whiskers eats a huge meal, while Dan, who is on a diet, has to be satisfied with a biscuit and a glass of water. His rival, in the meantime, does most of his training in bed.

Both go to call on their sweetheart. Jess has brought a piece of mistletoe, which he hangs on the chandelier. He stands under it and the girl kisses him. Dan sneaks in, hides a brick in the mistletoe, and attaches a string to it. Jess again stands under the chandelier, and Dan lowers the brick onto his head. But when Jess does the same to him later he does not find it so funny.

The day of the race arrives. Dan has a patent arrangement, concealed by his dressing gown. There is a small gasoline motor attached to his bike. Jess discovers this and plans revenge. He fills the gasoline can with nitroglycerine. Dan returns for a renewal of gas, and fills the tank with nitro-glycerine instead. He rides madly around the track, and the crowd flies in terror from the explosion. The police are called, and the chase proceeds through buildings and houses, until Dan ends in one last explosion, which lands him under a pile of debris.

RED FEATHER.

THE GIRL AND THE CRISIS (Five parts—Feb. 26).—The cast: Ellen Wilmot (Dorothy Davenport); Oliver Barnitz (Charles Perley); Jacob Wilmot (Harry Holden); The Hon. Peter Barnitz (Wm. V. Mong); David Houston (Alfred Hollingsworth); John (Forrest Seaberry). Written and produced by William V. Mong.

A pickpocket steals the purse of Ellen Wilmot, a society woman, and Oliver Barnitz, Lieutenant-Governor, catches the man and restores the bag to her. Later they are introduced and become friends.

Jacob, Ellen's father and president of the Wilmot Reservoir Company, has completed plans for a reservoir which will supply water for irrigating one and a half million acres of land. But some of the citizens of Old Town, which has been condemned to make way for the reservoir, are not satisfied with the price for their land and begin a riot. David Houston, a peace-loving citizen, comes to Wilmot to inform him that Jere Yaukey and his grafters are playing politics against his company and that he can expect violent resistance from Old Town. Knowing that several million dollars are involved the grafters are plotting to blackmail Wilmot.

The "M. P. World" carries more classified ads than all other trade papers combined—WHY?

A large crowd led by Willis gathers to make demands upon the company. Poole, a resident of Old Town, sides with Wilmot and attempts to appeal to the rioters. When the mob begins to throw stones he starts to fire at them, but is restrained by Wilmot and Houston.

The police are called by Wilmot, but they are unable to cope with the mob and urge Wilmot to appeal to the state for protection. Ellen drives to the reservoir and is barely saved by her father and Davis. When Wilmot is phoning for help, Payton, a rioter, shoots the phone from the wall so he cannot get connection. A shed of dynamite is exploded, causing damage to other buildings.

Oliver Barnitz, seeing something unusual is happening, hastens to Wilmot, who tells him the trouble. Some of the rioters who have seen Oliver arrive become greatly excited. Logan, one of this number, is instructed to tell Yaukey to warn the Governor before Oliver can get to him.

Oliver, Houston, Poole and Ellen get in her car and race to the State House. The Governor, having heard Yaukey first, refuses to do anything immediately for Wilmot, but says he will investigate. Oliver says that if he were Governor he would uphold the laws of the state. Poole is struck by these words and begins to meditate. As soon as the others have left the office, he confronts the Governor and yelling, "Let justice be done though the heavens fall," fires at the Governor, who falls dead. When the clerks and Oliver, Ellen and Houston rush into the room, Poole remarks: "I've done my duty. You automatically become Governor. Now do your duty and show that you are a man."

Six months later Poole awaits execution, while Oliver is besieged to pardon him. Peter Barnitz has told his son that he wishes him to sever his friendship with Ellen. Wilmot tells her that her mother was also Oliver's mother, having married Barnitz before she married him.

Peter determines to beg Ellen to intercede in Poole's behalf, but when he arrives at the Wilmot home finds Ellen is not in. Oliver worn out with worry falls asleep. He has a horrible dream in which his father murders Wilmot and shoots himself rather than fulfill his duty when it concerns the punishment of his own father he shoots himself. He awakes and prays for help. Finally he phones to release the prisoner, but Poole dies of heart failure. Ellen tells Oliver she could never have forgiven him if Poole had been executed.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE PURPLE MASK (Episode 10—"The House of Mystery"—March 5).—The cast: Patricia Montez (Grace Cunard); Detective Phil Kelly (Francis Ford); His Assistants (Pete Gerald, Jerry Ash); Pat's Aunt (Jean Hathaway). Written and produced by Grace Cunard and Francis Ford.

After the race, Pat releases Kelly from the "House of Mystery," in which he was imprisoned. At the next session of the Apaches, Pat is informed that a gang of politicians have collected immense sums of money for a purpose against the public welfare, so she makes plans to recover the cash which is held in two safes, located in different parts of the city buildings, and distributes it among the people. Kelly has been retained by the hoodlers to protect their interests, Pat again traps him and his men in the House of Mystery. She then causes a fake wall to be built, representing the side of the room where Safe Number 1 is located. Transferring this wall to a useful position, she works behind it, and secures the money.

Pat then releases Kelly, after warning him she intends to loot Safe Number 2. In spite of his efforts to frustrate her plans she succeeds, and is making her get away when Kelly overtakes her in his machine.

Safe Number 2 was located in the upper rooms of a building near the outskirts of the town. By working from the roof Pat uses gas to stupefy the watchman, and then gets into the office by means of a hole made in the ceiling of an adjoining room, opens the safe and escapes by climbing down from the roof by means of a tree that grows with its upper branches within reach of the building. As the episode ends, Kelly has halted Pat, climbed into the tonneau, and covered her with his revolver.

THE RENTED MAN (Two parts—March 1).—The cast: The boy (Francis Marion); the rented man (M. K. Wilson); the mother (Claire McDowell); the little girl (Elizabeth Janes); her father (George Pearce). Scenario and production by Ruth Ann Baldwin.

The little boy was lonely. He never had any one to love him, as he could not remember his father and his mother was always away resting her nerves. He would picture how it would be to have a real father and mother, but he had to be satisfied with his housekeeper.

Every night after supper he would go to the gate and see the little girl next door meet her father. One night he looked through the window into their living-room, where the little girl was playing with her father. The housekeeper not noticing the little boy's absence had locked the door, so he sat on the step to wait. There he fell asleep. Later the man to whom the housekeeper had rented a room in the house, in order to turn an extra penny during the time her mistress was away, found him. He carried the little boy to bed.

The next day the little girl was swinging on the boy's gate, and she taunted him with having no father. A plan came into the boy's mind. That night he proposed to the man to rent him as a father for so much every week, the man to agree to "bring things home every night." That night he rushed out with joy to meet his father, with the little girl. Both found things in the men's pockets, and both were supremely happy.

One night the boy dreamed that his mother had come home, that she met the rented man, and that he turned out to be his real father. He woke up fully to hear voices in the next room. He went in and there to his joy he found that he had dreamed true. Both his parents promised to stay at home forever afterwards and love him.

JERRY'S ROMANCE (March 1).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Hank (Arthur Munns); Archy (Clair DeWitt); Lawyer (Arthur Munns); The Maid (Claire Alexander); Isabelle (Helen Gilmore).

Being a pibeian, Jerry makes no impression upon Lady Isabelle with his love making and she accepts Archy, a man of title. Disconsolate, Jerry goes to a park and is approached by a man who introduces himself as a lawyer and who tells Jerry he has inherited a title and is rich. Jerry accompanies the lawyer and is paid two dollars, the remainder having gone for legal fees. He advises Jerry to dress befitting his rank and he buys an outfit which he thinks is O. K.

Archy and Lady Isabelle are married and Jerry is invited to the wedding and does the wrong thing at the wrong time. Lady Isabelle has a wayward brother who comes to her for financial aid. Archy sees her giving money to him and his suspicions are aroused. Further evidence warrants him doing something desperate and he hires Jerry to put the man out of the way. Jerry is unsuccessful and in despair Archy leaves.

Lady Isabelle sends for Archy and he returns at night. He spies his wife's brother sleeping under the bed, and Jerry, who is hiding behind the screen, while there is the maid reposing in the cradle. Horrified he calls Lady Isabelle to account. Explanations are made and all ends happily.

THE ADVENTURES OF SHORTY HAMILTON (No. 7—"Shorty Hooks a Loan Shark"—Two parts—Feb. 26).—Shorty, after hearing from Anita that she still loves him, doubts her word and starts out for a big time. He meets Ralph Simms, the son of the ranch owner, and finds that he has lost all his money. Anita is notified that a notorious loan shark is operating near the Arrowhead ranch and sets out to capture him.

Jabez Sawyer, who loans the boys money, gets hold of some bonds through Ralph and he writes and tells Ruby, Ralph's wife, that if she will come to his office he will give her information regarding them. Ruby goes to the office and Sawyer embraces her. Shorty comes upon the scene just in time. Later Anita arrives and Sawyer is recognized as the loan shark and arrested.

MY FIGHTING GENTLEMAN (Five Parts—American—March 1).—The cast: Frank Carlisle (William Russell); Virginia Leighton (Francella Billington); Colonel Carlisle (Charles Newton); Huntly Thornton (Jack Vosburgh); Isalah Gore (Clarence Burton); Judge Pembroke (Harry Von Meter); Jubilee (William Carroll); Jim (Sid Algier). Directed by Edward Sloman.

At the outbreak of the Civil War, Colonel Carlisle, at his home in Virginia, hotly declares for the South, but his only son, Frank, home on leave from West Point, can see only dishonor in such a course for himself.

Four years later the mother waits for her son in the war-swept plantation. Her husband has met a gallant death. When Frank returns he is snubbed by his former friends and by Virginia Leighton, the girl whom he has loved since childhood. He confides in his mother. She suggests they go to the North to live, but Frank says they will stay.

Ol' Jubilee helps him and they set to work. This serves to further antagonize the people and Virginia exclaims, "A gentleman would not soil his hands, nor stoop to do 'nigger' work." Frank is deeply grieved at her stand. Huntly Thornton, a former friend of Frank's and a rival for Virginia, is a drinker, gambler and bully, but he succeeds in gaining her favor. Frank is aware of the danger of the negroes' new-found freedom. Carpet-baggers have already begun their work. After hearing Isalah Gore, the leader, Frank humbles his pride and secures an interview with Judge Pembroke.

Thornton becomes acquainted with Isalah Gore, who lends him money. Frank is later nominated for the State Senate against Thornton. Frank saves Virginia's life. Thornton and Gore plot to disgrace him by placing on him the stigma of murder. They plan to attack his mother, drug a colored boy, drive him crazy by "voodoo" spells and send him back to attack Mrs. Carlisle. Chance puts Virginia in the crazy boy's path, and Thornton, believing that Virginia has been a victim, shoots the negro and carries Virginia away. Frank is led to believe that Jubilee has killed the negro in avenging Mrs. Carlisle, who has fainted at the sight of the body. Frank, to protect his mother's honor, has Jubilee take her out of the room and determines to claim that he killed the negro as a thief. The mob, led by Gore, breaks in, clamoring for Frank's blood. His goal is the Judge's home, and he gets as far as Virginia's home with a bullet wound in his arm, and Virginia hides him. Surprised, Frank learns his mother was not the negro's victim. Frank and Virginia realize it is a plot of Gore and Thornton. They succeed in gaining the confession of Thornton and unmasking Gore. Frank is exonerated and his election assured. And a dearer triumph comes when he learns Virginia has always loved him.

night. I will go down on this schooner which is loaded with ammunition. The American fleet is in the Pacific. On Friday next I will destroy the canal."

Contriving an entrance into the captain's stateroom, Pearl is astonished to find Adams behind her soon afterwards. He claims he is spying on them as she is, but she refuses to believe him.

Pearl finds an empty bottle, hastily writes a note to her father offering a reward to the one who finds it and will rush it to him, and throws it overboard. The bottle with the note is found by two fishermen who take it to a Government cutter, whose commander sails for Barstable Inlet. Through the periscope the Foreign Alliance see the cutter coming and prepare to launch a torpedo at it. Before they can do so, a well directed shell from the government boat bursts the top of the submarine and the water comes gushing in, catching the Foreign Alliance emissaries like rats in a watery trap. On board the schooner Pearl again accuses Adams of being the Silent Menace. Ignoring her accusations, he beckons her to look through the keyhole in the door of the captain's cabin. She looks through and sees Don't Miss the next episode—"MODERN BUCCANEERS."

PATRIA (Episode No. 7—"Red Dawn"—Two parts—Feb. 25).—The cast: Patria Channing (Mrs. Vernon Castle); Donald Parr (Milton Sills); Baron Huroki (Warner Oland).

In order that she may keep Captain Parr informed of Huroki's further plans to gain possession of the $1,000,000 Preparedness Fund she has inherited and control of the Channing Munitions Plant, Patria continues assuming the role of Elaine, the dancer, who was killed by her jealous manager and whose body was spirited away by Huroki's henchmen.

Senor De Lima presents contracts for delivery of vast munitions which bear Patria's signature, cleverly forged, but which are shown to be worthless when Parr presents a power of attorney signed by Patria four days before. De Lima insists on an immediate marriage and after consulting with Donald she consents. Parr employs a woman to claim De Lima as her husband and they arrive in the nick of time to stop the ceremony, and Patria leaves with Parr. Huroki realizing that he has been fooled as to Patria's identity resolves on more desperate methods. With his lieutenants he starts a strike at the Channing Plant. Parr hurries to the scene of the rioting. He finds the situation serious but manages to erect a good defense. Patria, left alone in New York, suffers increasing anxiety concerning Parr's danger. Unable to stand it any longer she orders her runabout and follows. Huroki and De Lima uncouple a carload of dynamite on the top of a grade and start for the plant. Patria sees the car with its mission of death and driving furiously against time reaches a crossing ahead of it. She stops her runabout directly in its path, jumps and tries desperately to get away from the terrific explosion.

CRIME AND PUNISHMENT (Arrow-Gold Rooster—Five parts—Feb. 25).—The cast: Rodion Raskoinikoff (Derwent Hall Calne); Dounia, his sister (Cherrie Coleman); His Mother (Lydia Knott); Razamouhln Porkovitch (Carl Gerard); Andreas Valeskoff (Sidney Bracy); Sonia Marmeladoff (Marguerite Courtot); Porphyus (Robert Cummings).

"One death—and thousands of lives restored to existence. For some useless life a thousand lives saved from decay and death. Shall not one little crime be effaced and atoned by a million good deeds?" So ran Rodion Raskoinikoff's creed in the book which was responsible for his being expelled from the University, but which elected him the leader of a secret brotherhood which admired him. The law proving too hot for him, he is finally forced to flee to America, still preaching his same doctrine.

Rodion's heart is touched by the poverty on the East Side and he determines to kill a pawnbroker who mercilessly squeezes the poor unfortunates to their last cent. He accomplishes the deed, takes money from the safe, uses it for the needy and manages to keep the guilt from himself. But the crime is fastened on an innocent man, who, to escape further torture of a relentless third degree confesses to a crime he had no hand in. Then comes Rodion's struggle between his conscience and his creed, and through the guidance of a "lost sister of the streets," he rejects the faith he founded and acknowledges his guilt.

A MORMON MAID (Five parts—February).—The cast: Dora (Mae Murray); Tom Rignold (Frank Borzage); John Hogue (Hobart Bosworth); Nancy Hogue (Edythe Chapman); Darius Burr (Noah Beery).

In the late fifties John Hogue, his wife and daughter, Dora, are living in a little cabin on the edge of civilization, directly in the path of the great caravans of Mormons as they made their way from the States to their community in Utah. One of these caravans, under the guidance of Elder Darius Burr, a power among the Mormons, passes the Hogue cabin and Tom Rignold, a youthful convert to the newer religion, is impressed by Dora. His interest in the girl is shared by Burr—but with different motives.

The Indians raid the Hogue cabin and the family is forced to join the Mormon party despite the fact that Dora's father and mother have many misgivings. Arrived in Salt Lake City, the Hagues are taken aback by the presence of the Avenging Angels—the peculiar group of masked men who seem to have unlimited power. Hogue is an industrious man and soon becomes quite prominent.

Burr, coveting Dora, induces "The Lion," head of the church, to insist that Hogue take a second wife and gains his permission to win Dora if he can. Meanwhile, Tom and Dora have become more and more attached to each other.

Four Angels intercept them and separate them, Dora being taken into a room adjoining the council chamber. Hogue is brought in and forced to marry a woman he has never seen and Dora is told by Burr that the only way she can save her father is by marrying him. Ignorant of the fact that he has actually been married, Dora decided to comply in order to save her father.

When Hogue's second wife is brought to the house by the Avenging Angels, Dora's mother kills herself. Hogue, Tom and Dora then try to escape, but are caught by the Angels and the girl is taken to Burr's household. Hogue is taken out to the desert to die of thirst, but makes his way back to the settlement, killing one of the Angels and donning his peculiar uniform, in which he is safe from molestation.

When Dora is brought before the council to be married, she declares she cannot marry Burr because of her past sins, and she is condemned to die. Tom is spirited away by an Avenging Angel who also unlocks Dora from her prison cell and flees with them, with Burr in pursuit. Getting Burr aside, the Avenging Angel takes him to the spot where the fugitives are hiding—and reveals himself as Hogue. Burr is sent out into the desert to die, just as he has condemned Hogue to do, and the three make their escape from the dread community.

GREATER VITAGRAPH.

ARSENE LUPIN (Feb. 26—Five parts).—The cast: Arsene Lupin (Earle Williams); Guernard (Brinsley Shaw); Guernay-Martin (Mr. Leone); Charolais (Bernard Seigel); Anastase (Gordon Gray); Firmin (Logan Paul); Alfred (Hugh Wynn); Sonia (Ethel Gray Terry); Germaine (Billie Billings); Victoire (Julia Swayne Gordon). Directed by Paul Scardon.

Gifted with charm of manner and a prepossessing appearance, Arsene Lupin, instead of employing his talents along legitimate lines, prefers to match his wits against those of the French police, with the result that he becomes the most celebrated crook of his time. Always after big game, he moves in the most exclusive circles of French society, and takes advantage of an opportunity to pass himself off as the Duke de Charmerace. Assuming the Duke's title and estates, he sets about the delicate task of stealing the rare works of art and the enormously valuable jewels belonging to a M. Guernay-Martin.

As the first step in this direction he becomes engaged to Germaine, Guernay-Martin's daughter. Under the cloak of their hospitality he commits a series of audacious robberies, stealing old masters off the walls and always signing his name on the wall paper to show he committed the theft. The distracted art collector calls in Guernard, the shrewdest detective in Paris, but even under the nose of this sleuth, the thefts continue as before.

Germaine's secretary, Sonia Kritchhoff, attracts more than the passing attention of Lupin and before he has finished with the Guernay-Martins he finds himself in love with her. Guernard finally draws the net of suspicion so closely about Lupin that the latter is forced to leave the Guernay-Martin home and hide in his own apartment. Just before leaving he discovers that Sonia is also a thief, and the shock of this knowledge determines him to lead a straight life thereafter and take her along with him. Though Guernard trails him to his hiding place he makes use of an ingenious concealed elevator and at the last exciting moment, slips from between the detective's fingers and escapes with Sonia to safety.

KITTY MACKAY (Five parts—Feb. 19).—The cast: Kitty Mackay (Lillian Walker); Mag (Jewell Hunt); Lord Inglehart (Charles Kent); his son (Don Cameron); his wife (Mrs. West); his nephew (Thomas Mills); MacGregor (William Shea); Kitty's guardian (Mr. Ferguson); his wife (Mrs. Nellie Anderson); his daughter (Beatrice Anderson). Directed by Wilfrid North.

Sweet Kitty suffers the cruelty of her adopted aunt and uncle in Scotland, until taken to England by her guardian, Lord Inglehart, where she falls in love with his son. Learning that through a former escapade of his father the girl is his sister, the boy denies her love and she returns sadly to Scotland and slavery, only to have it all explained when her uncle is taken ill and confesses that the real daughter of Lord Inglehart died and she, Kitty, was adopted in her place to secure allowance from his Lordship. David and Kitty—let us draw a veil.

THE SECRET KINGDOM (10th Episode—"A Goat Without Horns"—March 5).—The octoroon, jealous of Julia, betrays Phillip's party into the hands of a Negro Voodoo priestess, who meets Ramon and for a large sum delivers Julia into his hands.

Phillip and Juan discover Julia's absence, effect their escape and set out in pursuit of Ramon. The priestess calls a meeting of voodoo worshippers and sends for the sacrificial goat. The worshippers work themselves into a frenzy.

Ramon and his party lose their way—and are without food. Meeting the negro bearing the goat they offer to buy it—when he refuses, they slay him, kill the goat and eat it. The Cuban guide fearing the vengeance of Voodoo, steals Ramon's rifle, which is provided with a Maxim silencer, and escapes.

Phillip and Juan capture the guide. Ramon's party, meanwhile, has been captured by the Voodoo worshippers, and the priestess decides a human sacrifice must be made. She prepares to sacrifice Julia on the Voodoo altar.

Phillip and Juan save Julia as the knife of the priestess is about to sever her throat, and the "silent death" which the rifle deals terrorizes and routes the worshippers—and the white captives escape.

THE GIRL WHO DIDN'T THINK (Six Parts—February).—James Lambert, a man of the world, is smitten with the charms of Lucille, a pure and sweet little girl, and breaks with an old flame, May Chambers. With vengeance in her heart, May Chambers sought Lambert—and revenge. Believing her purpose accomplished, though it had really miscarried, she found surcease of sorrow in oblivion; and the dark waters of the river closed over her. For a few months Lucille reigned the undisputed, but uncrowned queen of a fool's paradise. Then came Irene Wallace on Lambert's horizon, and in the effulgence of her attraction, the light of Lucille's love paled and faded in his heart. And back in the humble cottage, two breaking hearts yearned for the return of an erring child; and the lamp of a mother's love was ever burning, as a beacon-light, to guide the frail, storm-tossed bark to a haven of peace and rest.

The joyous peal of wedding bells rang out—but not for Lucille. Deserted, with her little infant, she drank the cup that all must drink, whose thoughtless steps tread the "primrose path," and the bitter dregs of that cup was reached when she read the announcement of Lambert's approaching marriage. Outraged by the injustice done her innocent babe, Lucille resolved to act. Standing before God's altar, with Lambert's child in her arms, she denounced his craven act; and those about him shunned him with loathing, till he stood alone, with an accusing conscience in the presence of his maker.

Meanwhile, the dear old parents' hearts were gladdened, for their little sunshine had re-entered the home, and her innocent babe would renew their own joyous youth; even though a stain were upon its guiltless head. The old father took down the family Bible and read, "Trust in the Lord, and He shall make all things right." And that promise soon found fulfillment; for Lambert, brought face to face with his sin, saw the light, and was led to repentance. So one day, came a letter to Lucille, from Lambert, offering his name for their joy, for the little mother's heart welled up with joy, for the man she still loved—the father of her babe—had been redeemed

TWO MEN AND A WOMAN (Five Parts—February).—The cast: Tony Merritt (James Morrison); Bruce Donaldson (Guy Coombs); Mark Hornback (John Reinhard); Wanda (Christine Mayo); Ethel Walling (Ruby de Remer); Miss Steele (Helen Arnold); Countess Yaki (Yuka Yamakura). Directed by Willard Mack.

Bruce Donaldson, an ex-naval officer, is the guardian and benefactor of Tony Merritt, son of one of his former comrades. He sends Tony to college, and spends his time working on the plans of a new diving bell which he has invented.

Tony, returning from college, falls in love with Ethel Walling, daughter of a wealthy widow, who is Bruce's neighbor. Tony proposes to Ethel, and asks Bruce to help him in his wooing. Bruce and Ethel love each other, without ever having expressed or realized that love, and Bruce, believing that youth calls youth, sacrifices his own love and asks Ethel to marry Tony. She, feeling that Bruce will never marry her, accepts Tony, more to please Bruce than through love for the boy.

The Countess Yaki, a Japanese spy in the employ of a foreign government, is commissioned to get the plans of Bruce's diving bell, and calls to her aid Mark Hornback, also an ex-naval officer, who secures the plans in such a way as to cast suspicion on Tony.

Wanda, an adventuress, who had lured Tony into her clutches while he was at college, learns that he is to marry Ethel, and demands a large sum of money for the letters he had written her, threatening to sue him for breach of promise as an alternative. He cannot raise the money. Wanda, calling at his home to reiterate her demands, is discovered by Bruce, who learns of the affair. He entices Wanda into his bedroom, and, sending Tony for witness to her supposed wrongdoing with himself, makes forcible love to her as Ethel and her mother enter. Ethel, horror-stricken and heartbroken, leaves, but not before Wanda learns of the love she bears Bruce and of Bruce's love for her.

Tony, on his return, receives from Bruce the letters he wrote Wanda, learns from the adventuress of the love Ethel and Bruce bear for each other, and goes off to Ethel's house to release her from her promise to marry him.

THE LIVING BOOK OF NATURE (By Raymond L. Ditmars—"The Orang"—Feb. 5).—The lessons of Darwin and the theory of the evolution of man, form one of the most fascinating chapters of Nature. The scenes in this picture offer striking proof of Darwin's theories. They are not the scenes of trained animals, but show different examples of the Orang, a man-like type, unconsciously portraying traits that are strangely human. The first experience with a picture book, with a chair, in human attire and finally the endeavor to assume a phase of table etiquette, cause the observer to gasp with astonishment. Some of the episodes are funny, but there is a feeling throughout this Nature playlet that a strong lesson has been demonstrated in man's primeval ancestry.

THE LIVING BOOK OF NATURE (By Raymond L. Ditmars—A Chapter on Mammals of Strange Form—Feb. 12).—Here we have the larger animals induced to portray their most interesting traits. Some of the most remarkable creatures in Nature appear in this picture. The rare and grotesque Wart-hog is alternately astounding and amusing. Taking much risk, Dr. Ditmars, who made the pictures, personally entered the enclosure of the two ton Nile Hippopotamus and operated the camera while the great animal was in one of his rare and frisky—and dangerous moods. There are also the first scenes of the most costly wild animal on earth—the pygmy hippopotamus. A pair of them cost the New York Zoological Society the sum of $12,000. It is shown how the oil which constantly exudes from their waterproof skin can be instantly rubbed into a mass of foam. Their saher-like tusks are also shown.

The scenes throughout are of the great mammals of ancient origin, which impart an idea of the grotesque life of past ages and is mainly represented in modern times by rock-bound fossils. The picture includes scenes of the African wart-hog and push-plg, the Nile pygmy hippopotamus and the Malayan tapir.

THE LIVING BOOK OF NATURE (By Raymond L. Ditmars—"American Bears"—Feb. 13).—These huge carnivores are natural clowns, yet the scenic-story showing all details of how the veteran keepers enter the dens of animals weighing a thousand pounds and rearing nine feet high, illustrates the degree of caution necessary in the profession of caring for wild animals.

There are many species of American bears, and this is shown in the intimate portrayals of the Black bear, the Cinnamon, Grizzly, Alaskan brown and Kadlak bears. All of these ponderous actors are doing definite things. They show their dexterity in catching food, amusing antics when heggling for choice morsels of food, how they adore a gallon of undiluted cod-liver oil and drink it from a bottle, accept molasses from a spoon and finally gambol in the snow. The scenes conclude with an eleven hundred pound Kadlak bear assisting the keeper to shovel the snow—and making it fly like a mechanical plow.

THE SAINTLY SINNER (Feb. 26).—The cast: Jane Lee (Ruth Stonehouse); Bess Murphy (Alida Hayman); Mrs. Carrington (Dorothy Drake); George Barnes (Jack Mulhall); John Brock (Henry Devries); Richard White (Raymond Whitaker); Gov. Barnes (Frederick Montague). Scenario by Eugene Lewis. Directed by Raymond Wells.

Jane Lee, the daughter of a stock broker, comes under the attention of John Brock, a villain, who covets the girl, and starts to ruin her father. In the end Lee finds himself penniless, and commits suicide. Brock assuming the role of Jane's protector, gives her work in his office. He arranges for her to remain late one night and then attacks her. She defends herself, and her outcries bring assistance. Brock accuses the girl of attempting to rob his safe and she is sent to prison.

Governor Barnes, interested in welfare work, employs Mrs. Carrington in uplifting unfortunate girls. The Governor's son has gained his father's displeasure and is turned away from home. Mrs. Carrington has become interested in Jane Lee and when the girl's prison term expires takes her into her home.

Jane later loses her position, because her prison record becomes known to Mrs. Carrington's friends and they compel her dismissal. She meets Richard White who has met financial reverses through John Brock. With mutual impulses for revenge, White and Jane combine to work against Brock.

The girl has found a friend in Bess Murphy. White covets Bess and tricks her into coming to his apartment, telling her Jane is ill. White attacks her and her cries attract Jane, who lives in the same apartment house. In protecting Bess Jane stabs White to death. Her trial results in sentence of death.

George Barnes, the Governor's son, has been an attendant at Mrs. Carrington's mission and has met Jane and Bess. Meanwhile he has reformed and becomes a lawyer. He is in the West when he hears of Jane's misfortune and hurries home, to urge his father to pardon Jane. There is great rejoicing when the prodigal returns, the Governor consents to the pardon and Jane marries the Governor's son.

romantic knight who worships her. One day she is astonished to see some of the gaily dressed lords and ladies of her romantic fancy wandering about the village. She approaches Kenneth Driscoll, the handsomest of them all, and learns that they are not really lords and ladies, but members of a moving picture company taking scenes in the village. Driscoll is attracted to the girl. He sympathizes with her loneliness and longing for romance, and tells her that in pictures she would get all the thrills she could desire and gradually go fires her imagination that she decides to go to the city to try her luck in the motion picture world.

Through the influence of Driscoll and despite the jealous protest of Driscoll's sweetheart, Vivian Carleton, Mary is promised the ingenue role in a production and in joyous anticipation she awaits the result of her trial picture, but all her hopes are doomed to disappointment, for the test is a failure. She is told by the director that she will never make a picture actress. She hates to return to the village a failure, and yet it is impossible to remain in the city without funds and without work. Her bitter reverie is interrupted by Driscoll. He tells her there is no need for her to go back to the village; she can remain in the city with him and he will be glad to take care of her. Mary yields to his pleadings, not realizing that she is playing on the edge of a dangerous abyss.

Driscoll gives a party to celebrate her first night in her handsome new apartment which he has fitted up for her. Mary, who has drunk for the first time in her life, is the gayest of them all and is just rising to toast the crowd when the door opens and her mother enters. Mrs. Baker, homesick for her daughter, had come to the city to seek her out. The crowd at first inclined to ridicule the little old country woman, are silenced by Driscoll and the old mother is led to believe the party a respectable affair at which she is the honored guest. The presence of her mother brings Mary to a realization of how dangerous was the fire with which she has been playing and she begs her mother to take her home.

Back in the country, she is welcomed by Johnny, while in the city Driscoll returns to his more congenial sweetheart, whom he had neglected for the village girl.

THE SECRET OF EVE (Popular Plays and Players—5 Parts—Feb. 26).—The cast: Eve and Hagar (Mme. Petrova); Arthur Brandon (Arthur Hoops); Robert Blair (William Hinkley); Fothergill (Edward Roseman); Deborah, wife of Fothergill (Laurie Macklin); Rosa (Florence Moore); Beppo (George Morrell). Scenario by Wallace C. Clifton. Directed by Perry Vekroff.

Hagar, a gypsy woman, is determined that her child, Eve, shall have a better chance for happiness than her wandering life has afforded her. She leaves her baby on the doorstep of a Quaker family, the Fothergills and little Eve is brought up as their daughter.

The ways of the Quakers pall upon Eve when she grows up. She sees merrymaking in the home of the Brandons one evening, and lured by the lights, peers in at the window. The gay crowd notice the Quaker girl, draw her into the house, and amuse themselves by dressing her up in finery. She confesses her loneliness to Arthur Brandon, who tells her of the fascinations of a great city. As their friendship grows, he asks her to marry him.

She consents, and for a time revels in galacty. But it finally becomes clear to her that there is no real happiness in such a life. Brandon is a factory owner, and he is conscienceless in his treatment of his workers. Eve is humiliated by the denunciations of her husband that appear in the newspapers. He also drinks heavily.

Richard Blair, a young philanthropist, starts an investigation. While he is visiting Brandon's factory an Italian child, Rosa, is blinded by an accident. Rosa is granted a miserable pittance in compensation for the accident, and Blair tries to force Brandon to do more for her. He refuses. Blair finds work for Beppo, Rosa's father, and sends the child to an institute for the blind.

Eve admires the nobility of Blair's nature. Brandon, misunderstanding the friendship of the two, insults her in the presence of Blair, who knocks him down. Eve offers to go away with Blair. He says he loves her, but he will not take her unlawfully. She will not return to her husband, so she goes to the city to fight her own way. She soon finds out, however, that she is unfitted for the rough work she undertakes. Deciding that suicide is her only way out, she goes to a park lake intending to drown herself.

She hears a girl calling out in distress, and sees the child, who is blind, walking toward the lake. Eve goes to her and finds it is Rosa, who has wandered away from the other children. Eve takes her back to the institute. Beppo has never ceased to seek for revenge against Brandon. He follows him on board his motor boat, and when the boat is well away from shore he attacks Brandon and tries to kill him. An oil lamp is overturned. It sets fire to the boat, and both men, fearfully burned, sink to the bottom of the bay locked in a death grapple.

Blair goes to Eve and tells her the news of her husband's death, saying that the way is now open for them to marry. But Eva's heart is bound up in the welfare of the blind children among whom she has cast her lot. She accepts a position as an attendant at the institute, to give her life to the little ones through whom she has at last discovered the secret of true happiness.

THE GREAT SECRET (Chapter IX, "Cupid's Puzzle"—Two Parts—March 5).—Strong, safe in his home, with Wee See, rejoices over having restored Beverly to her mother. Detective Redman Sears, known as "the Sherlock Holmes of New York," calls on him and tells him that the chief of detectives, Ackerton, has been murdered. Ackerton had entered his office just after a burglar got into the place. The intruder was working at a safe in the laboratory when Ackerton heard him, entered with drawn revolver and was killed. The assistant to the chief of detectives found him and summoned Sears, who discovered, by impression left on the safe, that a finger was missing from one of the hands of the alayer.

These facts Sears relates to Strong and then draws from his pocket the treasure belonging to Beverly. Strong telephones to the Clarke home and just as the call is put in a birling of The Secret Seven "taps" the wire. He bears the conversation between Strong and Beverly, in which the clubman tells her of the wealth and asks her to hurry to his home with her mother. Thus the wire-tapper gets a clue to the whereabouts of the treasure.

While Beverly and her mother are on their way to the Strong home another plot is being hatched by The Secret Seven. The chief conspirator was Jim Pearsall, a member of the organization that operated in Wall street. Pearsall, knowing that Strong owns a large factory in which hundreds of persons are employed, and the securities of which are listed in the stock market, began carrying out plans to bring financial ruin to the establishment and at the same time cause a strike in the factory.

A feeling of dissatisfaction is shown among the workmen there. A delegation of them call on Strong and tells him they want an increase in wages. He replies that he cannot consent at the present, as he has met with reverses in the stock market. A strike is promptly declared.

This is the situation confronting Strong when Beverly and her mother reach his home. But, joyful over the good fortune awaiting the girl and eager to make her happy, Strong forgets his own troubles and tells her of the securities and the great wealth they represent. Suddenly Wee See rushes into the room with a newspaper, announcing the failure of his big establishment. Beverly, noting the sudden defection that seizes Strong, goes to his side. He assumes an attitude of gayety, tells her nothing is wrong, and, excusing himself, goes to another room. She follows him into another room and learns of his misfortune. In payment for his kindness in securing the treasure for her, Beverly professes her aid, but he rejects it. His attitude leads her to believe he does not love her, and thus is formed in their lives a puzzle for Cupid.

BOBBY BUMPS IN THE GREAT "DIVIDE" (On Same Reel As Foregoing).—Equipped with a small boy's appetite for sweet things, Bobby Bumps steals into the region where Dinah holds forth bent on investigating the available supply of edibles and pleading his case with the dark-skinned mistress ruling over the culinary department. Much to his surprise there rests in all of its white sugar frosted glory a wonderful cake, fresh from the ovens, and Dinah sits in her chair—fast asleep. But just as Bobby is about to get the prize, the dusky damsel awakens and Bobby beats a hasty retreat through the window.

But boys like Bobby consider obstacles only as incentives to the chase and with so wonderful a capture in sight he must consult his pal and chief adviser—Fido the pup. As usual, when two beads are put together, a means presents itself. A vacuum cleaning wagon and a lot of sewer pipes stand at the curbing. With the assistance of his enterprising pup, Bobby joins the pipes, pushes them through the window in touch with the cake, connects the vacuum hose, turns on the power, and the cake rests safely in his bands while Dinah, slumbering again, wakes only in time to see the two disappearing over the back-yard fence.

A chase follows in which Bobby and the pup make use of a friendly but excited goat and Dinah, the cook, an abandoned hand car, and no doubt it would still be on if a locomotive hadn't insisted that the tracks were built for it exclusively. After the dust settles the division of the cake is equally adjusted to the satisfaction of all—not to say the huge delight of Bobby and his pup.

THE WINNING OF SALLY TEMPLE (Lasky—Five parts—Feb. 19).—The cast; Sally Temple (Fannie Ward); Lord Romsey (Jack Dean); Duke of Chatto (Walter Long); Oliver Pipe (Horace B. Carpenter); Jellett (Billy Elmer); Talbot (Paul Weigel); Lord Verney (H. Woodward); Lord Dorset (Harry J. Smith); Sir John Gorham (Eugene Pallette); Kate Temple (Florence Smythe); Gregory (John McClennen); Lady Pamela Vaulcain (Voila Vale).

Sally Temple, an actress at the Drury Lane Theatre, is benefactress and idol of the people of Pump Lane, where she lives. They are continually oppressed by their landlord, the Duke of Chatto, and to help them Sally gives them of her own money. Lady Pamela, ward of the wealthy and reckless Lord Romsey, marries three weeks before she is of age, and when the news that he is to be home in three days reaches her, it is suggested that someone take her place, otherwise Lord Romsey might seize her property. They choose Sally as the substitute, promising her ample remuneration. She accepts, that she may be able to help her people more. Talbot, the Duke of Chatto's agent, sees Sally on one of his visits to Pump Lane and tells his master of her beauty. Romsey loses no time in calling, but finds Sally is away. Having never seen his ward, the deception is a success, but when Romsey attempts to exercise his authority and Sally rebels, he locks her in her boudoir. He tells Sally she must marry him at once and she runs away. She encounters Jellett, a prize fighter, who offers his protection. As she mounts the steps of a stage coach, Romsey reaches her and she tells him of the deception, but he is still determined to marry her. As he starts to drag her from the coach, Jellett seizes him and the two men engage in a terrific fight, Jellett winning, but leaving Romsey's determination unchanged. He dons a workman's garb and sets out for London. Reaching Pump Lane he finds Sally, and tells her he needs employment. She secures work for him with the blacksmith. He employs other methods than force to win the girl now and helps the poor people. The Duke of Chatto has Sally kidnapped, and Romsey and Jellett rescue her. Next day Chatto, with some of his servants, seeks Romsey to have him flogged. Romsey discloses his identity, demanding that the Duke sell him Pump Lane or "answer to the Marquis of Romsey for his deeds." He presents Pump Lane to the future Lady Romsey, who gives it to her people, and amid the cheers of the crowd, the happy pair walk away, arm in arm.

ON RECORD (Lasky—Five Parts—Feb. 22).—The cast includes Mae Murray, Tom Forman, Henry A. Barrows, Charles Ogle, Louis Morrison, Bliss Chevalier, Gertrude Maitland.

Helen Wayne is living in a small town, studying stenography. An aeroplane falls near her home, and Rand Calder, its pilot, is injured. Helen aids in sending him home. Later, she goes to the city and, just as her funds become exhausted, is employed by Mrs. Calder as private secretary, also to do research work for Rand, who is perfecting an aeroplane stabilizer, and is anxious to complete it ahead of his rivals, the Manson Aeroplane Company. Before taking up her duties Helen goes to the library in search of a book on aeroplanes, and meets Martin Ingleton, an attorney who lives next door to the Calders. He induces the hungry girl to accompany him to dinner, and as she meets Ingleton later she is arrested on suspicion and taken to jail. Appearances are against her, and, although she is freed, she is placed on record.

Constant companionship between Helen and Rand ripens into love, and when Rand proposes, Helen accepts. Ingleton meets Helen and at his request she goes to his house at night. He threatens her with exposure unless she assists him in his betrayal of Calder's invention to the Mason Company. Upon her refusal, Ingletton arranges a visit to the night court, inviting Helen and Mrs. Calder at a time when he believes Rand out of town. The party goes to the Judge's chambers and a discussion of the finger print system is started. Just as Helen's card is being shown to Mrs. Calder Rand enters. With exposure inevitable, Helen tells her own story, accusing Ingletton of being a traitor. He is defiant until the Judge destroys Helen's card when he slinks away, and Helen turns to her lover.

SOME DOCTOR (Klever Comedy—Feb. 26.)—Victor Moore, M.D., has an office in a neighborhood which is not a particularly wealthy one and his income is not large, so he has to do his own housework. His office is frequented more by beggars than patients who can pay, and when he had about given up hope, he is confronted by an old friend who asks him to call on Mrs. Garwood who has plenty of money, but much dyspepsia. So he gets his "flivver" which he has managed to retain, and starts off.

Mrs. Garwood has a daughter Gloria, with whom Vic is in love and this opportunity serves two purposes. He diagnoses Mrs. Garwood's case as too much medicine and too little exercise and also suggests a "Tug-o-windo" machine. While waiting for it to be installed he makes use of his opportunity to say a few words to Gloria.

A masque ball is to be given that night. Vic tries to find out what Gloria is going to wear but is not successful. After explaining the mechanism to the nurse, Vic goes home and gets his costume. Hoping to make a hit with Gloria, he has selected "Romeo." Gloria selected the costume of a Spanish Senorita. When Vic arrives at the ball he starts to look for Gloria. During the evening someone steps on a lady's dress and it comes off. Vic goes to the rescue. Thinking it might be Gloria he throws his cloak about the lady who unmasks—but much to Vic's surprise it is a man! The crowd gives Vic the laugh, and he decides to give up the hunt for Gloria.

In the meantime the nurse has started the machine but operates it too fast and the old lady is nearly crazy. She finds she cannot stop it, and panic stricken phones to Gloria who unmasks and rushes to find Vic, who has also unmasks. She explains what has happened and both in their costumes get into the "flivver" and drive madly to Gloria's home. The old lady is in a terrible fix. Vic tries to stop the machine but cannot. He jumps into bed and with the assistance of the nurse and Gloria he tries again to stop it, but he cannot. Then he draws his Romeo sword and hacks the rope of the exerciser and stops it. Mrs. Garwood is about all in when she spies Vic and his Romeo costume and golden wig curls. She breaks out laughing for the first time in months and cries "I'm cured, I'm cured." Gloria is so elated that she grabs Vic and kisses him and Vic realizes his first real case has won out.

SEVEN DEADLY SINS NO. 4 ("Sloth"—5 Parts—Feb. 19.)—The cast: Molly Pitcher, Sally Wells and Margaret Brent (Charlotte Walker); Ingles (Jack Meredith); Sir Phillip Reed (D. J. Flannigan); Sieguird (Jack Crosby); Margaret's sister (Grace Williams); John Pitcher

(Charles DeMuset); George McCauley (A. Barrett); Peter Van Koort (Emil Hach); Adam Moore (George Le Guere); Eve Leslie (Shirley Mason). Directed by Theodore Mars-ton.

Eve Leslie is becoming indolent. The fortune she has inherited has made her unwilling to stir about any more than is necessary. Adam Moore, a member of the National Guard, is called out to help defend the country. Eve doesn't want him to go. She doesn't see any sense in his going to the front, especially since he will be away from her and will not be able to take part in a number of parties that have been arranged.

Petulant, she sits down to read. One after the other come before her the exciting stories of heroines of the past.

Comes the story of Sally Wells who braved Indians and wild animals to preserve a claim for her family. Sally Wells is followed by Margaret Brent, whose home was captured by pirates, bold men who fought first against her, then for her. Next follows the thrilling tale of Molly Pitcher, in all the glory of the battle of Monmouth, in which she manned a cannon herself and turned the tide of battle against the British.

Eve finishes reading. Inspired by the actions of these great women she conquers the sin of sloth, cheers Adam as he leaves with his regiment and follows him to the battlefield as a Red Cross nurse. There she is tested, as were the brave women she read about, and she proves as true as they had been.

THE NICK OF TIME BABY (Mack Sennett-Keystone—2 Parts—Feb. 11.)—The cast includes Bobby Vernon; Gloria Swanson; Earl Rodney; Sylvia Ashton; Harry Lyndon; Helen Bray. Directed by Clarence Badger.

Gloria Swanson, the blacksmith's daughter, and Bobby Vernon, the chore boy fall in love with one another. Bobby's uncle leaves him a fortune and the erstwhile chore boy gives a party to his friends.

Earl Rodney is also in love with Gloria and conceives a way to deprive Bob of his fortune. The will of the uncle declares that in case a child is born in the house left to Bobby before the tenants move, or before Bobby is of age, then the property shall go to the child.

Rodney sees a chance to make it appear that a child has been born and gets permission of the parents to have a child adopted. The mother of the baby is paid to desert the child and run away. Later the father who has deserted her, hears of the child and returns.

Bobby is given to understand that the child owns the house. He has trouble with his sweetheart.

The baby mysteriously disappears and after many exciting episodes in which the child is nearly drowned, but finally saved by Gloria and Bobby, the real parents appear and claim the baby, while Bobby, again the owner of the house, makes love to Gloria.

STARS AND BARS (Mack Sennett-Keystone—2 Parts—Feb. 18.)—The cast includes Ford Sterling, Gene Rogers, May Emory, Harry Gribbon, Hugh Fay. Directed by Victor Heerman.

A misunderstanding between the mayor and his young wife is caused by the former using a baby grand piano scarf for a bath towel. Ford Sterling, as the police chief, arrives at the mayor's home during his absence and, finding his wife in tears, consoles her, therefore arriving at the station very late, when the mayor reprimands him.

Later the mayor states that he is going out for the purpose of purchasing a birthday present for his wife. Gribbon, the crook, arrives in town and discovers the mayor engaged with a clerk in the purchase of a necklace. As the mayor emerges with the present, Gribbon steals it. Gribbon sells the necklace to the police chief, who gives it to the mayor's wife. Gribbon sees her put her necklace in a drawer and attempts to steal it.

The mayor discovers his loss and immediately connects the loss with the picture of a criminal on his desk. Gribbon comes and tells him he can find the crook. A detective gets off the train and starts in the direction of the mayor's home. Gribbon and the detective meet and each recognizes the other. The mayor takes a hand and the cops hustle the detective to jail. Gribbon and the mayor then go inside the mayor's house, where the chief and the wife of the mayor are discovered locked in a closet. The chief comes out disguised as a woman.

The mayor takes the badge and the hat off the police chief and puts them on Gribbon. Gribbon thanks him and demands reward. The mayor goes into the next room to get it. While he is gone, the detective tries to convince the cops of his innocence, but cannot succeed in doing so. The mayor's wife comes to the trial, wearing the necklace. The mayor sees this and discovers that it is the pearl necklace originally stolen from him. The chief hears this and starts to sneak out, and while he is explaining that he obtained them from Gribbon, Gribbon grabs the mayor's wife and dashes out of the door with the crowd in pursuit. A chase follows and all is brought to a finish.

MAGGIE'S FIRST FALSE STEP (Mack Sennett-Keystone—2 Parts—Feb. 25.)—The cast includes Charles Murray, Louise Fazenda, Harry Booker, Alice Davenport, Wallace Beery, Mary Thurman. Directed by Frank Griffin.

Louise Fazenda, a country girl, has always lived a quiet life until Wallace Beery motored into the village and offered to make her famous. She had always been inclined to incur the wrath of her parents by trying to sing and Beery assures her that he can soon make her a great singer if she will run away with him.

In his machine he takes her to the city, where he accidentally meets his wife. Quick action being required he throws Louise out of the machine and she finds herself alone and without a job in a strange city.

While sitting in the park wondering what to do, she meets Charles Murray, who is a floor walker in a department store. He takes her with him and puts her to work in the store.

Beery has succeeded in stealing all her money, but she manages finally to get it back. Her parents learning of her elopement come to the city to rescue her, but the father becomes much interested in the pretty shop girls and gets into trouble. Louise falls in love with the floor walker.

Why Not Now?

JUST as there are still a few counties in the United States in which there are no railroads—and just as there are a few people in this country who have not yet ridden on street cars, so also are there a few motion picture theatres in which a plain white sheet or a kalsomined wall is used as a surface on which to project motion pictures.

You will agree that the counties in which there are no railroads are quite lacking in development in these later days and that the folks who have not ridden in street cars are scarcely eligible to be called progressive. And by the same token, the exhibitor who is not using a scientifically prepared projection surface is considerably behind the times. If he intends to continue in the motion picture business, he must "catch up with the band-wagon"—he must give his patrons as much for their money as his competitor is giving them.

The RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN is the best of these scientifically prepared projection surfaces—the best by test—and the one that is most widely known. Eventually you'll install one—why not now?

The Improved Model Motiograph

STANDARD OF VALUE AND QUALITY

Made of the very best material and yet reasonably priced.

Just a Few of Its Important Points of Merit—

Lamphouse—Large, well made and well ventilated.

Are Lamp—To take 8" lower and 12" upper carbons; has 8 different adjustments.

Condenser Mount—So arranged that either condenser can be removed separately when desired; one of the latest improvements on the MOTIOGRAPH.

Mechanism—Runs quiet, requires very little attention from operator; projects rock-steady pictures, due to accuracy in manufacturing.

Star and Cam—Accurately ground and run in oil bath.

New Patented Sliding Disc Connection—which has been used in the MOTIOGRAPH for over fifteen months, is becoming more popular every day with the users, due to its "no wear" qualities and rigidity produced in the framing device. (Ball Arbor, used in former models, has been discontinued.)

Two Balance Wheels—To insure perfect action and steadiness of picture.

Pedestal—Heavy; designed so as to eliminate vibration.

Magazines—Made of heavy material, will hold 2,000 feet of film.

Motor— $\frac{1}{4}$ H. P., entirely enclosed. Machine can be purchased with or without motor.

Rheostat—Adjustable, 20 to 55 amperes.

Regular MOTIOGRAPH Lens with each equipment.

Outside Shutter—Now used on the MOTIOGRAPH instead of inside shutter, as on former models.

List Price

Hand-driven Equipment, $265.00.
Motor-driven Equipment, $305.00.

Why Pay High Prices

for pictures and for projection apparatus unless you use a projection lens that enables you to get the full benefit of your investment?

No matter what your films cost, the quality of the pictures your patrons see will not be any better than the quality of your projection lens.

That is why it pays to use a lens, which transmits a brilliant flood of light that brings out the full value of every detail in every part of every picture.

Your Export Trade and 1917—

One of President Wilson's strongest policies has been the increasing of the Export Trade of the United States.

The Republics of Latin America, Spain, Portugal, Porto Rico and the Philippines are completely shut off from their former sources of supply; due to the great European conflict.

France, Italy and Germany are too busy making war to continue catering to the needs of their Latin-American friends. These people are casting eager glances toward the United States for the fulfillment of their many needs.

Are you endeavoring to receive your share of this profitable business?

CINE MUNDIAL—the Spanish Edition of the Moving Picture World—is reaching over 5,000 of your probable prospects each month in these Latin-American countries.

CINE MUNDIAL celebrated its first anniversary with the January issue. It has done yeoman service for a number of concerns who have taken time by the forelock to erect a permanent, profitable, foreign business through its columns.

CINE MUNDIAL is willing and anxious to serve you in any manner possible, if you are anxious to obtain a satisfactory volume of new business.

WHY NOT GO after this export opportunity that is knocking at your door?

HAND BOOK

FOR MANAGERS and OPERATORS

Published by

RICHARDSON'S MOTION PICTURE HAND BOOK is a carefully prepared guide to perfect projection.

It is an invaluable help to every single individual in the trade who has to do with the mechanical handling of motion picture film or the management of a moving picture theatre.

There are over 680 Pages of Text and the illustrations include detail diagrams of all the leading makes of projection machines.

"Max Comes Across"

Read what the critics say:

"Max Linder's humorous powers to evoke laughter are irresistible. * * * He has grown in power as a magic mirth maker. * * * His art to create laughter does not rely on vulgar incident."

Jas. S. McQuade, Moving Picture World.

"Max Linder's first American-made comedy holds one great promise for this comedian's future work. * * * He undeniably has a greater ability for facial contortion, both comic and dramatic, than any other screen laughmaker * * * 'Max Comes Across' is a noteworthy production."

Power - Love and Romance

a Real Novelty

This RED FEATHER feature is a five-reel combination entertainment—the first part a drama with a big punch with Cleo Madison, Molly Malone, Roberta Wilson and Jack Nelson as stars; directed by Geo. Cochrane; the second part the biggest Western ever filmed in two reels with Neal Hart, Joe Rickson, Edward Hearn, L. M. Wells and Janet Eastman; written and directed by Geo. Marshall.

The two sections are two totally different stories, having no connection except that together they constitute a five-reeler of the finest entertainment. The first part could easily have been stretched to five reels and the second to three—so that in reality you are getting EIGHT REELS OF SUPREMELY GOOD DRAMA IN FIVE REELS.

Boost this as a novelty. Then ask your patrons how they like the idea. Then TELL US. This is a box-office attraction that will please. Profit by it.

THREE hundred and sixty-five days a year we are striving to produce the unusual, because we believe the exhibitor will soon realize the importance of his single-reel pictures—the kind that we produce combining three in one—scenic, story, comedy. You will find these 3 important elements in our one-reel Robert C. Bruce, American Adventure Series.

IN one trade review a prominent critic wrote regarding our "Mammals of Strange Form" from Ditmars' "Living Book of Nature": "It gives the spectator a laugh hand in hand with a lesson; . . . is one of the most comical sights we have seen in a month—Chaplin was the other." These pictures also combine 3 in 1—educational story, comedy.

ONE of the world's largest theatres—The Strand, New York—has been featuring these pictures for the past eighteen consecutive weeks, and will continue.

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS ^{INC}
PRESENT ELLA HALL IN
"POLLY-REDHEAD"
THE FAMOUS "POLLYOLLY" STORIES
BY EDGAR JEPSON COME TO LIFE
DIRECTED BY JACK CONWAY

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPlays

THE biggest news in the film world today —
“BLUEBIRDS HAVE ARRIVED.”

If that means nothing to you, we shall proceed to elucidate.

From every section of this big and prosperous country come letters by the hundreds—from fans; from Exhibitors; from Exchange men—that prove beyond the shadow of a doubt that THE PUBLIC IS DEMANDING BLUEBIRD PHOTOPlays.

The big point for you to consider is that BLUEBIRD Photoplays (Inc.) was the first producer to buck the star system—the ruinous practice that has been responsible for the high-priced but low-grade features that have wrecked many an Exhibitor.

The BLUEBIRD announced its policy of “The Play’s the Thing” in the most extensive moving picture advertising campaign ever launched, in the Saturday Evening Post. Everyone said BLUEBIRD was wrong—

NOW—not only the fans and the Exhibitors and the Exchange men are convinced BLUEBIRD was right—but OTHER PRODUCERS ARE ATTEMPTING TO FOLLOW THE BLUEBIRD LEAD.

What’s the answer? BLUEBIRDS are getting the money. That’s all there is to it. If you want to pack your house; add prestige and popularity to your theatre’s reputation; increase your bank roll, and QUIT WORRYING ABOUT YOUR SHOW—BOOK BLUEBIRD Photoplays.

Seven Day Pictures

Paramount Pictures are seven-days-a-week pictures, not Monday, Tuesday or Wednesday pictures, but every-day-in-the-week pictures.

Paramount doesn't exploit this picture or that picture, because the quality of

is consistent throughout. Paramount Pictures are the kind of pictures that keep your business running steadily and profitably—not one big feast week and then two or three weeks of famine—but a steady increase on the right side of the balance sheet. Your patrons know what "A Paramount Picture" means.

Take the Paramount Pictures for this week and next month, for instance, as listed on the opposite page.

Goldwyn Pictures

Goldwyn Invites the Exhibitors' Confidence

FIVE THOUSAND applications for service received by Goldwyn in two weeks indicate the eager and alert interest of exhibitors in its officers, its stars and productions.

It is most significant that virtually every letter contains statements like these:

"It is indeed encouraging to us who have a great deal invested in the picture business to see such an alliance of literary brains, efficient management and great stars combined under able leadership."—Samuel Katz, Amalgamated Theatres Corporation, Chicago, Ill.

"You seem to be an exception in believing that a small house has the right to live; that the small exhibitor is still a powerful factor."—Henry Bishop, Bishop's Theatre, Hoboken, N. J.

"Goldwyn's announcements portend the entry of a producing concern whose influence will be felt everywhere at the time of its first release."—A. F. Brentlinger, Orpheum Theatre, Fort Wayne, Ind.

It is to be assumed that an organization inspiring this confidence months before releasing its first picture possesses the brains and ability to maintain and strengthen this confidence after getting under way.

JANE COWL

This young and beautiful emotional star is one of the ablest and best known celebrities of the American theatre. Her tremendous following on the stage will be magnified many thousands of times when she appears on the screen as the exclusive star in Goldwyn Pictures.

The able critics of the influential newspapers of the nation welcome this lovely woman into pictures with these enthusiastic comments:

LOUISVILLE HERALD: "A woman of unusual talent and remarkable beauty, known all over the Union."

PITTSBURGH POST: "Goldwyn in Jane Cowl has signed America's greatest emotional actress."

BOSTON TRAVELER: "Jane Cowl is known all over America and deserves to be, for she is one of our greatest actresses."

TOLEDO TIMES: "Jane Cowl is known to millions as the star of 'Within the Law' and 'Common Clay.'"

CHICAGO AMERICAN: "Jane Cowl is one of the highest stars of the stage. She will be an even bigger screen star."

NEW YORK SUN: "Sarah Bernhardt in her 'Vive La France' when she chants at the end of 'From the Stage to the Field of Honor' does not reach a higher emotional pitch or obtain a more telling effect than Jane Cowl when she ends her phrase with the same words."

BUFFALO TIMES: "One of the best actresses on the American stage and perhaps the loveliest."

OAKLAND TRIBUNE: "Goldwyn has landed another of the biggest stage stars in Jane Cowl—able, brilliant and beautiful."

GALVESTON NEWS: "Bringing Jane Cowl into pictures is a notable achievement for Goldwyn."

MUTUAL NEWS

"What's Going On In The Mutual"

WEEKLY NEWS OF THE MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION AND ITS EXCHANGES

MARCH 10, 1917

MARY MILES MINTER IS BEGINNING WORK ON NEW MUTUAL SERIES

WORK has begun at the Santa Barbara studios of the American Film Company, Inc., on a new series of Mary Miles Minter-Mutual Photoplays. This popular star has achieved new laurels in each release made through the Mutual Exchanges. Each new Minter-Mutual Photoplay has won for her new friends—besides increasing the admiration of her former ones. Exhibitors all over the country report a steadily increasing drawing power on Minter subjects. Mary Miles Minter is more popular today than ever before. And now she is beginning work on a new series of productions that will still further increase her popularity.

James Kirkwood to Direct.

James Kirkwood—famous director—is again to supervise the Mary Miles Minter-Mutual Photoplays. All the skill, craft and imagination that he used to put into the Pickford films, when he was Miss Pickford's director, are now being devoted to bringing out the latent talent of Mary Miles Minter. He studies his star with the utmost care. He takes particular pains to arrange his productions so that little Miss Minter can display to the full her wonderful charms. Going still farther than that, Mr. Kirkwood is now himself writing a vehicle for his popular little leading woman. Its title is "Environment." It will be the first subject in the new series of Minter-Mutual Photoplays. Its release date will be announced later.

Growing in Popularity.

Exhibitors are truly amazed at the growth in popularity of Mary Miles Minter. Today Minter pictures are out-drawing those of practically any other star. The public has enshrined her as its newest idol. Queen Mary today reigns over a far greater number of subjects than a European queen. Exhibitors everywhere will be anxious to make reservations for the new series of Minter subjects. Mutual exchanges are accepting reservations now.

New Star's Auspicious Start

"The Greater Woman," the first of the Marjorie Rambeau-Mutual Photoplays, opened auspiciously everywhere, and this charming star instantly endeared herself to the playgoing public. "Motherhood," the second Rambeau-Mutual Photoplay, is scheduled for early release. Work has already begun on "The Debt," under the direction of Frank Powell. All Mutual Exchanges are prepared to accept bookings on the entire Rambeau-Mutual series.

MANY MUTUAL SERIALS

"A Lass of the Lumberlands," the Sequel to "The Diamond from the Sky," "Fantomas," "The Vampires," and "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters."

ARE NOW AVAILABLE

Seven serials of tremendous drawing power are now available at all Mutual Film Exchanges. All of them are demonstrated successes—pictures with which exhibitors have actually "stood 'em up" for night after night. In fact, many theatres which have shown them once are placing repeat bookings, thus attracting many patrons who may have missed the first showing. Such continued photoplays as "The Girl and the Game," featuring Helen Holmes; the Sequel to "The Diamond from the Sky," featuring William Russell and Charlotte Burton; "A Lass of the Lumberlands," featuring Helen Holmes; "The Secret of the Submarine," featuring Juanita Hanson and Thomas Chatterton; "Fantomas" and "The Vampires," both from the house of Gaumont; and "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters," featuring Earl Metcalfe, Helen Greene and Zena Keefe, are available now at all Mutual Exchanges. If you haven't already shown them, you have overlooked one of the biggest opportunities of the day.

Chaplin Starts On Next Laughmaker

Charlie Chaplin and his fellow players have begun work on the newest of Mutual-Chaplin Specials. It is entitled "The Cure." The very title suggests numerous bits of comedy "business" exactly suited to the inimitable Chaplin. Release date will be announced shortly.

MUTUAL FEATURE FOR THIS WEEK IS "THE GIRL FROM RECTOR'S"

AS THE five reel Mutual Star Production for release this week, one of Broadway's most successful plays will be presented in film form. It is "The Girl From Rector's," Paul Potter's famous story of the bright lights. This production, on the speaking stage, was a tremendous success. It is known from coast to coast. Hundreds of thousands have seen it. Now, in film form, it will attract still other hundreds of thousands. The mere announcement that "The Girl From Rector's" is showing at a certain theatre should attract immense audiences.

Sparkles With Life.

The film version is as lively as was the stage production. It sparkles with life. The gay cafes of Broadway are shown in all their glitter. Hosts of pretty girls, fascinating dancers, clever cabaret artists are seen just as they appear on the "Gay White Way." Flashing eyes, roguish smiles, fluffy lingerie, "register" on the film just as perfectly as you could see them in real life at any one of a score of gay cafes. By showing "The Girl From Rector's" you can bring Broadway with all its mirth and gaiety, its reckless revelry and "don't-care-what-happens" atmosphere to your town.

Stars Ruth MacTammany.

Ruth MacTammany, the celebrated comedienne, is the featured star of "The Girl From Rector's." She gets everything possible out of the leading role, and all the glitter and glamour of Broadway will be experienced by every audience which witnesses it. It starts with a zip and ends with a whizz. It is full of "pep," snap and ginger and moves at express train speed from the first title to the last "fadeout." Bookings can be made now at all Mutual Exchanges.

Gaumont Scores Scoop With Cuban Pictures

Gaumont cameramen again proved their alertness last week in providing for the Mutual Weekly close-ups of the various Cuban officials who were mentioned in the daily newspaper accounts of the revolution in that island. Exhibitors showing Mutual Weekly No. 112 were showing the actual pictures of places and people mentioned in the morning's newspaper of the same day. Bookings on this weekly topical are increasing daily. Mutual Weekly gets the live news first. It is becoming quite the common thing for the Mutual Weekly to contain in each issue from one to a half dozen scoops in picture form.

MARY MILES MINTER

In a New Series of
MINTER-MUTUAL PHOTOPlays

This announces the coming of a new series of de luxe photodramas featuring the charming star—Mary Miles Minter. These productions will constitute the second series of Minter-Mutual Photoplays produced by the American Film Company, Inc., at its Santa Barbara Studios.

The first series of six Minter-Mutual Photoplays now playing throughout America, has unquestionably established the high quality and exceptional box-office value of these American Film Company attractions.

Now we announce a new series of productions featuring popular Mary Miles Minter. The first two plays of the new series are:

"Environment" - by James Kirkwood
"Annie for Spite" - by Fred Jackson

Titles of other productions in the series together with release dates, will be announced shortly. These productions are made under the direction of James Kirkwood. For bookings on both series of Minter-Mutual Photoplays exhibitors are requested to communicate with Mutual Exchanges.

15 Thrilling Chapters

STARTLING — spectacular — sensational — are the incidents depicted in each chapter of the new Helen Holmes railroad novel—"The Railroad Raiders." It's in fifteen chapters—each jammed with thrills and dramatic climaxes. It's the most costly—most stupendous serial photoplay presented this year. It's the third big Helen Holmes success! You remember "The Girl and the Game" and "A Lass of the Lumberlands." "The Railroad Raiders" is a story that moves with the speed of an express train on a downgrade. It's full of action — punch — thrills! Based on real incidents in railroad life—backed by a tremendous national advertising campaign—this remarkable new serial offers exhibitors the best box-office magnet in years. The release date will be announced soon. Reservations for "The Railroad Raiders" are now being made at all Mutual Exchanges.

RELEASED MARCH 4th

FEATURING PADDY McQUIRE

Here is a Vogue Comedy that fittingly illustrates Vogue's slogan, "Slapstick With a Reason." It is uproariously funny. It is the kind of a picture that will keep any audience laughing from start to finish—and yet every bit of slapstick—every comical bit of "business" is justified by the story itself—not dragged in solely for the purpose of getting a laugh. It's a story of moonshiners in the mountains and contains some beautiful exteriors. Directed by James D. Davis. Bookings now at All Mutual Exchanges.

Export Buyers

The foreign sales of the Chaplin-Mutual Series have invariably brought the most extraordinary prices ever heard of or dreamed of in the film world.

But the business done with these wonderful pictures has exceeded even the fondest hopes of the buyers who "risked" such huge sums of money for the rights.

The Chaplin-Mutual Series has been advertised and exploited in every corner of the globe in a manner so magnificent as to give unlimited possibilities for money making to the buyer who has the wisdom to adapt it to the methods of his own country.

The Chaplin-Mutual Series is a wedge with which a film man can force his way into the market anywhere on earth. A few territories are still open— but negotiations are under way everywhere, so instant action is necessary if you want to take a crack at them. Phone or wire me at once.

I have also the finest and most select line of new features, one and two reel comedies—specials or regular releases—for export. This is my specialty. I have no second hand film but can save you time and anxiety if you are looking for selected high class pictures.

D. W. GRIFFITH

FROM COAST TO COAST AMERICA'S LEADING CRITICS HAVE PENNED THE MOST GLOWING TRIBUTES OF PRAISE ABOUT "INTOLERANCE" AND ITS CREATOR

¶ "The artist who can evoke from the cold pages of history visions of ancient Babylon in its ascendant hour and of the imperial city of antiquity in the mighty pathos of its downfall is nothing less than a genius. Imagination on the dramatic stage has never dared so stupendous a task. The spectacle is one which stirs the imagination, attacks the emotions, and staggers the eye; exceeds any previous accomplishment of the stage or screen."

LOUIS V. DE FOE, IN NEW YORK WORLD.

¶ "Greater in all respects than anything which has yet been accomplished. Its sheer beauty cannot be surpassed."

THE PHILADELPHIA PUBLIC LEDGER.

CHARLES DARNTON, IN NEW YORK EVENING WORLD.

DOROTHY DIX, IN NEW YORK JOURNAL.

¶ "It discounts all else the theatre has known. The master remains the master. He is the great empire builder in the new world of imaginative art. The spectacular wonders are blinding in their magnificence. His new picture is a colossal achievement, far greater in scope and daring than the 'Birth of a Nation.'"

O. L. HALL, IN CHICAGO JOURNAL.

¶ "It is superhuman and the biggest show in the world. The basal attraction of woman never was staged as Griffith stages it. Instead of imitating my theatre, my drama, he invented one of his own. So did Wagner. But all the sacred junk of Bayreuth is not the price of a gallery seat for 'INTOLERANCE.'"

ASHTON STEVENS, IN CHICAGO EXAMINER.

¶ "Daring imagination of Griffith soars to riotous limits."

WALTER ANTHONY, IN SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE.

¶ "I sat spellbound and amazed at Griffith's superb allegory. He builds up down-fallen kingdoms, opens up old wars, blasts monarchies, strikes to the heart of things with a two-edge sword and is as myriad minded, as many sided and incomprehensibly capable as Shakespeare."

AMY LESLIE, IN CHICAGO NEWS.

¶ "The greatest achievement of the superman of the movies."

CURRENT OPINION.

¶ "There is but one Griffith—a giant among an assorted group of pigmies in the breadth of his vision and the artistic scope of his ambition."

BURNS MANTLE, IN NEW YORK MAIL.

¶ "It is more torridly dramatic than any spectacle Nero ever staged in the Coliseum."

OTHEMAN STEVENS, IN LOS ANGELES EXAMINER.

¶ "To clothe in suitable language a word descriptive of 'Intolerance' seems almost a superhuman task. . . . A riot of inspiration."

LOUELLA O. PARSONS, IN CHICAGO HERALD.

"Little Lost Sister"

How can we reclaim Little Lost Sisters? Why do girls stray from the straight and narrow way? This Selig drama presents a problem centuries old—yet a problem ever new. Every mother should insist that her daughters see "Little Lost Sister." A thrilling drama, which is a picturization of Virginia Brooks' world-famous story. Coming March 12th, in K. E. S. E. service.

"The Heart of Texas Ryan"

Reviewers for trade journals are unanimous in pronouncing this drama of the Texas Borderland one of the best Western plays since "The Country That God Forgot." One of the best casts ever presented in a five part drama includes BESSIE EYTON, GEORGE FAWCETT and FRANK CAMPEAU. Take our advice, have your nearest K. E. S. E. Exchange to show the drama to you.

"The Princess of Patches"

Frankly, a melodrama of the "Old School," and frankly, something that has long been desired by Exhibitors. There's a gripping story, a lot of action, some beautiful scenery of the Southland, and an exceptional cast, including VIVIAN REED and CHARLES LE MOYNE. They are all hooking "The Princess of Patches" and making money!

Book "The Rosary" and Cash In

During the Lenten Season hook Selig's "The Rosary" and cash in. A thrilling drama in seven reels, with KATHLYN WILLIAMS, WHEELER OAKMAN, EUGENIE BESSERER and others. A fine line of publicity material, including one, three, six and twenty-four sheets in five colors and also window cards.

Everybody knows "Dimples"—the winsome laughing lady with Nature's beauty spots in her cheeks. She won her laurels as the star in big productions; now she appears in sparkling two-reel comedies for General Film. The latest of these is

"DIMPLES THE DIPLOMAT"

"Dimples" is surely some bright little diplomat in this picture. She straightens out the kinks and tangles in an unhappy family, saves it from financial ruin, cures a riotous youth of the drink habit, and marries him—all in two mirthful reels.

A corking story packed into 30 minutes of honest-to-goodness comedy—30 minutes of solid enjoyment revolving around the compelling charms and distracting dimples of Lillian Walker.

Story of the Beginning

The Inception and Development of a Great Purpose in Modern Trade Journalism—Its Accomplishment Against Many Difficulties—Men Who Have Contributed to the Ultimate Success

By JAMES L. HOFF

WHEN some inquisitive psychologist strays into the byway of trade journalism he will discover the evident truth that each successful trade publication has been built upon the idea of one man and that the measure of its success has been according to the force, the determination behind that idea. He will discover also that success has sprung from most humble beginnings, has been nurtured by infinite toil, that its path has been no royal road, but beset with many pitfalls and stumbling blocks; that the Man with the Idea passed through the Valley of the Shadow before he came to the Delectable Mountains.

It is not the intention of the writer to take from the psychologist even the smallest portion of his task. To him shall be left all the nice questions of the whys and wherefores of the trade paper that we may have space to tell about the beginnings of this one particular example of the species—the MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

As most of its readers know, it was founded by the late James P. Chalmers, Jr., and its first number bears the date March 7, 1907. It was a considerable undertaking in more than one way. The motion picture had few followers in those days; almost no one took it seriously as an industry or as an art. It was a "fad"—a passing amusement like a Ferris Wheel or a "Shoot-the-chutes," and men with money to invest were less likely to lend it their aid than they were to back any of the hundred other and better known devices to amuse the public. Thus it was left to a man of limited resources to make the venture, for it was a venture to start a trade paper under such conditions.

Then came the matter of securing competent writers.

Up to the time of the founding of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD the motion picture had almost no literature. What had been written related mainly to the mechanics of the business. Criticism and critics were practically unknown, and few writers of ability had knowledge of any phase of the business. Hence writers had to be educated.

With the trade paper, as with all forms of journalism, the revenue is derived from its advertising patronage, but at the time the MOVING PICTURE WORLD was started there were few systematic advertisers and less who had faith in the independent trade paper. Publications devoted to general amusements, though yielding but little space to the news of the new trade, were the most popular mediums of publicity, so that the question of probable income was extremely problematical.

Under these conditions a motion picture trade paper came under the head of extra hazardous investments, to venture into which meant taking a long chance. It must be remembered that there was no way of measuring that chance. True, there was a publication known as Views and Films Index being issued at the time which had the semblance of a trade paper, but it was owned by the members of the Vitagraph Company, Messrs. Rock, Smith and Blackton, in conjunction with J. A. Berst, then American representative of Pathe, and was used mainly for the exploitation of their own pictures, but carried some miscellaneous advertising. The owners paid its deficits and charged up the loss to advertising. If anything, the existence of this house organ was a detriment to an independent publication.

THE LATE JAMES P. CHALMERS, JR.
Founder of The Moving Picture World.

World's Founder Believed in Industry's Future.

But the founder of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD was something of a pioneer with a long sight into the future and willing to back his belief in that future with all the force and determination that marked his character, together with what financial resources were at his command.

We will not attempt to enumerate the endless sacrifices, the unceasing labor and the continued discouragements. Only those who have gone through the grind of building a new publication can have the least appreciation of what it means. Lack of working capital made the task doubly hard in this case, but the founder set his goal and drove steadily toward it. This was the declaration of purpose printed in the first number:

It is our intention to give the best, and only the best, news concerning the film industry, describing briefly each new film as it is produced, taking note of its quality and giving an unbiased opinion of its merits or demerits.

It is doubtful if the members of the motion picture trade gave much thought to the significance of this utterance at the time it was printed, but as the new trade paper progressed the fact became more and more apparent that the founder really meant what he said. It is that declaration of principles that has been the keynote of the success of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. It is a definite statement of a high purpose—a purpose that has been uniformly adhered to regardless of its effect upon advertising patronage; it is a purpose that has established the MOVING PICTURE WORLD firmly among its readers as an unbiased and reliable medium.

There were times during the early days of the paper's existence when the temptation to deviate from that declaration was strong; to do so meant many thousands of dollars in advertising patronage. But "independence" was the watchword and "unbiased opinions" meant, in the judgment of the founder, more to the makers of motion pictures than flattery and misrepresentation, so the offers of subsidy were turned down and the struggle continued.

That the course taken by James P. Chalmers, Jr., during those lean and strenuous years was right has been amply—yes, bountifully—justified.

Where the Moving Picture World Started.

In a very small office at 361 Broadway, New York City, then occupied by James P. Chalmers, Jr., as editor of Camera and Dark Room, a photographic publication, the plans for the MOVING PICTURE WORLD were first put into effect. By reason of his connection with Camera and Dark Room and through a strong liking for things photographic, Chalmers became strongly impressed with the possibilities of a motion picture trade journal. About this time, late in 1906, he met Alfred H. Saunders, formerly editor of the Views and Films Index, the house organ previously mentioned. Saunders had quite some knowledge of motion pictures and was anxious to continue the work he had been doing on the Index. An arrangement was made by which Saunders was to take editorial charge of the new publication, plans to launch the venture were framed, and the first numbers of the paper issued.

At this time the staff of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD consisted of the founder, who gave his attention to the business end; Mr. Saunders, the editor, and John A. Archer, circulation manager, bookkeeper, stenographer, and general office assistant. Mr. Archer is still a member of the staff and has the honor of being the oldest employe in point of service. Soon after the staff was reinforced by Dennis J. Shea, who assisted with the various office details, and is still with the publication as its circulation manager, second in point of service.

As the trade began to develop more help was needed to cover the field. This need brought G. P. von Harleman to the staff in 1908 as an advertising solicitor. "Von," as he is known to his friends in the trade, afterward became Chicago representative and is now at Los Angeles, Cal., as the Coast representative of the paper.

Differences of opinion as to policy arose between Mr. Chalmers and his editor, Mr. Saunders, early in 1908 and culminated in Mr. Saunders leaving the MOVING PICTURE WORLD in April, 1908, to start a venture of his own.

By this time the "hallroom" at 361 Broadway became too small for the business and new quarters were secured in the Beach building, at 125 East Twenty-third street, where room for expansion was available. These quarters were retained until November, 1912, when the present offices at 17 Madison avenue were taken.

After Mr. Saunders left the MOVING PICTURE WORLD the founder took full editorial charge of the publication, laboring almost unceasingly. Few men could have stood the strain, but Chalmers had back of him a long line of sturdy Scotch forbears and could take physical punishment in generous quantities. Week after week he wrote practically everything that went into the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and then worked over the mechanical details at the printing office, for he was a practical printer, away into the small hours of the morning. By such measures of economy he was able to tide over the period of financial difficulties that beset him during the earlier days of the paper's existence.

Such determination was bound to bring its reward. The growth of the paper and a steady increase of advertising patronage soon enabled him to add to his staff of assistants. In the business department he tried out a number of advertising solicitors, with the result that Archie MacArthur became, in 1909, a permanent member of the staff. Archie grew up with the business and is the very capable advertising manager today.

Then editors came along. There was Hanford C. Judson, Thomas Bedding, at one time editor of the British Photographic Journal and a Fellow of the Royal Photographic Society of Great Britain; Hugh Hoffman and W. Stephen Bush. Of these Hanford C. Judson only remains, and he is doing excellent work conducting the correspondence department, published under the general heading of "Trade News of the Week."

The paper has also profited by the services of a number of contributing editors. Of these there still remains Louis Reeves Harrison, writer of editorials, and probably the keenest critic of motion picture plays of the day. Mr. Harrison's opinions are eagerly sought by producers and exhibitors and his judgment of photoplay construction is seldom at fault. He has also enriched the literature of the art by publishing "Screencraft," a treatise on the photoplay. Rev. W. H. Jackson has long been interested in the educational phase of motion picture production and has contributed much that is informing and interesting on that topic. Great interest has also been taken in the Projection Department, which was started in 1910 under the direction of F. H. Richardson, who has made a thorough study of the various questions affecting the projection of motion pictures on the screen and is the author of Richardson's Handbook, now in its third edition and generally accepted as the only guide on the important trade subject of motion picture projection.

The late John H. Bradlet was one of the early contributors and represented the paper on the road. Clarence E. Sinn has conducted the "Music for the Picture" department for a long time and was one of the first to give that subject attention. The latest department to be added to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD is that of "Motion Picture Photography," which is conducted by Carl Louis Gregory, a man of wide experience in photography.

World Takes Over the Film Index.

Probably the most important step taken by the founder of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD was the purchase from the several members of the licensed group of motion picture manufacturers, as those who produced under license from the Motion Picture Patents Company were called, of the Film Index, the house organ of that group. This purchase was negotiated during the latter part of June, 1911, thereby bringing to the support of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD the advertising patronage of ten different concerns and placing the only independent journal of the trade in undisputed possession of the field. From that time there was no question as to the success of the WORLD.

The acquisition of the Film Index also brought to the staff of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD Epes Winthrop Sargent, whose departments, "Advertising for the Exhibitor" and "The Photoplayright," are considered of great value to those respective branches of the picture business. Mr. Sargent is author of "Technique of the Photoplay," acknowledged to be the best publication of its kind and in its third edition, and of "Picture Theater Advertising," the only work treating of that subject. There also came, through the same transaction, James S. McQuade, who was Chicago correspondent of the Index and who has since the merger remained in the same capacity for the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. The writer of this article likewise joined the WORLD staff on this occasion, and the business department gained a bookkeeper in Luther J. Reynolds.

Since that time several important additions to the editorial staff have been made. George Blaisdell joined it in May, 1912; Robert L. McElravy in 1912, Randall M. White in 1914, since transferred to the advertising department; E. T. Keyser in 1914, Margaret I. MacDonald in 1915, Edward Weitzel in 1915, Ben H. Grimm in 1916, C. S. Sewell in 1916, and last but not least, Sam Spedon, who came with the new year, 1917.

The persons named constitute the editorial staff as now constituted. Mention should be made of Harry De Long, who died in 1915 after something more than a year's service, and of Lynde Denig, who came in 1915, and resigned during the latter part of 1916 to take the position of editor of the Dramatic Mirror.

Personnel of the Business Force.

For a long time the business department of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD was, figuratively, if not literally, in the founder's hat. Few records were kept because no one had time to keep them, and the safest place for the cash, when there was any cash, was in the boss's pocket. But the business affairs of the growing publication soon became too important for such primitive methods, and the first regular cashier and bookkeeper was in the person of John Wylie, now general manager of the company. Mr. Wylie had his own troubles in bringing system out of the chaos that was the natural result of one man's attempt to conduct all branches of a business of such increasing importance, but it was accomplished. As the business grew the office force increased in numbers. Actively engaged now besides the general manager are John F. Chalmers, vice-president; E. J. Chalmers, secretary and treasurer; Dennis J. Shea, circulation manager; Luther J. Reynolds, bookkeeper; William Bauer, Aldo Tassi and Walter Bohan, office assistants; Florence Hansen, Catherine Carmody, Grace Bredello and Julia Downey, stenographers.

In the advertising department A. MacArthur is manager; Randall M. White, assistant; Wendel P. Milligan, solicitor, with two good copy chasers in John Bell and Gus Fausel.

An office is maintained in Chicago under the direction of Paul C. Hinz, who joined the staff in 1912, and James S. McQuade, with Bessie Pohn, stenographer, and at Los Angeles, where G. P. von Harleman presides.

Add to this staff of the combined departments of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD the thirty or more correspondents, whose budgets of news each week form a very interesting and instructive department of the paper, and you have some idea of the importance and the magnitude of the institution that has grown with the motion picture trade from the humble beginning in the little room at 361 Broadway.

The Founder's Untimely Death.

Who shall say that it was not an unkind Fate that snatched the cup of success from the lips of the founder of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD just as he was about to drink of its delights. Yet did Fate step in at that moment and with relentless hand remove from this life James P. Chalmers, Jr., at the very time when he could say that his dream had come true. Many will recall with regret the fatal accident at Dayton, Ohio, where he had gone to attend a meeting of exhibitors. March 27, 1912, is a date that will not soon be forgotten. It is the one dark day in the history of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, and the trade then lost a man who would have gone far and reached high in its councils.

But the foundation upon which he builded was rock steady and secure. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD—the creature of his brain and brawn—has lived on to greater success, much, we believe, as he would have had it succeed had he been spared to direct it with living hand.

What the World's Initial Number Contained

Resume of the Text and Advertisements of the First Issue—All in Sixteen Pages.

THE first issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD was in sixteen pages. It was dated March 9, 1907.

The full title was "The Moving Picture World and View Photographer.—The only independent weekly journal published in the interests of manufacturers and operators of animated photographs and cinematograph projection, illustrated songs and lantern lectures and lantern slide makers. Published by the World Photographic Publishing Company, 361 Broadway, New York City." The price was 5 cents a copy, or $2 a year. There are three and a half pages of advertising. Miles Brothers, of 10 East 14th street, New York, and 790 Turk street, San Francisco, occupy one page of space. The American Mutoscope and Biograph Company, 11 East 14th street, and Nicholas Power, 115-117 Nassau street, each have a half page.

The leading editorial article sets forth that the WORLD will be the first trade journal in the motion picture field independent of any manufacturing domination. It is declared that "it is our intention to give the best, and only the best, news concerning the film industry, describing briefly each new film as it is produced, taking note of its quality, and giving an unbiased opinion of its merits or demerits."

On the fourth page there is a summary of the decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, whereby an end is reached to long-continued litigation between the Edison and Biograph companies over camera patents. Charles K. Harris writes a page and a half on "Illustrating Song Slides." This will have a reminiscent flavor to old-timers, who will recall the now-forgotten film-interspersing vocal entertainment—that is, sometimes there was entertainment and yet again sometimes there was not. Much depended upon the voice of the singer. The passing of illustrated songs was coincidental with the improvement in pictures.

Several pages are devoted to notes of the trade. There are summaries of but two pictures. The first of these is "Robert Macaire and Bertrand," a Melies subject, consisting of a series of twenty-five scenes illustrating the antics of two French sneak thieves and hoboes. The second is "Fights of Nations," a Biograph film, divided into six sections.

Lewis M. Swaab in a letter expresses the opinion that the publication of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD will fill "a long-felt want," and calls attention to the fact that the much-needed medium must be absolutely fearless and independent. "An Operator Who Runs His Own Show" makes a plea for fair treatment of the men who project the pictures. "G.," in a letter to the editor, comes out strongly for an operators' school, so that certificates might be issued to qualified men, for an Operators' Bureau, for the mutual convenience of those seeking employees and for those out of employment. He also states he is willing to join with the editor in organizing an operators' league and securing proper legislation in New York State. The writer, speaking with an experience of eight years, tells why operators should be organized. He makes his argument under four heads—for their own protection, for mutual advantage, for instruction, and for standing. He emphasizes the statement that in Massachusetts the Legislature has given such authority to the district police that "No operator can give an exhibition with a moving picture machine without a license." He asks: "Why should the New York Legislature delay regulation until some awful disaster emphasizes the importance of such a measure?"

A page is devoted to "The Buyers' Guide." Firms are listed under the heads of "Films," subdivided into "Manufacturers," "Dealers," and "Renters"; "Stereopticons," "Moving Picture Machines," "Song Slides" and "Calcium and Electric Light." Under the caption of "Manufacturers" are listed American Biograph Company, American Vitagraph Company, Edison Manufacturing Company, S. Lubin, Miles Brothers and Selig Polyscope Company. "Lantern Slide Reviews" occupy one page.

Among other advertisers are Lewis M. Swaab of Philadelphia, D. W. Roberston, "pioneer in moving picture entertainments"; T. J. Harbach & Co., films, Philadelphia; De Witt C. Wheeler, song slides; Alfred Simpson, New York, song slides; Scott & Van Altna, New York, song slides; Boswell Manufacturing Company, Chicago, supplies; C. B. Kleine, New York, supplies, and Pioneer Stereopticon Company, New York.

Twelve thousand copies of the first issue were printed. A week later there was none on hand. The present issue of the Moving Picture World may serve as an example of what has developed from the seed then sown.

Looking Over the Files of the World By George Blaisdell

Brief Summary of Some of the Principal Incidents in the Career of a New Industry

TEN years is a short time in the life of the average nation and the average industry. Ten years represents today practically one-half of the life of the motion picture industry, which neither in its life nor in its development can be classed as an average industry. One decade, the past decade, has seen motion pictures grow from an amusement for the comparative few to one for the millions; from the store show to the great theater; from a "program" of one or two reels of "action" in its most primitive sense to one of six or seven or eight or more reels; from a series of more or less connected jumpy, animated pictures to a coherent, restrained dramatic production of the first order; from a sheet of canvas wafted by vagrant zephyrs and incipient gales to a rigid yet soft and luminous vehicle for the reflection of the glories of nature and of man; from surroundings lacking every essential of comfort and utility to houses equipped with all known devices for the safety and convenience of patrons and so adorned as to appeal to the artistic sense; from the occasional and sometimes indifferent piano to the great organ and large orchestra of skilled musicians. In short, there has been a transformation.

The foregoing comparisons, though strong, will be recognized by those having knowledge of conditions ten years ago as being not overdrawn, as reflecting what has been accomplished in a period which bids fair to stand in the history of motion pictures as its great period. None but a bold man or a "rash, intruding fool" will in these modern days enter upon idle prophecy; yet it is inconceivable that any future decade holds for the motion picture possibilities for such a marked advance as we have witnessed in the preceding ten years.

In 1907 the motion picture was looked upon by many as a passing fancy, a "craze" that was doomed as surely as had been that of the bicycle or the roller skate. In 1917 the motion picture is recognized as a potential force in human affairs. No more do we hear "ephemeral" applied to it. That term of near reproach is now of the past. The immediate question is "What next?" The general question is "To what lengths will the motion picture ultimately go?"

In 1907 the money invested in motion picture ventures was in an industrial way negligible; comparatively speaking, it might have been counted in the hundreds of thousands. In 1917 we hear uttered outside of the trade as well as in it the large statement that the industry ranks fifth in the United States; be that as it may, there is no question that from hundreds of thousands invested by producers, distributors, exhibitors and equipment manufacturers the sum has expanded to hundreds of millions. In 1907 the taxlayer, the law-maker, was not paying any attention to the motion picture. Today there are those who think this inquisitive representative of the people is paying altogether too much attention to it.

If there has been one outstanding factor in the expansion of the industry it has been the inability of any one man or group of men to make it "stay put." Events have crowded fast. It has been a rare week when there was not "something in the air." There has been much uncertainty as to what the next day or month or year would bring forth, many attempts to feel the pulse of the trade and of the people as to what was wanted. There have been organization and reorganization; there have been mistakes and also there have been achievements. The history of ten years is that of a restless, crowding mass; there have been earnest search for constructive leadership, sincere effort for stabilization. Notable progress has been made; far more so in a business way than in a political. Able men there are in the industry, and they will find the path.

Joseph Jefferson a Screen Artist.

It is a general impression in the trade that the accession to the screen of the famous stage artist is a matter of recent happening. In the MOVING PICTURE WORLD for September 5, 1914, Frank J. Marion, president of the Kalem company, recalls to mind the fact that in 1896 Joseph Jefferson portrayed the title role of "Rip Van Winkle" before a Biograph camera; that in this picture, staged twenty-one years ago, in the scene where Rip delivers his famous toast, Mr. Jefferson appeared in a "close-up," which well may have been the first time in which this most useful dramatic accelerator was used. Mr. Marion, who joined the Biograph forces in 1898 and remained with them for nearly ten years, also calls attention to the fact that among other celebrities who appeared before the Biograph camera in the nineties were the late Marshall P. Wilder, who years later was to be seen in Vitagraph comedies, and Anna Held, who not so many months ago came back to the screen in a Paramount subject. The noted stage players who at the present time have not been seen on the screen can be counted on a few hands.

The Manufacturers of 1907.

As pointed out in another article in this issue, the American firms listed as picture makers at the time of the birth of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD were Biograph, Vitagraph, Edison, Lubin, Miles Brothers and Selig. A list today of all the manufacturers of motion pictures would be a long one. And unquestionably its size has been materially lessened by the conflict which for more than two and a half years has raged on the other side of the water. The locations of these early firms were New York, Chicago and Philadelphia. Today the making of pictures is centered about Los Angeles and New York; Jacksonville has several studios, and one large manufacturer adheres to Chicago.

Some of the Decade's Principal Happenings.

Ten years ago one of the conditions causing apprehension among exhibitors was the danger of fire, due to the lack of safety appliances that gradually have come to be thrown about the projection of pictures. One of the first news items noted in the MOVING PICTURE

Edison Studio, Bedford Park, N. Y. Built 1907.

WORLD described how the New York Board of Electricity had closed forty shows on account of fire danger. The near archaic scheme of permitting the projected film to escape into a bag instead of into a metal magazine had not been entirely abolished. A compromise was effected by issuing permits for thirty days' grace in order that exhibitors might make alterations. The health and police departments also co-operated in an effort to put out of business those owners of penny arcades who failed to comply with existing regulations.

Before May 1, 1907, there were added to the World's release list Hale Tour Films, Kleine Optical Company, Melies, Pathe, Urban Trading Company, Urban Eclipse, Gaumont and Williams, Browne & Earle. The length of subjects ranged from one to seven or eight hundred feet. One film, that of the O'Brien-Burns fight, was listed as of 8,000 feet.

Early in June came the announcement of the formation of the Kalem company. The organizers were George Kleine, Samuel Long and Frank J. Marion. The office and plant were at 131 West Twenty-fourth street. On June 15 the first Kalem subject was added to the release list. On July 27 was advertised the first subject of Essanay, the trade name representing the two members of the firm, George K. Spoor and G. M. Anderson. The length was 614 feet and the title was "An Awful Skate; or, the Hobo on Rollers."

That the business of showing pictures was not an "infant industry" in New York in this year is indicated by the estimate of a statistician who insisted that in the metropolis there was invested by exhibitors the sum of $7,000,000. The same writer pointed out that a good business man could establish a picture show in a town of 15,000 population and make money.

Among the news items noted in the remainder of the year were of the entrance into the American market of the products of the Society Italian Cines, the incorporation of the Nicholas Power Company for $250,000, addition of "Goodfellow" and "Actograph" to film releases, the arrest of a theater man in Brooklyn for showing pictures Sunday, and a declaration by Judge Aspinall of that borough that he took sides with the picture men, saying further he had decided views as to the action of the police in interfering with the shows, provided they were conducted with due regard to cleanliness and health.

Film Men Get Together.

In November there was published a call for a meeting to be held in Pittsburgh on the 16th and 17th, to discuss matters of vital importance and looking to the regulation of existing business conditions. The signatories were Biograph, Essanay, Kleine Optical Company, Kalem, Lubin, George Melies, Pathe Freres, Cines, Selig, Vitagraph and Williams, Browne & Earle. The result was the organization of the United Film Service Protective Association and the payment into the treasury of $2,000. William H. Swanson was elected temporary chairman. An adjourned meeting was held in Chicago, December 14, at which the following officers were chosen:

President, J. S. Clark, Pittsburgh Calcium Light Company; vice-president, Fred C. Aiken, Theater Film Service Company, Chicago; treasurer, Percy L. Waters, Kinetograph Company, New York; executive committee, C. H. Peckham, Cleveland Film Renting Company, and Frank J. Howard, Boston.

At the end of the year there was held in New York, in the Miles Brothers Building, a meeting of exhibitors "to perfect an organization for the securing first and foremost of Sunday opening in Greater New York."

Fifty-five applications were received for membership in the Moving Picture Association. The following Sunday forty exhibitors were arrested. The agitation extended all over New York State.

On April 4, 1908, the Biograph Association of Licensees, operating under the Biograph patents, advertised the offering of "a complete and regular supply of films of domestic and foreign manufacture through the following well-known agencies": Kleine Optical Company, Italian Cines, Williams, Browne & Earle, American Mutoscope and Biograph Company, and Great Northern Film Company. A dozen foreign manufacturers were listed in addition to those composing the association. "A regular weekly supply of films of from twelve to twenty reels of splendid new subjects is now available," was stated. "Films are sold outright without restrictions," the advertisement continued. "All renters and users of films purchased from any of the above licensees are guaranteed absolute protection, free of cost from any form of patent persecution, and are privileged to use such films upon projection machines covered by the loop patent of Latham."

There Were Classics Back in 1908.

On October 3 of this year, the WORLD inaugurated its department of "Comments on Films." A summary of some of the subjects reviewed in that issue may have reminiscent interest today. They are "Richard III," Vitagraph; "As You Like It," Kalem; "The Devil," Edison; "The Wayward Daughter," Essanay; "The Custom Officer's Revenge," Pathe; "Samson and Delilah," Pathe; "The Wages of Sin," Vitagraph; "Old Sleuth," Kalem.

November 14, for the first time, the list of releases in the WORLD was divided between the Edison licensees and Biograph licensees. Those in the former category were Essanay, Selig, Melies, Pathe, Vitagraph, Lubin and Kalem.

December 19 the WORLD printed a picture of the Kalem company in Jacksonville, Fla.

On December 28 came the announcement of the formation of the Motion Picture Patents Company. The members were Edison, Biograph, Pathe, Melies, Selig, Vitagraph, Kalem, Essanay, Kleine and Lubin. The officers, the president and secretary of which were taken from the Edison group, and the vice-president and treasurer of which were selected from the Biograph, were: President, Frank L. Dyer; vice-president, H. N. Marvin; treasurer, J. J. Kennedy; secretary, George F. Scull.

In January, 1909, was held the second annual meeting of the Film Service Association. William H. Swanson was elected president, Carl Laemmle vice-president, Herbert Miles secretary, and Robert Lieber treasurer. On the executive committee were A. J. Gilligham, Grand Rapids, Mich., and William Fox and William Steiner of New York. The treasury, containing $17,519.18, was liquidated, as it was decided the association in future should be more of a social than a business organization.

In the same issue was described the formation of the Independent Film Protective Association, for the purpose of taking "aggressive action to sustain the open market, and legal action against any monopoly striving to control the moving picture business." I. W. Ullman was chosen president and Ingvald C. Oes treasurer.

Enters National Board of Censorship.

In the issue of February 7, John Collier, secretary of the People's Institute, outlined a proposed censorship board. Mr. Collier stated he was acting on the request of the motion picture exhibitors of New York State, that the first meeting would be held on March 4, and that operations would begin promptly thereafter.

In April the battle between the licensed and independent groups was in full swing. In the issue of the 17th "Bill" Swanson came out with a blast to the effect that the International Projecting & Producing Company plans to spend a thousand dollars a day for new films.

In June Carl Laemmle announced his determination to become a manufacturer.

In July was held in Atlantic City the fourth semi-annual meeting of the Film Service Association. Forty-three delegates and twenty-five alternates attended. Mr. Gilligham was elected president and Mr. Steiner vice-president.

In the same month, S. S. Hutchinson disposed of his stock in the Film Service Association and acquired a half interest in the C. J. Hite Film Rental Company, the concern to be known in future as H. & H.

September 8, G. M. Anderson left Chicago for Denver, accompanied by J. J. Robins, photographer. Mr. Robins later was to be studio manager for the Chaplin-Essanay company. At the end of November, Mr. Anderson left the Colorado city for El Paso. The tour wound up in April in Santa Barbara.

On September 11 and 12 the International Moving Picture Alliance was formed in Chicago, succeeding the Independent Film Renters' Association. J. J. Murdock was elected president, J. W. Morgan vice-president, A. Kessel, Jr., treasurer, and Mr. Swanson secretary.

In the issues of the end of the year frequent reference was made to Kinemacolor. From the attention paid to the process it is apparent film men in those days expected a great deal of the company that projected pictures in color.

On December 20 was held the first annual dinner of the Motion Picture Patents Company. On behalf of those attending, J. J. Kennedy presented to Thomas A. Edison a loving cup.

In January of 1910 the motion picture operators of New York City opened headquarters at 216 East 14th street.

Edwin Thanhouser's first picture was listed for release on March 15. It was "The Actor's Children."

Organization of the Sales Company.

On May 6 in Chicago the Motion Picture Distributing & Sales Company was organized. It succeeded the National Independent Moving Pictures Alliance. Twenty-five concerns agreed to market their films through the new distributing organization. Officers elected were Mr. Laemmle, president; P. A. Powers, vice-president; Charles O. Baumann, treasurer; Herbert Miles, secretary. These, with Messrs. Steiner, Swanson and Murdock, formed the executive board.

In June, 1911, M. A. Neff of Cincinnati, president of the Ohio exhibitors, sent out a call for a convention of exhibitors, to be held in Cleveland, August 1. There had been state organizations of exhibitors prior to this, and Mr. Neff had determined the time was ripe for a national organization. Two hundred exhibitors from ten states responded to the call, and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was formed. Mr. Neff was elected president, C. M. Christensen of Cleveland, secretary, and J. J. Reider of Jackson, Mich., treasurer.

The National Board of Censorship in its first report, covering the period from June, 1909, to April, 1909, stated that films approximating in value $200,000, had been destroyed.

In October of 1911, Director Francis Boggs, who is credited with having made the first dramatic subject on the Pacific Coast, was shot and killed by a Japanese in the employ of Colonel William N. Selig. Mr. Selig also was wounded slightly at the same time.

On October 21 it was pointed out in a column article that one-third of the sixty subjects released weekly were "westerns." Complaint was made that only a few of the latter showed merit, those produced by one or two manufacturers who made a specialty of this type of picture. We may have less of the "western" picture today, but there can be no question that the features of that description are among the most popular of those on the list.

In November, Kalem sent a company of players to the Orient. The results were many subjects photographed in Egypt and later in the Holy Land "From the Manger to the Cross," in which was portrayed in authentic locations the life of the Saviour. Kalem previously had sent a company to Ireland for two succeeding years.

James S. McQuade, in a New Year's article on "The Achievements of 1911," pointed out that one of the greatest achievements of the year had been the successful introduction of more-than-one-reel film. He also made a strong plea for getting away from the five-cent admission.

In December, Photographer John C. Hemment took motion pictures from an aeroplane at Marblehead, Mass.

In February of 1912 announcement was made that Mme. Bernhardt and Mme. Rejane are to be seen on the screen, Film d'Art having produced "Camille" with the former, and "Mme. Sans Gene" with the latter.

Universal and Film Supply Organized.

In June came the split of the Sales Company and the organization of the Universal, with Charles O. Baumann as president. The brands listed for release through the latter were Imp, Nestor, Champion, Republic, Powers, Animated Weekly, Rex, Victor, Ambrosio, Republic, Itala, Gem and 101 Bison. Those listed by the Film Supply Company, of which Herbert Blache was president, were Eclair American, Comet, American, Thanhouser, Majestic, Gaumont, Reliance, Solax, Gaumont Weekly, Lux and Great Northern.

In May, John Bunny, the popular comedian of the Vitagraph company, sailed for England, accompanied by Director Lawrence Trimble. Mr. Bunny went abroad to portray scenes in the "life of Pickwick," the great Dickens character—and he succeeded most ably.

In June the New York State exhibitors were formally organized as a branch of the National League. President Neff attended. Samuel Trigger was elected first state president.

In July came the split in the Universal, Charles O. Baumann withdrawing. There were sensational doings in New York and Los Angeles, in the efforts to obtain physical possession of plants. Contemporary reports were to the effect that bullets flew around the Bison studio in Los Angeles. The controversy waxed until the latter part of October, at which time Mr. Baumann as a result of a compromise yielded the title of "Bison 101" and the New York Motion Picture Corporation inaugurated the Kay-Bee brand. On September 25 came the first Keystone release.

In August was held, at Chicago, the second annual convention of the league, President Neff being re-elected.

In the same month the Melies company started on its journey to the South Seas under the direction of Gaston Melies.

In the early part of October the Edison company, which had spent the summer in England, returned to New York. Those in the party were Marc McDermott, Director Ashley Miller, Mary Fuller and Miriam Nesbitt.

In December Mutual withdrew from the Film Supply Company and began releasing its own program, composed of Kay-Bee, Keystone, Broncho, Than-houser, American, Reliance, Majestic and Punch.

The Screen Club, which had been organized in September, opened the doors of its first clubhouse in November.

The courts decided in the same month that Edison did not control Eastman film patents.

At the end of the year came the announcement that Vitagraph was to send a company around the world.

Uncle Sam Sues Patents Company.

In January, 1913, before James R. Darling, now special foreign representative of William Fox, were begun proceedings instituted by the United States Government to dissolve the Motion Picture Patents Company.

The Famous Players, which had been organized the year previous by Adolph Zukor, Daniel Frohman and Edwin S. Porter, released "The Prisoner of Zenda," with James K. Hackett in the title role.

The third annual convention and first international exposition of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was held in the Grand Central Palace, New York, in July. President Neff was re-elected for the second time. A seceding faction organized the International Motion Picture Association, with Charles H. Phillips of Milwaukee as president.

In the same month the Universal sent an Imp company to Europe to make pictures. It was in July, too, the Patents Company reduced from $2 to 90 cents the weekly license fee paid by exhibitors. The company announced that in future the fee would be paid by the exchanges.

In September, 1913, the World Films Special Corporation was organized with E. Mandelbaum as president and Phil Gleichman as general manager.

One of the early announcements in 1914 was of the formation of the Jesse L. Lasky Company, in the organization of which Samuel Goldfish and Cecil De Mille were associated with Mr. Lasky.

On April 11 the Strand Theater was opened in New York with "The Spoilers."

In May Paramount Pictures Corporation was organized with W. W. Hodkinson as president. The contributing companies were Famous Players, Lasky and Bosworth, the latter of which had been organized a short time previously.

In June the bolting organization of the year before, the International Motion Picture Association, held its first convention and exposition in Grand Central Palace, President Phillips being re-elected.

Pathe withdrew from the General Film Company in May and opened its own exchanges.

Dayton, Ohio, was the scene of the fourth annual convention of the league. Mr. Neff withdrew his nomination as president and was succeeded by M. F. Pearce of Baltimore. Conciliation with the seceders was effected.

Board of Trade Out; N. A. M. P. I. In.

The events of the past two years and a half are so fresh in the minds of the readers of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD it is unnecessary to review them here. We have seen the rise and fall of the Board of Trade and the organization of the N. A. M. P. I. The trade has witnessed the increase of stars' salaries to figures hitherto unknown.

We have described the formation of the General Film Company, the Universal, the Mutual, the Paramount, the World, and the Pathe Exchange. Metro and Triangle and V-L-S-E were organized in 1915, and just prior to these William Fox entered the manufacturing field, with exchanges that have been established in many parts over the world. Greater Vitagraph has succeeded V-L-S-E and K-E-S-E has been established. Selznick Pictures and Art Dramas were organized in 1916. Artcraft, too, began business last year.

Of manufacturers for state's rights there are a host. Prominent among these are the W. H. Clune, Ivan, Frohman, Christie, Cardinal, Keen, Moss and Universal. Many companies have come—and gone. Many men who believed with Colonel Mulberry Sellers there were "millions in it" have discovered their mistake, have learned that money is essential in the manufacture of pictures, but that it is only the first essential; that besides a bank account there must be possessed keen amusement sense—in the first place to know what the public wants and in the second place to know how to supply that want. And there's the rub! The public is a hard taskmaster. It knows what it wants; and it will amply reward the man who sets before it what it wants—provided, of course, that the man combines business judgment with his artistic sense.

Some Notable Changes in Ten Years

THE past ten years has seen some notable changes in the motion picture business. Aside from the great improvement in the artistic phases radical changes in the manufacturing and distributing departments were continually taking place. Restricted from the beginning by camera and film patents there was a continual legal battle between the owners of those patents and those who sought to evade them.

A Federal Court decision established the priority of the Edison camera patents in 1907 and made possible the formation of the Motion Picture Patents Company in December of the following year, which, while it stabilized the business, imposed onerous license fees on manufacturers and exhibitors and encouraged many not favored with licenses to use the Edison patented devices to infringe thereon.

Then the General Film Company was organized for the purpose of controlling the distribution of pictures and brought about the almost total elimination of a hundred or more distributors who had been working independently.

Through the arbitrary and dictatorial policy pursued by the Patents Company interests the so-called "independent" manufacturers were greatly encouraged with increased patronage and made rapid gains.

Efforts made by the Patents Company to force the Fox exchange out of business brought a suit by the Government under the provisions of the Sherman Anti-Trust law, which was eventually decided against the interests combined under the Patents Company agreement. This decision, with the expiration of the Edison patents, worked a complete revolution in the business. The "independent" manufacturers came into control of the greater volume of business and several of the original Edison licenses went out of business or became moribund.

Ten Years of Film Advertising By Epes Winthrop Sargent

Marvelous Advancement Made in Publicity Work in Past Decade Largely Responsible for Growth of Business.

APPROXIMATELY ninety-five per cent. of the history of film advertising has been written in the past ten years and more than fifty per cent. of the whole in the past five. Although it is twenty years since the motion picture was brought forward as a public entertainment, it is only within the past five years that the pictures have been handled as an amusement proposition should be.

Film Advertising falls naturally into two parts, advertising to the exhibitor on the part of the manufacturer of film and the exhibitor's efforts to reach an enlarged public. The manufacturer was the first to perceive the value of printer's ink in its various forms.

Back in 1896 little or no advertising was done on behalf of the film. Later the Clipper, then the chief organ of the exhibitor of amusements, was used as a medium, and this was followed by direct appeal to the exhibitor through circulars or bulletins. It was all limited in scope and, for the greater part, rather amateurish. At the start there was not much to be advertised, to tell the truth. Production was comparatively small and decidedly irregular. The adoption of the release by dates helped somewhat to regulate advertising on the part of manufacturers, but there seemed to be small need for great endeavors. There was a demand greater than the supply, sales were good and intensive methods were not yet needed. The condition was much the same as that which confronts the pioneer farmer working the virgin soil. The rudest sort of cultivation brought rich returns. But these returns were too great to escape the observation of the speculator. Companies multiplied and in proportionately larger ratio than the demand increased. More advertising had to be done to sell the same amount of film, but this advertising was largely written by some one untrained to the work and much of it was crude, though better than nothing.

Even so late as 1909 things were dormant. The manufacturer used the trade mediums, he got out a more or less ornate bulletin, but there he stopped. He did not even realize that there was another and more productive form of advertising which has come to be known as "service." With the formation of the Motion Picture Patents Company, which controlled nearly the entire output of film, there was adopted a rule that no manufacturer should give to the exchange or exhibitor any free advertising matter of any description. Most of the units of the company went further than this and even where exhibitors were willing to pay for cuts of scenes or for still pictures from which cuts might be made, the request was looked upon as a nuisance and this service denied. It was not until 1910 or 1911 that the Edison company began to seek to accommodate the live wires with cuts, generally electros of the cuts in their publication. But one concession was made in that in 1909 arrangements were effected whereby the A. B. C. Company, of Cleveland, got out a one-sheet for each release. This paper cost fifteen cents a sheet, but even at that it represented a considerable loss to the companies since a certain edition had to be purchased outright, the stuff being sold to the exchanges or exhibitors on behalf of the manufacturer.

It was not until the advent of the multiple reel that this advertising through service really began. Here was something that could be advertised to advantage. It paid the maker to have his release boomed by the exhibitor, and there began the change that reached its climax in the present national advertising on the part of the manufacturer. Just how valuable this national advertising is to manufacturer and exhibitor is more or less a matter of personal opinion, though it would seem that the return is more general than specific. It has helped, however, to break down the barrier of the business office and to give the films their proper place in the reading pages. Ten years ago few papers mentioned the pictures, though there were a few which made a practice of writing up the pictures and then holding up some company for payment. Seven or eight years ago, for example, a New York paper sent around a page story and asked a certain company a four figure sum for its insertion. The company declined to consider the proposition. "Well, some company has got to take and pay for this," announced the advertising solicitor, and evidently "some company" did, for presently it appeared, and the contributing company was the only one mentioned in the story.

These methods do not obtain today to any marked degree. Public interest in the pictures is too great to permit them to be ignored, and the house advertising satisfies the hungriest business office, but the manufacturer contributes indirectly to this work a greater sum weekly than he was occasionally asked to pay some paper. Also he gets more for it.

Perhaps no greater contrast may be found than to compare the work ten years ago with that of today. Then the advertising man—where there was any—was generally the editor as well. He looked after the scripts and advertising, and still had a little spare time. One company, for example, demanded each week copy for a quarter-page advertisement in one paper and a half page in another. Twice a month a sixteen-page bulletin of releases was got out and each week three or four squibs were sent out to the trade papers. One or possibly two cuts had to be made for each one-reel subject, and later the editor also sent out the still pictures to the lithographer. That was all that was done or could be done. Today the large organizations have extensive staffs of writers. Not all of them are good, perhaps, but they help to keep up the high cost of white paper. In addition to preparing advertising copy the press room supplies weekly several thousand words of press stuff, ranging from three lines to several typewritten pages. Cuts of one and sometimes two screens are prepared, often more than one cut of a subject and in one, two and three column measures. Ready-set advertisements are prepared and often may be had in matrix form for inexpensive mailing. There are elaborate special stories of each release and the usual synopsis, and there is paper of all sizes as well as a stock of portrait cuts and postcards.

It is in the serial, however, that the greatest advancement is shown. For these most companies now prepare elaborate campaign books. These may list a hundred or more sheets of paper, ranging from the half sheet to twenty-eights. There will be a careful teaser and follow-up campaign planned out, a series of stunt suggestions, perhaps a number of novelty advertisements, such as buttons, pins, pennants, puzzles and the like, from fifteen to fifty cuts ranging from thumbnail to half page layouts, copy for advertising for each installment and special press stories for the preliminary campaign and each chapter. Advertising novelties and paper and cuts are supplied about at cost. The rest is all free, and yet three or four years ago the first suit of press stuff for a feature brought five dollars for about twenty typewritten pages—and was worth it. Today the campaign book is free and is frequently backed up by elaborate newspaper campaigns, the most ambitious and unique being the recent Pathe campaign, though the most persistent advertising is that done in the Hearst newspapers for the International pictures. The Universal has got out a number of remarkable books and Bluebird issues a four page sheet for each release that gives the exhibitor all he needs in the way of publicity material. All he has to have is the sheet, a pair of shears and an advertising account with the local papers. The smallest releasing organization today does more for the exhibitor than did all of the companies combined ten years ago, and does it more intelligently.

On the exhibiting end the change has been even more marked. The exhibitor not only makes use of the material given him, but he improves upon it. Ten years ago he had nothing but stock paper with which to work. There was no true-to-film paper. He bought of the show-print concerns paper of defunct theatrical productions. Some of this was positively vicious and contributed in no small degree to the demand for a censorship. Reformers did not go into the theater to see how bad the films were. A glance at the lobby display was sufficient. A Selig release, for example, showed a girl jumping off a bridge. It was a sixty-foot bridge, and that in itself was a real thriller for those days. She just jumped off the bridge and towed the hero to land. One house dug up a one-sheet for this showing two men in a boat bearing down on a girl and a man struggling in the water. One of the boatmen was shooting at the man in the water and the other was preparing to beat the girl over the head with an oar. It was a gross libel on a well written picture, but people looked at the paper and not at the film and decided that the pictures must need reforming. Take fifteen or twenty sheets like this, plastered over the front of a converted store, dark, filthy and odorous in the extreme, and the passerby was scarcely to be blamed for being unwilling to risk his health and pocketbook in so unsavory a place.

There was nothing to be had for the films, though it was possible to obtain printed strips reading "great show," "twenty degrees cooler inside" and the rest of the stock stuff, but this was about all. Probably the first printed three-sheet devoted to a film was that which for years advertised the Lumiere Cinematograph in front of the Eden Musee in New York. Of course the vaudeville houses had used the pictures in their advertising, but this was along with the vaudeville acts, and this was probably the first printed three-sheet. Some of the more pretentious theaters used stock three-sheets stripped with white and green and pink paper, but these were as bad as the hand-painted three-sheet done with a marking brush by some one around the house who was more willing than talented. Then years ago lack of good advertising was, next to the unsanitary houses themselves, the greatest curse of the business.

But when the special one-sheet did come the managers did not unite in welcoming it. It cost fifteen cents; two and a half times the price of stock paper, and to most houses about that time three or four sheets daily for three or four runs meant $2.50 or $3 a week and that was a real expense to many in those days. They could not afford it, and here was founded an evil that still persists—the rented paper. Several firms throughout the country made a specialty of this rental business. There was one in New York, for example, that was commonly reputed to send a man around with a rubber stamp to back-stamp all the lobby paper he could get access to. Then the company would claim it as its property and point to the stamp that the exhibitor had not noticed when he rented it from some other concern—because it was not there at that time. Today paper is still rented, but the extension of the run from one day to from three days to a week makes it possible to pay for paper to be posted. It is less than five years since the first twenty-eight-sheet was made a part of the regular advertising, yet nothing has a better moral effect upon the general public than the same sort of paper that the dramatic shows use.

But the rented paper had one good effect. It brought the brass lobby frame to its present perfection. Something had to be done to protect this rented paper, and the brass frame with the glazed door was the answer. Taking the paper off the crude lobby boards on which they were posted to stay as long as they held together gave the exhibitor a suggestion. It made the lobby look better, and so he made his look better still by dressing it up, and a well-dressed lobby is the best advertisement a house can have next to a good reputation with the public.

Now such concerns as the Kraus company makes it possible to have many frames and to have a series of lobby displays that may be used in rotation at a cost of about what one lobby equipment would have cost in the old days. Playing up the personality of the actor, they have produced a series of portraits of varying size that are finer than anything carried by the touring dramatic companies. The Kraus company, too, was the first to specialize in postcards of the players for advertising purposes, but others quickly followed this lead, and there are several companies offering postcards in colors at a thousand price that is less than was charged for straight one-color four or five years ago.

Hennegan, Kleine, the United States and others provide handsome lithograph program covers and colored advertising specialties, and the old hand-lettered signs on brown wrapping paper that read "today" or the like have been replaced by more permanent signs on card, on brass or in enamel. They can be kept clean and look "regular."

From the manufacturer the exhibitor receives almost an embarrassment of advertising riches. He can purchase cuts more cheaply than he can have them made, and often he can borrow trade marks, cuts and frames and even scene cuts. All he has to do is pay the postage. His campaigns are all worked out, he can get as good paper as can the manager of the dramatic theater; advertising novelties cost almost nothing. Today it is not a question of what he can get, but what he wants of what he can get. For a couple of dollars he can even get the matrix of a half-page or page of photoplay news that the local paper is glad to get, and if he needs something special he has only to write the publicity department for anything within reason.

But it is in newspaper work that the greatest advance has been made. Ten years ago some vaudeville houses tacked to their Sunday space "and the pictures." That was about all that got into print. The straight picture houses could not afford to advertise. The size of the houses did not permit the outlay, as a rule, and few exhibitors could have written their advertising had they been able to pay for it.

Today the pictures are advertised better and more aggressively than the stage plays. This is a pretty sweeping statement, but it is the truth. In some sections little advertising is done, but there are many houses, particularly in the west, where full pages are not uncommon and half-pages are of weekly routine. And it is not just advertising—it is good advertising, which is a very different matter. Even in the small towns painted layouts and hand lettering are replacing the straight type advertising, and the stuff is worded to pull. Curiously enough it is not the trained theatrical press man who as a rule makes the best copy writer for the pictures. The best work is done by men untrained save in the school of experience, who got into the game because they are natural born showmen and who break all accepted rules because they do not know that the rules exist. They have been helped and encouraged by the exchange house organs written by men such as George E. Carpenter, Tom North, L. J. Scott and Morgan of the Philadelphia Paramount; men who "ride herd" upon their little group of exhibitors and who write with a knowledge of the local conditions peculiar to their own section. Their efforts have been backed up by the trade press, but Tom North, for example, was talking to men he knew socially, and he put most of Oregon and Washington on the advertising map.

And it has all helped the pictures as a whole. It has made the public realize that the pictures are a permanent institution and not a sister to the "pit" show, and this advertising, as has been said, has been the chief reason for the photoplay pages in the daily and Sunday press.

In a word film advertising within the past ten years has advanced from beneath the level of the dime museum to a point where for variety, importance and intelligence it surpasses the theater at its best. And the most remarkable part is that this has been done largely by the men who have had no previous training. George A. Bleich, Dave Udell, Ralph Ruffner, Ray Bagley, Walter Brooks, and men of that stamp are not trained showmen. They have gained all their experience in pictures and in pictures alone, yet they have beaten the old time agent at his best. It's funny, but it's true.

Photoplay Writing Then and Now ☉ By Epes Winthrop Sargent

In the Past Decade We Have Worked in a Circle Back to Starting Point of Synopsis Only, But With a Difference.

TEN years ago we stood just where we stand today in the writing of photoplays. This may seem to be wrong, but it is not. In 1907 the directors wrote their own stories or took tips. The eager author with an idea would sit down and write a letter something like this:

Pioneer Film Co:

Dear Sirs:—I think it would make a funny picture if you had a little boy do a lot of funny things to people and they all come to his father's house and tell the father to spank him. So he does so, but the boy knew he was going to be spanked, so he stuffed an old gunnysack in the seat of his pants and he didn't know there was a stick of dynamite in it, so they all get blown to pieces as they stand watching the boy getting a licking. I hope you can use this. I like your pictures most.

A. AUTHOR.

Getting a letter like that, the boss might send the author three dollars or perhaps five. Sometimes as much as ten dollars would be paid. The director would think up the "funny things" that the little boy did to an annoyed populace and perhaps add a climax in which, after a smoke puff obscured the scene, a rain of arms and legs and trunks would shower on to the stage. If no one happened to write in, then he thought up something or did something he had done before or something he had seen some one else do. There was a very little worry about script ideas in those days. Some never even troubled to write a memorandum of action.

Today the "detailed synopsis" or scenario is sent instead of a letter of fifty or a hundred words, but the idea is the same. The director and staff know it all and feel the same large contempt for the outsider.

In between came the real development of photoplay writing and the development of the very men who are now so contemptuous of the free lance writers they themselves were not so long ago.

It was in 1909 that photoplay writing really began to expand into an art. The directors, who had made all of the books and plays they could think of, had to have new ideas. They had stolen about all they dared to steal. They had made all they could remember. They needed help and yelled loudly for it. At about the same time Essanay and Pathe, the latter just then commencing American production, advertised in one of the magazines for writers of ideas for plots. Vitagraph soon followed and then the Lubin Company. After that came the deluge. Probably it was Archer McMackin, of Essanay, who coined the "From $10 to $100 paid for ideas" that later served as the groundwork for so much lying advertising on the part of the so-called photoplay schools, but all used the line at the start, though the ten was more often used than the hundred; indeed it is probable that for several years no hundred-dollar checks were written. Most companies ranged from $5 to $25 for scripts and $35 was liberal indeed. Pathe offered the most unusual payments, for the French directors marked the payments to be made in francs and this, roughly translated into dollars, might bring a surprised and sometimes irate author $6.25 or $8.75, and authors cannot understand fractional payments.

In self-defense the editors had to turn schoolmasters. Essanay, Vitagraph and Lubin published suggestion sheets for authors which served in lieu of text books, and these were supplemented by articles in trade magazines for writers and often by personal letters of two and three pages to the more promising among contributors. Thadee Letendre, then of Springfield, Mass., but now with Universal, wrote the first book of instruction and this was presently followed by one from William Lord Wright, now of Selig. A Chicago man was the first to conceive the idea of writing a school course, and he got the unsuspecting editors to write much of his stuff for him. This "course," poor as it was, formed the basis of innumerable other courses, for other "mail order" men took the course and then set up in business for themselves. Profits of from $10,000 to $30,000 yearly were said to have been made at this business with a comparatively small investment. Literally thousands took the course, misled by the glowing promises. Such as were of real capacity later corrected their errors by studying the more legitimate text book.

From 1910 to 1914 it seemed as though every American above the age of ten was writing for the pictures. Some wrote only one or two scripts, while others lasted a year or so. Those who could make good held on and, as the demand grew, were taken into the studios as staff men. The others dropped out, but for each one to give up the task two seemed to arise.

There were glorious thieves in those old days. In the course of 1910 pretty nearly every stage play, vaudeville sketch, joke and "nigger act" was turned into manuscript. Much has been written about the theft of ideas in the studio, but more might be said of the free lance bandits. They were clumsy robbers, too. They would go to the theater and see some play that particularly interested them. Then they would send it to the very company making the original without even changing the name. When the Vitagraph also conducted an exchange George Hedden once received three plays from a nearby town. The exchange served the town and a glimpse at the booking sheet showed that these three plays had formed the program for one day at the local house. Every editor has had scores of such experiences. One woman was asked, in case her story was taken, if the check should go to her or the estate of the late Frank Stockton, and she merely wrote that the money would do her more good than it would Stockton.

Between the thieves and the boobs and the gradual absorption of real writers by the studios, the outside contributions became increasingly poor and more and more dependence was placed upon the studio staff. No effort was made to raise a new force of free lances, and finally it came to be argued that it was better to take synopsis only and pay synopsis price, since it was seldom that the continuity could be used as it stood. And so it has come about that the business has gone back to where it began. There are inside writers and tipsters. The tipsters are better paid than before, and some of them are well known authors who get $1,000 and $1,500 for a five reel idea against the three and five dollars paid for the half-reel suggestions ten years ago. From ten to twenty-five dollars a reel is paid for suggestions from writers without names, but to-day there are not fifty men outside the studios who are writing continuities and selling them as such. We are back at the starting line. It is to be hoped that we make a fresh start.

Has Watched "World" Eight Years By C. H. Bean

Subscriber for Nearly a Decade Makes Plea for More Co-operation Between the Exchanges and Theatres

I HAVE been a subscriber for the MOVING PICTURE WORLD since I first went into the moving picture business and opened my theater in this city, which was in October, 1908. I am much pleased to say that I think it has been a great help to me and I do not think I could be without it. I think that every exhibitor should be a subscriber.

In my opinion the picture business has progressed in many ways, but not so very much to the benefit of the exhibitor in the small towns and small cities. I believe in the open market, where an exhibitor can use the films that he wants, as every exhibitor knows best what his patrons desire. Many times there are features on the program that you are tied to by contract, and you have to use them and sometimes they do not go over with your patrons. I think this is more harmful to the small exhibitor than the large ones in the big cities.

The managers of the film exchanges should co-operate with the exhibitors and the exhibitors with the exchange manager, to make the business good and clean and to progress in the right way. Give your patrons what they want. If you have any pictures on your program that the public is criticising, cut them out, for a lot of criticism will call for censorship quicker than anything in the world. I think that the exhibitor should co-operate more with the schools and should give matinees for the children free on days such as Flag Day, Christmas, or any time they see fit to do so, and to have a program fitting for the occasion. Exhibitors might also give a show sometimes for charity for some local cause. It all helps.

The New Hampshire exhibitors are very well organized. The picture game is very quiet in our State as regards legislation. We have only one bill before the Legislature at the present time, a bill that was killed two years ago, and we hope it will meet with the same fate this session, as it is only a class legislation bill, framed for personal spite. I can safely say that the majority of exhibitors in New Hampshire are trying to give a good, clean program. There are many pictures now on the market that I know have been turned down because our exhibitors knew they would not please our patrons. Many of these features are big money-getters, but we believe we are safer to leave them alone. Every exhibitor should do all he can to make the business clean, and if he does so there will be no cause for censorship.

[Mr. Bean is president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New Hampshire, and owns a theater at Franklin, N. H.]

Honor the "Old Timers"

If the big theater manager of today is inclined to look with contempt upon the owner of the little store show of ten years ago he should remember that the little store show man was the pioneer who blazed the trail that led to the Strands and the Rialtos. True, many of them were butchers or bakers or candlestick makers, but humble as were their beginnings they were the men who made the great success of pictures possible and, by the way, some of them were big enough to grow to be the leaders of today.

Industry Owes Much to Good Projection

Veteran Projector Manufacturer Believes Achievements of Machine Makers Match in Importance Those of Producers—Problems of Today.

ONE of the genuine "old-timers" in the motion picture industry is Nicholas Power, the father of the Cameragraph known around the world. Mr. Power was one of the few in attendance at the birth of the motion picture. He has seen the child grow to manhood. As a manufacturer of projection machines for seventeen years, as one who for three years prior to that was engaged in the making of parts and the rebuilding of other machines, he very naturally believes the achievements of the men engaged in the building of projection apparatus have matched in importance those of the producers of motion pictures. In fact, he confided to a World man who recently called at his office down in lower Manhattan, in the region known among leather men as "the Swamp," he was inclined to think the improvements in projection had made possible the expansion of the industry to its present size. Which belief will hardly be criticised by those whose memory extends back to the early days.

Mr. Power expressed himself as being more concerned about conditions of today than he was in regard to what had been accomplished in the past ten years. He declared changes and refinements were constantly being made in projection machines, devices small and great constantly were being evolved in the direction of efficiency and safety. He chuckled when he spoke of the machines of ten years ago. "You know there are exhibitors who today are getting good results from machines manufactured ten years ago," he said. "Of course, that means the combination of a most expert operator and well-cared-for machinery. Give the same operator the latest type of projector and you will see something else—something well worth while.

"Several factors operate today to retard the projection of motion pictures—I am referring to ideal projection. Among these are high amperage and speed. It is not unusual to find managers using 80, 90 and even 100 amperes where 50 would be ample. Ten years ago 25 or 30 was the average. If a manager wanted to use 35 he would have been compelled to make application for a special permit.

"The public spends good money to get into a show-house, to see pictures put on right, to be amused. There are occasions when this public is at the mercy of managers who through the fear of losing a few nickels will take chances in speeding their film, will take hazardous risks in crowding their lights, in the latter instance many times owing to the fact that the film is opaque instead of translucent. These are among the things that will have to be remedied in order to improve conditions in the future.

"The motion picture is finding new fields daily. Even up to this time there are a lot of people who have never seen a motion picture. Film should not be run faster than it has been absorbed by the camera. As an illustration, if we were to instruct a comedian about to go on the stage that he should reduce the time of his monologue from six minutes to three but that he must utter every word of his prescribed talk don't you think he would protest that it would be impossible—that the result would be a jumble?

"Then again, oftentimes enough attention is not paid to the condition of the film in the exchange. Film may be issued to exhibitors when it is in such shape that it will not withstand without breaking even the running at normal speed.

"I sometimes think the importance of projection has not been appreciated by the industry as a whole—the necessity for precise workmanship, the amount of detail entering into the proper reproduction on the screen of the minute photographs in the film.

"Coming back for a moment to the distinction between the opaque and the translucent film. Where it is of the latter description the heat from the light can pass through, making unnecessary the immense amount of power. Let us get away from the high amperage and make things as safe as possible. Another factor that will aid immensely is a high class of lenses. The expensive lens gives us more detail with less intensity of light and altogether results in a better picture."

It was in 1906, the manufacturer said, that the Power company issued the Cameragraph No. 5. In January, 1910, the No. 6 was put on the market. In July, 1912, came the 6A, followed in April, 1915, by the 6B.

"The changes between each machine and its successor were not exactly radical," said Mr. Power, "if we except the fact of the introduction of the intermittent movement in the No. 6. That was something new in the projection of motion pictures as well as in the general field of mechanics. Of course, if we compare the No. 5 with the latest machine we note many differences."

Mr. Power was reminded by his caller that in the initial issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD the Cameragraph had been advertised. "Yes," replied the manufacturer, "and you will find it in the last one, too. The two concerns have been quite friendly, haven't they?"

Asked as to the demand for projection machinery today compared with that of ten years ago Mr. Power smiled. "Do you know," he said, "ten years ago it was not an unusual thing to have reported the loss by theft of machine heads—which was revelatory of the scarcity of machines in those days. We were even compelled to withdraw our advertising until we caught up with our orders. From 1907 until early in 1915 there was a steady increase in the number of houses, but I think from that period on the larger theaters began to make their influence felt. But the business has been greatly stabilized. We are not complaining of the outlook."

Nicholas Power.

Projection, Past and Present By F. H. Richardson

Moving Picture World Expert Gives Resume of Progress Made in Projecting and Operating

ONCE each twelve months it is fashionable and perhaps right that we should pause and compare the past with the present. The lessons taught through viewing the record of past accomplishments cannot help but be encouraging. The lessons cannot help but speak to us of even better things for the future, and impart to the horizon of the Beyond a rosy tint.

As a matter of fact, the moving picture industry, as a form of theatrical amusement, is only in about its seventeenth year. Yet in that time it has advanced by such gigantic leaps and bounds that it is at present said to be fifth in point of financial importance in this land of huge enterprises. A truly amazing record, and one which has only perhaps been equaled by the automobile industry.

Perhaps a backward glance at my own connection with projection and the MOVING PICTURE WORLD may be of interest. My first experience with projection was about 1890, when I secured a McIntosh all-metal dissolving stereopticon, and a lot of rather startling Civil War views from an old soldier in Cripple Creek, Colorado. With that crude outfit I inaugurated a scheme of showing slides, on the street at night, finally graduating from that into a regular paid performance show in churches, schools and halls. The advertising stunt was a financial success, but the "show" most emphatically was not. From then on, until I landed in Chicago, my connection with "the game" was spasmodic. But in Chicago, in 1904, I think it was, Joe Traville and his wife, Lillian Landers, of the vaudeville team of Traville & Landers, had a concession in one of Chicago's amusement parks, and one of the "stunts" consisted of showing a reel of moving pictures. The performers were old friends of mine, and Joe consented to give me the first real instruction I had ever had in "operating." Soon thereafter I became a regular moving picture machine operator. Joe is a theater owner-manager in Placerville, Cal., now, and, please God, I intend to stop and visit him and Mrs. Traville next Spring. My first job of actual work-for-wages operating was for Sam Schiller, then owner of a theater on the North Side, Chicago. From then until I left Chicago, seven years ago, I "twisted a crank" in return for the greater portion of my daily bread.

Very early in the game, however, I discovered the fact that there was a crying need for knowledge. Operators knew virtually nothing at all about their business except how to make a splice, and not even how to do that right. Projection was something quite awful to look upon. The operator had practically no standing in the industry. He received absolutely no consideration from any one, and the suggestion that there was anything to operating that a twelve-year-old kid could not master in one day brought a smile of derision or a sneer from Mr. Theater Manager.

Recognizing this condition, and most emphatically dissenting from it, I set about investigating and digging up knowledge of the then very embryonic art of projection. I met with considerable success, and, on February 8, 1908, before the MOVING PICTURE WORLD had rounded out its first year of life, I began writing for its columns a series of "Lessons for the Operator." This series was well received and was followed by articles from time to time, until finally another series of more elaborate lessons, which afterward became the first edition of the Handbook, was begun.

Seven years ago I moved to New York and was at once employed on the staff of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, although it was some time before I could convince the late J. P. Chalmers that a "Trouble Column" for operators would be either popular or desirable. Finally, however, Mr. Chalmers gave his consent to a trial, and ever since, under various names (now the Projection Department), the "Trouble Column" has been a prominent feature of this paper.

To get some conception of the magnitude of the industry one has but to consider that there are in use in the operating rooms of the theaters of this country and Canada every day approximately 120,000 reels of film, valued at many millions of dollars. In this I do not include the tremendous amount of reserve reels in stock in the exchanges or in transit, but merely those going to make up the day's program. There are approximately 30,000 projection machines in use, valued at about $7,500,000, and other operating room equipment, which brings the total up to at least $12,000,000. The theaters of this country and Canada alone consume between 75,000 and 80,000 carbons per day. There are probably 25,000 operators engaged daily in the projection of pictures in the United States and Canada. I could go on at considerable length setting forth amazing figures—amazing when we stop to think that all this has developed in less than a score of years.

The projection machine, which in the beginning was a little, flimsy, simple affair, has developed into an intricate, high-class mechanism, having five or six hundred parts; and its parts have been brought to such a surprising state of mechanical accuracy that, given a perfectly perforated film, it is now quite possible to project a picture in which the eye can detect absolutely no movement of the picture on the screen. Its most delicate parts are now finished in marvelously accurate grinding machines, the wheels of which revolve at the almost unbelievable speed of more than 20,000 revolutions per minute. The spindle and shafts, in which not quite so high a degree of accuracy is necessary, are ground on machines the grinding wheels of which run at from 1,500 to 2,000 revolutions per minute. The very finest quality of steel is used for the working parts and in many cases this steel is made as hard as glass.

The operating room has slowly evolved from a black calico curtain into a rather imposing affair of concrete, hollow tile, or brick.

The operator himself is no longer satisfied to be classed with the "low brows."

Works of instruction and literature on projection have kept pace with the progress of the art, and the operator of today instead of being ashamed to be seen reading the text books of his profession and studying the technical departments of the trade paper is proud to have it known that he has all available books. In many cases he even contributes to the projection departments of the magazine devoted to the industry.

On the other hand the exhibitor is slowly (and I almost said painfully) arriving at an understanding of the fact that there really is something more to the projection of pictures than the mere twisting of a crank. Exhibitors who less than seven years ago told the writer, in a sneering tone of voice, that they "could teach a fifteen-year-old boy all there was to learn about projection in two days," are now paying as high as forty and forty-five dollars a week, and offering more if they can get better men.

Photography in films has evolved out of crudeness into literal magnificence in perfection. Some may be inclined to question the last three words, but I believe they represent no exaggeration when we come to consider the splendid results attained in the magnification of a little photograph less than one inch square into a 12x16 foot, or even larger, picture.

Ten years ago the operator, with his little "coffee grinder" projected the shadow forms of slap-stick "artists," who received perhaps as much as fifty dollars per week—some of them. Today he projects the shadow forms of the finest artists the world has ever seen, many of whom figure their weekly salary in thousands of dollars.

As to the future, and what lies therein, no man can say, but to the thoughtful one it is apparent that the moving picture industry as a form of theatrical amusement is here to stay. This is made certain through and by the fact that in all the history of the world no good, cheap, clean form of amusement ever permanently disappeared. Years ago I said the time would come when we would view a moving picture play lasting from two to two and a half hours. I was laughed at. But we do that identical thing right now, and I believe that the multiple-reel release is a permanent feature of the industry which will endure and become even more popular than it is at the present time.

It seems to me, however, that the greatest and only real danger now confronting the moving picture industry is the tremendous rapidity with which we are using up possible film stories. Turning out photoplays at the present rate, how long will it be before we will be literally confronted with the proposition that everything under the canopy of heaven has already been "done," and perhaps done two or three times? It does seem to me that the wise, sane, sensible course would be to produce fewer photoplays, compel the running of programs for half a week, and substitute quality for quantity.

What Will the Next Ten Bring?

Looking back upon the achievements of the ten years just past, the question arises: What will the next ten years produce? It will be mighty interesting to watch the evolution.

From Flickers to Steady-as-a-Rock

A Veteran Operator's Views of Conditions Ten Years Ago and Up to the Present Time.

By W. A. REED.

TEN years ago machines were very lightly built with a small lamp that required the operator to stop and recarbon or trim every second or third reel. We had a rheostat to regulate the flow of current to the lamp arc, and said rheostat wasn't any too good at that.

I had it a little better than most of the boys at that time, as I was connected with the Vitagraph Company when they were putting out their own shows. Our machine was specially built under the supervision of A. E. Smith, who also had a special lamp, somewhat like the big heavy English lamp. Our rheostat was also special, so we had it a little better than some of the others. I was traveling in the South for the company. Nearly every town had someone who owned a machine, bought on an advertisement. And this man was making $30 to $50 per night showing pictures.

I would arrive in town and Mr. Moving Picture Man would look me up, tell me his troubles and tell me he couldn't work the darn thing. I generally was too busy to teach him how to run it, although he usually thought it would only take a half hour or so, as he was pretty smart.

I remember arriving at Eastlakes Park, Birmingham, Ala., on a Sunday morning. They had one of Hale's touring cars, which came in fashion just about that time. The operator was having his own troubles, and couldn't get a picture on the sheet. As I carried several lenses I went into town and got my wide angle lens and came out and fixed him up. The proprietor of the car was very grateful and treated me finely.

Films were not any too good ten years ago, as many will remember. We had lots of flicker and the speed was not good. Just about that time the store show was beginning to bloom and they sprung up in every town and hamlet where there was electricity. I couldn't for the life of me see where they could make any money at five cents, as I had always been playing at 10, 25 and 50 cents. I missed my guess, for they did make money. Later on came improvements on machines and transformers or compensars to take the place of the rheostat. Then came the motor generator sets, then the Cooper-Hewitt mercury arc rectifiers. Having worked on all the devices, I think the motor generator is best.

Coming back to the present time, nearly all of the moving picture theaters have very fine equipment. The machines are strongly built, thanks to our old friends, Nicholas Power, Frank Cannock and others, and by the way, Frank was the machinist who built the early Vitagraph machines. Photography has become a fine art both in production and camera work. Now we have finely built sets, where in the olden times painted scenery was used, and every time a door would open or close the whole set would shake.

Today the up-to-date managers call for high class projection and they must have it. High class houses do not object to spending large sums for the best equipment that can be had. The house I am now in is equipped with three machines, two mercury arc rectifiers and a motor generator set of a high amperage, which are arranged so that in case of trouble either can be used. We also have motor drive attachments, which give the operator more time to attend to his projection. Two operators and an assistant are required where I am now employed.

The operator of ten years ago was handicapped in many ways, as he had little or nothing to work with. As long as he got the picture on the screen he was lucky. Now we have text-books covering all sorts of projection trouble, thanks to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and its Projection Department and brother Frank H. Richardson. The operator of today considers projection an art, takes pride in his work and studies hard to keep abreast of the times.

Showing Pictures Under "Fire" Conditions By Elmer L. McIntosh

Why One Orchestra Spectator Had to Change Seat to Avoid Screen-Blanketing Film Descending from Balcony

MY CONNECTION with the moving picture business dates back to the Boer War period, when a few short subjects including a scene or two from the front was about all an audience would tolerate on the program, and that at the end of the show.

As operator I toured the principal cities, showing in theaters and chautauquas such classics as "The Great Train Robbery" (Edison) and "The Moonshiners" and "The Little Lost Child" (Biograph).

Melies of Paris was the wizard of filmdom at that time.

Elmer L. McIntosh.

Hardly any film of the present day can boast of such a vogue as had his "Trip to the Moon," with which I used to delight thousands. It is needless to say that the methods pursued by the old line operators, if duplicated even in part today, would land the perpetrator in jail.

With no booth, no magazines, fire shutters, or inclosed switches or rheostats to help or hinder him, the operator was allowed to meet the conditions and make good as best suited his fancy, so that sometimes the projecting outfit consisted of a Kinetograph head screwed down on a kitchen table, from which a small section was removed to make way for the film, which was received in a black cloth bag tucked around the front legs of the table and beneath it. The switch, with bare link fuses, was screwed on the table, within easy reach, and the rheostat sat near the back legs so that everything seemed nicely arranged to woo the fire god from his lair.

One memorable night I was putting on "The Life of a New York Fireman" at the old Dewey on Fourteenth street and running the film into an extra capacious bag, suspended over the balcony railing on two parallel sticks jutting out from the machine.

To enhance the realism I had been furnished with strips of glass with colored gelatin attached—blue, yellow, pink and red—the intention being to color the scenes at suitable periods by holding the strips before the lens.

As the fire scenes became more vivid I enlivened them with my strips, spread out fanwise, while grinding away with my other hand. Suddenly I felt a touch on my shoulder. One of the waiters from the main floor was standing beside me.

"Say, Bo," said he, "your film is getting out of the bag and running down on the floor below."

I looked and sure enough my film was gliding silently downward and piling up in an orchestra seat, vacated by a patron when he found that the downpour of film interfered with his view of the screen.

I abandoned the color scheme, and pulled back that film, single handed, foot by foot, till I had it all back in the bag before the subject was finished, though conditions were ripe for another kind of an ending, with real firemen at work.

At the time of the coronation of King Edward I made a tour of the Canadian provinces with the film of that event as the main attraction.

Al Plant and I penetrated districts where moving pictures had never been shown, leaving the beaten path of the railroads and traveling by steam packet and ox-cart, carrying our gas tanks with us.

We showed in schoolhouses and courthouses, and while generally received with enthusiasm, in a few places we were subjected to a sort of boycott. The entire prospective audience would assemble outside the place of exhibition and camp out on the lawn—not one going inside. Then a representative would call on the exhibitor and inform him that if the price was cut all would attend; otherwise no one would go in. The majority ruled.

I was sent by the Vitagraph Company especially to exhibit, in Indianapolis, a Pathe film "Cinderella," a distinct novelty in that section, as it was hand-colored. I was to join Reilly & Woods' show there Sunday night.

I had my own troubles en route, getting there about noon Sunday. My show trunk fared even worse than I did, for it didn't appear at the station till 4 o'clock. I had an expressman already engaged, and unpacked and did most of the setting-up of the machine while bumping along the way to the theater. Arriving at my destination, the sheet was thrown to a waiting stage hand, and I did the remainder of the setting-up in the lobby—while the house electrician made connections. The last act was finishing as I completed my task. I ran the reel in good shape. After it was all over—this, too, was in the days of the black bag—I discovered that about two yards of the film had found its way out of the bag by way of a slit in it, and had poked its way under the red hot rheostat, where a small section of it had become shriveled from the heat.

Who can say how many "near fires" could be credited to such working conditions?

Development of Exhibition By W. H. Clune

Los Angeles Exhibitor Talks About the Progress Made by the Picture Theater in the Last Decade

THERE are few occupations so interesting as looking back over the successive changes that have taken place in the field of picture exhibition—there is so much of the element of seeming magic in the rapidity with which development has taken place.

The changes have not taken place entirely in the realm of the technical or in the business methods. The evolution that has taken place in the psychology of the public, the attitude of the public mind toward the pictures, is quite as interesting. We started in the exhibi-bition of motion pictures at Fifth and Main streets, Los Angeles, in the year 1907. Even at that date, and as poor as the pictures were, judged by present-day standards, we got 10, 15 and 20 cents admission fee, and did a large business. One of the peculiarities of that time, and even several years later, was the half price given to all children. It does not seem to have occurred to us in those days that a child could occupy just as much room as a grown person and keep somebody else standing outside who was waiting to spend his money.

But perhaps at that stage of the game it was good policy at that. For no doubt many adults were drawn to the new amusement through the enthusiasm of the juveniles. As we see it today, the motion picture of ten years ago appealed to the juvenile side of the adult mind. It did not have its serious dramatic aspect then, and for that reason it was slow in arousing the interest of men and women—especially men—who were satisfied with very little of the novelty. Among our audiences as late as 1910 there were few men. They were composed mostly of women and children. I used to go around and personally invite my male friends to come and see something that I knew would be of special appeal to them, and in this way we slowly got it into the general public mind that perhaps motion pictures had an artistic future as rosy as a few of us believed and preached.

Around 1910, which is only slightly more than a half decade back, among our regular patrons were several people who have become distinguished for their achievements in the picture field. D. W. Griffith, then with the Biograph, a pioneer in the application of the film to serious drama, was a regular attendant and full of the enthusiasm which he has since put into great deeds.

With Griffith was Mack Sennett, then an actor who would hardly have been picked out as a future magnate in this field. He was always a good actor, but his capabilities as a creator of comedy and as an executive were then almost totally unsuspected. Mary Pickford was a sweet little actress of undoubted ability, but hardly more than a local celebrity, who was also to surprise the world in a few magical years. Henry Walthall was one of the strugglers for the position, fame and wealth that have since come to him. Charlie Chaplin was unknown, being then a vaudeville slapstick artist. Douglas Fairbanks was struggling along on a fair living wage on the stage.

And so one might go right down the line. This was only seven years ago. Think for a moment of the marvelous changes that have taken place in that seven years in the making and exhibiting of motion pictures. And yet there are supercilious critics who, despite the wonderful progress that has been made, and its incomparable swiftness, sneer at the motion picture because it has not yet attained to the full stature they have set for it. The stage has been centuries in its development, the motion picture hardly more than a decade.

What Theater Men Are Doing

Picture Exhibiting in Chicago.

IN SUMMING up the situation in the motion picture world that is bounded by the Chicago suburbs, Samuel I. Levin, general manager for Jones, Linick & Schaefer, the prominent trio who have dominated the Chicago theatrical field with their activities as exhibitors and exchange operators as well, makes some interesting statements.

"In every nook and corner of the extensive area comprising Chicago and its environs may be found fine palaces dedicated to the exhibition of motion pictures," said Mr.

Levin. "Theaters of large seating capacity, up to twenty-five hundred, many with but a main floor containing as high as fifteen hundred seats, are decorated lavishly and equipped with apparatus for the exhibition of pictures that could be called the last word in the flickerless projection.

"Time was, back in the pioneer days, when we opened our Orpheum theater on State street and gave a forty-minute show for ten cents. In those days about a dozen picture houses were scattered throughout the city, except for a small number of store shows of mediocre appearance and atmosphere. The Orpheum was a pretentious theater, having been built for vaudeville, but, catching the trend of the times, was turned to the exhibition of motion pictures.

"We would line up waiting patrons along State street to Monroe, a distance of approximately 150 feet, and they would feast their eyes upon productions which were of European make principally, the French and Italian films predominating. We did occasionally receive some good American-made pictures, but the foreign ones were mostly in evidence. Two and one-half reels constituted a long show at that time, for previously we permitted the generous public to gaze at one reel of one thousand feet or less for five cents, that being projected by a rickety machine, causing considerable flicker to the picture.

"Time went on. Two and three reel American-made subjects came into being, machines and personal service improved and theaters with more imposing architecture were constructed. Again and again the motion picture business improved so that five to twelve reel pictures were made, serial stories began to interest the public, new styles screens began to loom up and the business again moved forward by leaps and bounds.

"All this progress was immensely beneficial to those engaged in every angle of the picture business, with the exception of the exhibitor, who paid more for everything, but still charged the same old admission. Within the last year and up to the present time, and foreseeing a little of the future, the trend is for specializing in screen and stage stars, which apparently is the right idea for the moment, inasmuch as it will permit exhibitors to trade in the open market and thereby secure favorites for their patrons who are not averse to paying a slightly increased admission fee.

"To review the period of time during which the motion picture theater first appeared upon the horizon up to the present time would be to see the store show, the five-cent theater specially constructed, the ten-cent theater of five or six hundred seat capacity, the fifteen-cent theater of today of eight hundred to fifteen hundred seats, and the twenty-five-cent palace that will prevail in all parts of this great city.

"The improvement in pictures, the exceedingly high cost of production, the engaging of the finest of brain material in bringing to the door of the theater patrons such works of art as are now to be seen have caused the construction of the newer type of exhibition houses.

"The day of the butcher, baker and candlestick maker operating playhouses has become a thing of the past. Shrewd theatrical management has become necessary. The picture theater of today must be operated by a man born and bred in the show business, who understands the angles of the amusement game thoroughly, and whose hand resting on the rudder must be efficient to pilot his venture to success. Look upon the success of the modern picture house and you will find at its helm a man trained in the art of catering to the public and one who knows the a, b, c's of entertainment. And to those who claim that pictures have reached their pinnacle I fling the gauntlet and prophesy that pictures have much greater heights to attain and will grow to still greater triumphs as the years roll on."

The First Real Studios

Prior to 1907 most of the manufacturers of pictures operated studios fitted up in lofts or in the open air. The first studio building to be erected was the Vitagraph studio in Flatbush in 1906. The second was the Edison studio in the Bronx, New York. Since then several million dollars has been spent in elaborate studios and their equipment. Some of them are wonderful edifices, yet it will be remembered that the old loft studios were capable of producing many of the best pictures that have ever been made.

Canada's First Exhibitor

So Mr. Green Claims, and Says He Began in 1896—
Can You Beat It?

As the first man in Canada to exhibit motion pictures and the oldest manager in this country, twenty-one years in the game and a constant reader of your paper from its first issue up to date, I have frequently been amused at what many call the motion picture business. When it does get to be a business and not a scramble—it will be a grand old game. At present there is no reliability about it. One thing it has done, it has developed the greatest bunch of would-be showmen the world has ever known. I got my schooling years before the motion picture was invented (by Mr. Lumiere, Lyons, France) and I find that even in a small city of twelve thousand population up here in Canada business can be developed if showmanship and close attention to detail is attended to. I use all pictures three days, and if the picture is a good one the third day's business is the best; then why do so many of these so-called managers try to make a daily change of program? It cannot be done, as there is not sufficient material produced to change more than twice each week and give the public real pictures. I enclose a

Basic Business Principles Should Govern By W.W. Hodkinson

Prominent Distributor Says All Admit "Longer Runs and Better Pictures, Theaters and Conditions" Must Prevail

THE request of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD that I review the past ten years of my experience in the motion picture business makes an appeal to which I have decided to respond—particularly since the period named just about covers my own experience in the industry which I entered during the fall of 1907, just about nine and a half years ago. Strangely, one of my first motion picture impressions is that of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD of that date; evidently the publication was then about six months old, for I remember the few pages it represented, a paper not nearly so pretentious as many of our present day house organs. The increase in its size and prestige since then adequately typify the growing popularity of the motion picture itself.

I think it doubtful if any one went into the motion picture business at the time I did with precisely similar views, and I am free to confess that I have found few since then who have even professed to. I think, with but few exceptions, every one I have met acknowledges that the prime motive was to make money, mainly because others were making money at it.

My entry was made with a distinctly formed question in mind. I was endeavoring to discover if this new industry was merely a get-rich-quick proposition, merely a transient phase of public interest, such as many of those I met seemed to think it, and as the actions of nearly all seemed to indicate, or whether there was not a bigger, fine future awaiting it; whether the motion picture business could not be built into a regularly organized commercial industry that would take its place along with other substantial business enterprises. That question was ever uppermost in my mind, and the possibility of getting the right answer was my sole actuating motive. I can truthfully say that the thought of quick profit was a secondary consideration. My main consideration from first to last has been:

"Is it a regular business? Will basic commercial principles and conduct find a place in it and govern it?"

There have been few with whom I have come in contact who have seemed to believe that question could be answered affirmatively.

Before making up my mind to enter the motion picture field I studied it to the extent that I reached the following conclusions:

There must be better pictures, worthy of being advertised as to appear at a given time and place; these must be shown for longer periods in better theaters and under improved conditions and to a better class of people, who will pay a higher admission. This increased revenue being necessary to enable the producer to make a larger investment for the production of a higher grade of pictures, the result would be an ever-widening circle that would represent the growth of the industry itself.

During the last ten years I have observed the motion picture industry from the viewpoint of a pioneer with the principles laid down above. This has not been a mere theoretical application, but a practical one, as I have adapted the principles to my daily work, and until a very recent period within the past few years when the same principles have become quite generally recognized I have found myself distinctly in the minority. Moreover, I have found each of the operations I have attempted beset with more and more difficulties, particularly as I have widened my field of operations, and thus trod on the toes of more of those who had been benefited by the easy money conditions.

I well remember how eagerly I looked forward nine years ago to the F. S. A. when it was formed in Buffalo, adopting the principles set forth, and how grievously I was disappointed when it didn't, and when also I failed to get any sympathy for the views I expressed—those that dealt with quality, publicity, longer runs, better public, better theaters and conditions, and something better than a five-cent admission.

Then again my hopes were aroused with the consolidation of Biograph and Edison, and the formation of the Patents Company, for here at last was the control that could stabilize and standardize the business. But unfortunately the chief interest even here seemed to center in the money rather than in the future, and in the last analysis they too lacked the vision, the common fault. Competing exchanges bought their output, too, and went merrily on cutting each other's throats; exhibitors did the same with their daily change folly, even increasing the number of reels and producing ever-decreasing returns per unit to the manufacturer.

Then came the General Film Company. Here again I thought I could see vision, organization, permanency, future, but here also appeared the common blindness to the inevitable effects that must follow causes, and hope sagged again. Then came one concern and nailed to its masthead the legend, or motto, or whatever you wish to call it, that I had carried successfully through many minor battles, and plunged itself into the sea of national film operations. At the first the principles it voiced were questioned, scoffed at and even derided both from within the industry and out of it, and then the conditions changed almost overnight, and today the whole industry says in effect:

"Better pictures, longer runs, better theaters and better conditions." As Louis Agassiz said: "Every great truth goes through three stages: first people say it is not true; second, that it conflicts with the Bible, and third, that they have always believed it."

So much for the ten years that have slipped by. They are gone, but what of the future? I dare not venture on a ten year opinion, but I believe that the next five years will place motion pictures far beyond the point any of us have believed they would have reached today. Influences that our previous training and intellectual development unfit us to grasp will take charge of this child of light chemistry, and under these guiding fingers of destiny the motion picture will reach out to all the corners of the earth as a force unequalled in history for the education of and improvement of mankind. Then when this great machinery is performing its stupendous task, we who have had its infancy in our care, uncontrollable though it has largely been, will observe the best brains of the world concentrate their best work upon the film that will unroll daily in every quarter of the globe, carrying the message of right and value universally and graphically to all mankind. Then, presumably, our monologue will begin, as usual, "I remember when——."

Action of Industry Fast and Furious By Watterson R. Rothacker

Business One of Extraordinary Fascination—Standardization One of the Many Big Things to Come in Future

ACTION has been so fast and furious during the young life of the motion picture industry that it is rather difficult to realize ten years have elapsed since the Moving Picture World issued its initial edition.

I remember quite well the first appearance of this paper in Chicago. At that time I was in the moving picture trade journal field and Chicago was the hub from which live and important moving picture news daily radiated. There were not so many film men "to see" in those days and moving picture trade paper competition had not then arrived.

It seems more like months ago than years ago that I introduced the World correspondent to the Chicago trade and saw him handle his local circulation via the under-the-arm route. It would require rather a hefty chap to pack and deliver the paper here now, wouldn't it?

While Tempus has been fugiting these years, we have all had to fugit right along in order to follow the pace the tremendous potential power of the industry itself has set. There is little or no time even now for retrospection in the moving picture business, and while it is good to sit down occasionally, turn over a few leaves of memory, and talk of the things that were, I really find it more pleasant, and certainly more profitable, to look ahead and plan and make ready for the big tomorrow in the moving picture industry, which promises so much.

Ours is a wonderful business, a business of extraordinary fascination, a business in which to live you must be alive every minute or make way for others more energetic who ever crowd in and up and onward.

Of signal significance and importance is the tremendous growth of the industry during these past few years. Every one of us uses the bromide: "The moving picture is in its infancy," and I believe that it is—but, believe me, it is some infant and it is not paralyzed.

Our industry has had growing pains and continues to have them every now and then, but it is too big and too powerful to be annoyed more than a trifle by these momentary and transient troubles.

We may well be proud of our participation in this mammoth and ever-getting-greater industry, and if we all do our bit this pride of business is decidedly worth while.

The moving picture industry has been good to a lot of men, both from financial and publicity viewpoints. A lot of men have been good to the industry and we are proud of them. Selig, Spoor, Kleine, Laemmle, Cochrane, Rock, Pathe, Freuler, Blackton, Rowland, Lasky, Engel and a dozen others who had 42-centimeter imaginations and a full measure of courage will always occupy preferred position, BF type, in motion picture history.

Speaking of the time that was, "them was the scrappy days." Then the big men that are were fighting to be big, and because they fought well they are big. It is true that in the earlier days Opportunity was banging at the doors with a lot more noise than she makes now, but Opportunity always demanded courage and faith and the men who heard and heeded were amply rewarded, and became bigger and better and were factors of big calibre, such as Opportunity required.

In my humble opinion, however, the big things in the motion picture industry are to come. I predict bigger and better pictures, a sane regulation, standardization in manufacturing, the deathknell of frenzied stock manipulations and a much-needed check on the windy promotion schemes which burden and discredit the current era. I look forward to a "reel" industry as sound and as safe and as sane as the packing industry matured when it came into its own.

I am enthusiastic and hopeful because the business is bigger than any individual in it, and because it is too big to be hampered by little men or little things.

In closing I desire to pay tribute to the power of the moving picture press, which has done so much to establish the industry as a whole, and which can do so much more toward the advancement of the big film idea and the elevation of standards and methods employed by all factors in this great business.

Lengths of Subjects in March, 1917.

There may be interest in a reminiscent way in the lengths of subjects released ten years ago. In the MOVING PICTURE WORLD for March 30, 1907, are for the first time listed the lengths of the films being released by various companies. We have selected from this page the product of six manufacturers and one distributor. Seventy-two subjects contain a total footage of 38,843, an average of 540 feet to a subject. Six Edison pictures averaged 724 feet; twelve Kleine, 382; six Lubin, 450; twelve Selig, 561; twelve Biograph, 670; twelve Pathe, 345; twelve Vitagraph, 698. The longest subject was in 1,000 feet, and there was one but of this length. The shortest was 65 feet; its title was "Good Night." It is likely if an exhibitor today should see a film listed as of 65 feet in length he, too, would repeat "Good Night!"

Couldn't Get Film, Opened Exchange By Carl Laemmle

Manufacturer Tells of Days When Distributors Were So Busy Counting Money They Couldn't Find Time to Read Kicks.

I LOST my temper some years ago. The result was my first film exchange and whatever success I have since achieved. I was an exhibitor at the time it happened. My original ambition was to own a chain of theaters. Then, one day I found that the film shipped me by the exchange with which I was dealing was not the one I had booked and advertised.

The same thing had occurred several days for a week. I was mad clear through. Going down to the exchange, I walked into the proprietor's private office. For various reasons I won't mention his right name.

"John Doe!" I said, "for several days you have switched films on me. I've made three complaints without avail. This kick is my last. Unless you give me the films I pay for I'm going to open my own exchange!"

John Doe laughed at me. "Go to it, Laemmle!" he jeered. "Go to it! And before you do, observe that corner of my office. It's empty now and I'm looking for something to fill it with. Open your own exchange and within flights of our imaginations did we ever dare dream that our little venture would grow to such tremendous proportions.

After a morning crammed with work, one of my partners and I left the office for a bite to eat. As we passed through the door a messenger boy shoved a telegram into my hands. It contained the largest order we had yet received.

We were just crossing the car tracks when I finished reading the message to my associate. He became wildly excited as the meaning dawned upon him. Gripping my arm he shouted: "Laemmle! We're going to be millionaires! We're going to be millionaires!"

"All right," I replied, side-stepping an on-coming car, "but let's not lose our heads over it!"

I'll never forget a scene I witnessed during my early days as an exhibitor. I dropped in to see an exchange manager with whom I was intimately acquainted. He was busily engaged in opening letters when I was ushered into his private office.

As fast as each letter was opened, he would glance into the folds for checks, money orders or cash. If they were ordinary communications they were thrown into the waste basket without further ado. If they contained money, the latter was extracted before the communication went flying into the waiting basket.

The head of the exchange laughed when I questioned this amazingly unbusinesslike procedure.

"I haven't got time to read their letters," he said. "Furthermore, I haven't got enough film to give 'em even if I did have time to read what these boobs have to say. If they kick, I let 'em!"

This man would have stared at me had I asked for advice on how to put my shows over. As for exhibitor-helps, the chances are that he would have yelled for the porter to come and throw me out had I asked for any.

In this he simply reflected the feverish "forty-nine" like spirit of the times. Although common enough in the old days, his type are now about as rare as pink-whiskered dodos.

Speaking of co-operation reminds me of a little incident that occurred shortly after the Universal had installed its publicity department and had taken steps to obtain for its exhibitors entree in the columns of their local publications.

I was traveling to Chicago and while on the train met the head of a film organization. In justice to this man, who still heads his organization, I want to say that he has since seen the light. In the course of our conversation I told him what we were doing to help the exhibitor.

"You're doing this free—you're not going to charge 'em anything at all?" he asked amazedly. I nodded my head and inquired what his organization was doing in the way of exhibitor co-operation.

"We're in this business to make money—not to give it away!" he answered shortly.

I sometimes wonder whether there has ever been another industry in which such amazing changes occurred in so short a period. And although prophecy has no place in reminiscence, I want to announce my firm belief that the present year will see more changes—changes that will benefit the industry as a whole—than occurred in all the decade just ended. And certain questions that now vex and harass the trade will be served. The nature of these problems and how they will be dealt with I may dwell upon at some future time.

Carl Laemmle.

six weeks I'll have you on your knees and your stock of films in that empty corner!"

Sore? You bet I was! Then and there I made up my mind to open an exchange where exhibitors would be assured of fair and square treatment. Before long I had in operation the first Laemmle film exchange.

As an exchange it wasn't a very impressive proposition. Just an office fifteen by thirty feet, at 109 Dearborn street. That one room housed all the departments. For awhile it was the joke of Chicago, but when we grew big enough to move into larger quarters we ceased to be a joke and folks began to talk of "Laemmle Luck!"

Incidentally, I don't know where that expression originated. The first I heard of it was when I was an accidental eavesdropper at a conversation held between two exhibitors.

"Understand, I don't ordinarily believe there is such a thing as luck," one of them was saying. "But, Laemmle luck is a different thing. Everything he touches turns to gold. My brother says that doing business with him is just like touching a hunchback's hump!"

Speaking of the old days reminds me of an incident that occurred shortly after my associate R. H. Cochrane and I decided to "buck the trust." It happened long before the Universal Film Manufacturing Company was organized or thought of. In fact, not even in the wildest

American's President Talks of Ten Years By S. S. Hutchinson

Tells How a Business Beginning Without a Stenographer Has Grown to One Employing 3,200 Men and Women

IN ASKING me to contribute a few words to the Tenth Anniversary Number of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD I am sure you never suspected how close your anniversary falls to the tenth anniversary of my own entry into the film industry.

Wonderful strides have been made in filmdom within this period. From its swaddling clothes the film industry has developed into a modern giant. What was once looked upon as a "fly-by-night" business has progressed to the point where it is today referred to as the Fifth Estate. Capital now smiles upon a field which it once refused to tolerate. Taking my own business as a specific example, I have seen the American Film Company grow from nothing to a gigantic corporation, owning all its own property and with plants of its own in Chicago, Santa Barbara, Los Angeles and London, England. Perhaps the newcomer in the film world can faintly realize what a modern Aladdin motion pictures have proved to be if I briefly recite a few of the changes that I have seen develop about me with the passage of time. I feel that I can speak with authority, in a sense, for I have been not alone identified with the manufacture of films, but have been also close to the exhibition end, and am still, for that matter, besides being interested in the distribution or exchange business.

It was approximately ten years ago that I launched forth into the motion picture industry—an amusement that everybody at that time considered "but a fad of the moment"—for in those days not even the most farsighted of men suspected that in 1917 the business of producing and distributing film would be ranked as the fifth industry.

It was in the exchange field that I made my start. Regarded in the light of such undertakings today, it was indeed a tiny beginning. The handling and distribution of the reels of film themselves formed only a part of the exchange's responsibility. It also, as a matter of course, supplied the exhibitor with posters, song slides and sheets of music for the "song" which went along as part of the day's "show." If we had omitted the song slides and sheet music the exhibitor would have been as much surprised as though today we should leave out the third reel of a five-reel feature.

A little later, in partnership with the late Charles J.

Hite, I formed what was christened the H. & H. Film Service, and even at that time the exchange was a comparatively small organization. Mr. Hite and I were not only the exchange managers, but also attended to the bookings, the shipment of film, the accounting department and sometimes served as our own stenographers. Today when there are some 3,200 employes in the various organizations of which I am an executive, it seems almost ridiculous to think back to the time when a real stenographer and an office boy were considered a luxury rather than a necessity.

It was in 1910 that the American Film Manufacturing Company was formed and a start made on the actual manufacture of the film subjects we distributed through our exchanges. The two biggest obstacles we then encountered were the lack of actors and directors and the lack of confidence on the part of capital. Capital wouldn't believe that the film industry had any chance for success and the directors and actors felt they were lowering their dignity if they agreed to work in pictures.

Even at that early date I possessed an ingrained belief that to be successful it would be necessary for the American Film Company to specialize—to confine its efforts toward the manufacture of but one kind of subjects, but to endeavor to make those subjects better in their field than any other film of a similar kind. I might note in passing that this idea of specialization has been predominant ever since with the American. While the American soon ceased to specialize in Western subjects—broadening its field to include society dramas, comedy-dramas of a high-class sort and red-blooded stories laid in almost any clime, it still specialized on technical perfection: American photography and tinting formed a high standard for itself that is still retained. Today, as every exhibitor knows, American is specializing on big feature productions only—stories particularly suited to the talents of such stars as Mary Miles Minter, Gail Kane, Richard Bennett, William Russell and Margarita Fischer.

By our present form of specialization we can assure the exhibitor that the stars he features in big multiple reels will not appear in shorter subjects at his competitor's house, thus injuring their prestige. We can offer him stage furnishings, props and costuming specially designed for use in feature photo-dramas and can assure his not having to apologize for the appearance of the same stage sets, props and costumes in a single or two reel subject.

The American is one of the very few companies in the gigantic motion picture industry which has paid as it went along. It owns its own plant and equipment—the land as well as the building. It owns its own factory and technical department, its own studios and its own office buildings. Nothing is rented or leased. All of it is owned outright and is absolutely clean and unincumbered. This even applies to its foreign quarters, for the London office is as much a part of the American as is the Chicago office or the Santa Barbara studio.

That the American laboratories in Chicago are today one of the best equipped and most up-to-date film plants, as well as among the largest in the country, I am confident. Not long ago as much as 760,000 feet of finished film was produced in a single day there, and the same week saw the completion of over 1,000,000 feet. The American Film Company has facilities for the handling of as much as 1,200,000 feet per week. Our weekly bill for raw stock runs on an average as high as $30,000, though in many weeks this average is exceeded. Assuming that the Red Cross is able to support a Belgian baby a week on $1.50, our weekly check for raw stock alone would support 20,000 Belgian babies for a week. Expressing it in terms of admission to a motion picture theater at 10 cents, it would send fifteen million six hundred thousand people to the theater every year.

As American is today specializing in high-class feature productions, so we have from time to time created other companies to specialize in still other lines. I am proud to have been identified in some respect with each advance that has been made in the picture industry. I believe sincerely in the future of the film industry and hope to be ready to take the next step forward when the proper time arrives.

As to what that next step will be it would be unsafe at this time even to hazard a guess. That stories will grow to have an even stronger human appeal I firmly believe. That the day will come when stereoscopic, colored motion pictures will be demanded by the public I really doubt. To me it seems that the black and white photography such as the American seeks to obtain today is unusually "kind" to the scene depicted. If a glare of color assailed the eye I doubt whether the enjoyment of the spectator would be enhanced. To me it would be positively distracting.

As to the cultural possibilities of the motion picture I cannot impress too strongly my belief that already the films have surpassed the kindergarten in the earliest education of the child. I believe it impossible even roughly to estimate the influence of the good picture upon the dawning intellect of the child. That it is far more than we ordinarily conceive I am sure. For this reason the manufacturer has a tremendous responsibility resting upon his shoulders.

I am confident the time has already arrived when motion pictures are a necessity, when the public regards them as a staple, just as necessary to its enjoyment of life as it does the comic opera, the piano or the phonograph. Better and better pictures must result as time goes on. Better pictures mean better theaters. The exhibitor is already beginning to grasp the bigness of the business in which he is engaged. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD chronicles weekly the erection of new theaters running into an investment of thousands and thousands of dollars. The success of the Strands and Rialtos and Triumphs will undoubtedly inspire exhibitors everywhere to better their theaters. It seems to me the outlook ahead is most encouraging for manufacturer, exchangeman and exhibitor—and as for the picturegoing public itself, it cannot but benefit proportionately.

Days of Worry Those of a Decade Ago ☞ By Adolph Zukor

Former Exhibitor and Present Manufacturer Outlines Some of the Problems of Earlier Days—Future Seems Secure

TEN years ago there were many of us who were worrying for fear the motion picture business would die the death of the penny arcade and other of these transitory forms of amusement which have blossomed and withered. At that time I was an exhibitor, and I am free to confess that I was one of those who was exceedingly worried myself. It is only fair to say that every year from that day to this has seen that uneasiness of mind diminish as this business of ours has steadily progressed. The imagination fails to conjure up anything more humorous than one of the so-called dramas of that day, were it to be flashed on the screen in contrast with the productions of the present. It would be a striking example of the progress which has been made in these ten years if such a performance were to be staged.

Adolph Zukor.

Ten years ago there was a grave doubt in my mind that the motion picture would survive the avalanche of criticism that was being launched at it—because the vast majority of complaints were founded upon common sense. Though it was claimed for the pictures of that time that they were purely experimental, still nobody seemed to be learning very much from these experiments, except the purely technical men. Photography and projection showed some signs of improvement from time to time, but neither the acting nor the subject matter of the pictures seemed to escape from certain ruts into which they had fallen.

As time went on without any apparent change except in the quantity of motion picture subjects on the market, the seriousness of the situation began to impress itself upon every exhibitor who had invested hard-earned money in a theater in the expectation of having the output of the producers improve steadily.

Having been through the penny arcade business myself, I knew that nothing short of a radical change in methods of production would save the photoplay industry, which meant exhibitors as well as producers. I waited patiently for somebody to come to the front and start a revolutionary step, but everybody who entered the producing field seemed to fall into line and work along the same old paths that had been blazed at the very start. Nothing radical was attempted except a few big spectacular pictures of the multiple-reel variety, most of which were imported from abroad.

But these occasional long "features," as they were called, could not possibly be made the backbone of so vast and complex an industry, and it became more and more apparent that the thing which was required by everybody was a program of feature productions, four or five reels in length, conceived from an entirely different standpoint than anything which had been placed on the market up to that time. Having waited, as I said, for someone to enter the field as I at that time had no thought of entering the producing end of the photoplay business myself, I finally decided that it was up to me to save my own theater investments and accordingly determined to become a producer.

Inasmuch as the theatrical business as a whole and stage stars in general seemed to be opposed to motion pictures, it seemed best to tackle the most difficult job first. I accordingly went straight to Daniel Frohman and found in his broad-minded reception of my proposition a new encouragement. I then obtained the rights to an adaptation of the drama "Queen Elizabeth" with which the name of the great Sarah Bernhardt was associated, and had the good fortune to introduce the Divine Sarah herself to the motion picture public in the title role of the photoplay.

What has been accomplished by the five-reel program in the face of a storm of opposition is now a matter of history. In our own case, it has resulted in a $20,000,000 corporation devoted to the production and distribution of photoplays of that type.

Judging the future of the motion picture, not with the eye of a seer or a visionary, but with the record of the past before us, there seems no room for doubt that the next ten years will see as great progress in the art of photoplay production as that which has been recorded in the last decade.

Kalem's Achievements as Pioneer

Treasurer Wright Reviews the Business Career of Company—Sensing What the Public Wants

THERE is satisfaction as well as honor in having been the first to do things that have been pronounced good by competitors—and also by them adopted. The Kalem company holds a record in a motion picture way that is unique. It was a pioneer in the scheme of organizing and sending a company out of the North in the winter time in search of sunshine; in sending a company abroad; in creating a serial that has lasted three years; in identifying its players on the screen and exploiting them; in being the first American concern, or surely among the first, to produce a five-part dramatic subject. And in speaking of this latter accomplishment it is noteworthy that of the older manufacturers Kalem has given less of its attention to features than any other. It has adhered to the shorter subject, and in so doing has been rewarded not only by appreciation on the part of the public, but in a financial way as well.

William Wright.

The Kalem Company was organized in June of 1907 by George Kleine, Samuel Long and Frank J. Marion. The title of the company, as will be seen, was obtained from the initials of the three chiefs and the insertion of a couple of vowels. The first office and plant were at 131 West Twenty-third street. The studio was near Stamford, Conn. Mr. Kleine, as well known, long since withdrew from the company. Mr. Long died July 28, 1915, of typhoid. For ten years before the organization of the Kalem Company, of which he had been president, he had been prominently connected with the Biograph Company. Mr. Marion, now president of Kalem, was out of the city at the time of the writing of this story.

William Wright, treasurer of the company, became associated with Kalem in the winter following the formation of the concern, and was stationed in Chicago.

"I remember the first picture that I handled in the Lake City," said Mr. Wright. "It was 'Washington at Valley Forge.' I think there were eight soldiers in the army. Nevertheless, the largest money-making theater in Chicago, the Orpheum, put it on and featured it for a week. It was not so long after the Kalem Company began business that Mr. Marion conceived the idea of forming a stock company. Up to that time it had been customary for a producer to send out on Broadway or Fourteenth street and pick up his players, usually those who followed vaudeville. It was from those connected with this branch of amusements that most of the early screen actors were recruited. In a majority of cases the other actors were reluctant to play before the camera. 'We'll build up a company on exactly the same lines as if we were sending out a show to play repertoire on the road,' he said.

"Coming into the winter of 1908 conditions for picture-making in New York were unsatisfactory. Photographic results especially were bad. Mr. Marion said the only way to get around the situation was to send a company away from the home plant. The nearest place in his mind was Florida. Mr. Long went to Jacksonville. He had never been there, but on the map it looked all right. His guess proved to be a good one, and he selected a site on Talleyrand avenue, and the Kalem Company has been there ever since. If you will look in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD for December 19, 1908, you will find a photograph of our first company, headed by Sidney Olcott. He and his twelve players were then engaged on the making of their first Southern picture, 'A Florida Feud; or, Love in the Everglades.' By the way, we are to leave Florida soon, as we are consolidating our companies at our studios in Glendale, Cal.

"I was in Chicago when the initial subject produced in the South was put on the market. It was a revelation to the trade. What attracted attention first was the fine photography. Then the acting was far superior to what we had done before; it was along entirely different lines. Our business in Chicago increased a thousand per cent. the first week. In a few weeks the Kalem Company had the reputation of producing real pictures. Exhibitors told us it was the finest photography in America, rivaling that of Pathe, which up to that time had set the pace.

"There had been war pictures made by various companies, the background usually being the Civil War. Naturally, pictures made in the North by Northern manufacturers had portrayed but one side of that conflict. The officers of the Kalem Company were Northerners, and some of their ancestors had fought on the Union side. Mr. Marion suggested it would be a novel thing to make pictures from the Confederate side, and the plan was acted upon. So far as I recollect our company was the only one to follow this policy up to the making of 'The Birth of a Nation.'

"Well, we made Confederate pictures—and you may remember they were a hit—until we began to be flooded with letters from Grand Army men. I recall particularly one writer who relieved his mind by inquiring: 'Does the Kalem Company realize that the Union Army sometimes won a battle in the Civil War?' Following our success in Florida, practically all American companies organized on the stock basis.

"Mr. Marion startled us one morning by announcing he was going to send a company to Ireland to make Irish pictures on Irish soil. A small party was formed under the lead of Sidney Olcott. Mr. Olcott selected Beaufort for his headquarters. Pictures were made on and around the Lakes of Killarney and in the Gap of Dunloe. The great majority of the character parts in our Irish pictures were portrayed by the natives of the soil. Their work compared favorably with that of high-priced character actors, because they were portraying things they knew all about.

"In our first year in Ireland—there were two visits subsequently—all sites were exterior. I remember that to one of the pictures was given the name of 'The Lad from Old Ireland.' Of that subject we sold in London alone 160 prints—a record-breaking achievement for a thousand-foot picture.

"We were afraid the English producers would flock to Ireland to make pictures, but not a soul did. The next year we went again. From the widow of Dion Boucicault we purchased the rights of 'The Colleen Bawn' and 'The Shaughraun.' The former was photographed in authentic locations, one of which was the Colleen Bawn rock in the Lakes of Killarney. For this production we had made three and six sheet posters, which were the first of that size to be used in exploiting a picture. On this second Irish trip several three-reel productions resulted.

"Unless I am very much mistaken, the Kalem Company also was the first to exploit its players with the public, to reveal their names and circulate their photographs to exhibitors. We believed it would be popular with the public. That it was is history."

"What about the inception of 'From the Manger to the Cross'?" Mr. Wright was asked.

"After the return from Ireland the second year," Mr. Wright replied, "Mr. Marion made the remark he regretted the company had not been held on the other side. I told him I believed it would have been a good plan to have it go to the Holy Land for the making of religious subjects. He jumped at the suggestion. Within ten minutes he had sent a telegram to Olcott, instructing him to report in New York with his company just as soon as he had completed the picture in hand. We arranged to augment the personnel of Mr. Olcott's forces. We purchased the four volumes of Tissot's Illustrated Bible as well as the books of a noted German architect who had made a study of the lines of Biblical structures. So you see we were prepared to reproduce costumes and buildings according to the judgment of the best authorities.

"The history of that expedition is interesting—a review of the many incidents and adventures would fill a book. We obtained much valuable advice and assistance from Mr. Marion's friend, E. Alexander Powell, former consul general at Alexandria. As the company could not work to advantage in Palestine in the winter, many pictures were taken in Egypt, about the Nile and around Luxor, where we installed a plant. We made a missionary picture in which appeared genuine missionaries and Africans. There were only two white persons in the cast.

"In the spring the company went to Palestine to record on film the life of the Saviour. 'From the Manger to the Cross' is so well known it is unnecessary to speak at length on it. I am inclined to think it was the first subject other than a topical to come from the studio of an American manufacturer in a length of five reels. It stands today the same length."

"That picture encountered some opposition when first shown, did it not?" the WORLD man inquired.

"Yes, it did," was the reply. "But that was dissipated when the subject was seen. It is growing in popularity every day. You may be interested in knowing the picture is making more money with each succeeding year. How much has it returned in profit to date? Well, I would say roughly, between $350,000 and $400,000. We have calls from all over the country for it every Easter. All but two prints are retained in our home office. It was my impression that 'From the Manger to the Cross' was the first subject for which special music was written. You remember the initial showing at Wanamaker's auditorium? That was an event at the time in motion picture circles—and in religious, as well.

"The picture was the first, too, to receive large newspaper publicity. One great New York journal printed two pages about it and later issued a special eight-page supplement. The London papers, including the exclusive London Graphic, treated it on the same generous scale."

"What about your experience with series?"

"It has been most satisfactory. One of these, that of the railroad, has continued for three years, right up to the end of last month. It has made a record in several ways. The Kalem Company is strong for series."

Dodging Detectives

Independent producers still have a lively recollection of the earlier days of their business existence when they had to keep their cameras under cover when taking pictures. Motion Picture Patents Company detectives were everywhere looking for evidence of infringement. Many were the devices resorted to by the "independents" to keep their cameras away from prying eyes. Often an innocent grocer's delivery wagon masked a battery of cameras when street or other exterior scenes were being taken. If the detectives got too close the wagon would drive leisurely away and the players would disperse to meet under less annoying conditions. Cameramen with dummy cameras would seem to be taking a scene and thus engage the attention of the detective while the real work was being done elsewhere. Those were the happy days.

Actor Who Played Christ Now in Trenches

R. Henderson Bland, the English actor who was engaged by the Kalem Company to impersonate the Christ of "From the Manger to the Cross," is now an officer in the British army and is probably, if still alive, with the British Expeditionary forces in Mesopotamia fighting the Turks. Remembering some of the unpleasant experiences with the Turkish officials at Jerusalem while working in the Kalem picture it is not unlikely that Mr. Bland will improve the opportunity now offered him to even up some old scores.

Looking Back By Thomas H. Ince

Noted Director Tells How He Made His Start in Motion Pictures

SO MANY and drastic have been the changes—so swift has been the advancement—of the motion picture industry during the past ten years, that it staggers me when I recall what it was like when I entered it, and then reflect on what it is today. Time has wrought wonders; a little more than a half decade has seen the business outgrow its age of experimentation and assume the aspect of a world institution. And thus it is that we, who at one time looked down with scorn upon the lowly moving picture, have occasion to rejoice, now that we are having a hand in giving to the people of the world their most beloved form of entertainment.

I am frank to admit that I was one of those who regarded the moving picture with contempt. Reared in the atmosphere of the theater, I grew to look with disdain upon this new art—this art which had been given its start in Coney Island beer-gardens and the like. But an unexpected meeting with an erstwhile friend, during the fall of 1910, converted me in a measure.

Returning to New York, following the termination of a stock engagement in the middle west, I found myself in need of a job. I was walking along Broadway, when I nearly collided with an automobile. As I stepped aside to allow the machine to pass, its occupant shouted a salutation at me, and then I observed that he was a man who had worked for me in vaudeville some months previous.

I always had believed I was a better actor than he; and yet there he was riding in an automobile, something which I, of course, had coveted but never owned. He told me he was working in moving pictures, and advised me to "take a flyer" at them myself.

That night, sadly in need of work, I decided to follow his suggestion. So I went up to the old Imp studio on 101st street and applied. Tom Cochrane, who was then in charge, must have thought me a good type for a certain part in one of the current productions, for he offered me five dollars a day, which I readily accepted.

Scarcely had the picture been completed when I was summoned to the Biograph studio. And whether it was because someone very kindly had boosted me, or whether favorable reports of my performances at the Imp had leaked out, I do not know; at any rate, I was offered ten dollars a day. But I held out for fifteen; and after I had parleyed for some minutes over the matter, my request was taken to the director-general and he recommended the payment of my terms.

I worked in only one picture for the Biograph, however, for the Imp people offered me a position with the promise that I would be given the first directorial berth that presented itself. And this was what I wanted. I felt that directing was my vocation.

When the opportunity came and was given to me, there were many expressions of disapproval on the part of some of the studio's "veterans," but even in the face of this rather discouraging environment I seemed to progress.

One day I escorted Carl Laemmle, who was president of the Imp Company, to the Fourteenth Street Theater to sit in judgment upon the first picture I had directed. Throughout the show I continued to implore him to listen to the laudations from all parts of the house, but he didn't have a chance to hear anything, for I kept telling him too unbrokenly what a wonderful picture it was.

He left the house in such an enthusiastic frame of mind that not long thereafter he sent me to Cuba, at the head of a company. I remained there a good part of the year.

Upon my return to New York, I resigned from the Imp when I learned that there was a possibility of my being engaged by Messrs. Kessel and Baumann. They wanted to send a director to the coast to make pictures at their little Edendale plant, and preferring to take a chance on being "it" in Edendale rather than "nit" in New York, I applied for the position. It was given me and I started some weeks later for California, full of energy and plans.

My outlook, upon arrival and investigation of conditions in Edendale, was very discouraging. There was no scenery; the experienced actors totaled about three—and funds were not very plentiful. The little troupe that had been encamped there for a year or more turning out the Bison pictures was, however, optimistic and I simply made up my mind to get along.

For several months we continued to use this so-called plant at Edendale. Then, one day, I hit upon the idea of putting on some Indian and cowboy pictures in the mountain passes down Santa Monica way. So I leased the land and contracted with the Miller Brothers for the use of their entire stock, the "101 Ranch Show" having just at that time arrived at one of the nearby beach resorts for the winter months.

"War on the Plains" was the first of a series. And, because this measured two reels in length, many believed it would not be welcomed. It was, however, and the reception it was given inspired me to greater efforts. Then came "Custer's Last Fight" and still later the war picture "The Battle of Gettysburg."

Abandoning the brand name "Bison," we changed the name of our plays to "Broncho." And with the subsequent increase in the number of weekly productions, we adopted "Kay-Bee" and "Domino." The rest of our company's history is of comparatively recent happening—the affiliation with Mutual, the subsequent inception of the Triangle program and the attendant expansion of facilities wherewith to make our five-part subjects.

It has been an eventful decade, and my sincere wish is that the next ten years will prove an even greater era for everyone engaged in the upbuilding of this our new and growing art.

Twelve Years in One Studio---A Record By William Shea

Vitagraph Veteran Describes Early Days Before the Camera—How He Died Twice in One Scene

THEY tell me around the Vitagraph lot that in point of service I am the oldest of the Vitagraph players.

Well, I have been with the company twelve years—was with it before the present magnificent studios were dreamed of. I think it may be said in all modesty that in that time I have played many parts—in fact, paraphrasing Lord Byron, I recall one single-reel subject in which I did fifteen of 'em. My recollection is distinct that I was employed in the beginning as an actor, but frequently it happened before the day's work was done I had been painter, property man, messenger, electrician, carpenter and general utility man as well.

In those primitive days of pictures I would be asked by my employers to take a trip up town, in the sections where usually are to be found actors seriously considering which of several large offers they will accept and in the meantime not always spending enormous sums of money on the "eats," and see what might be done in securing extra actors. Do you know I tramped up and down Broadway for

The first big picture taken at Flatbush was "Julius Caesar," and I played First Citizen, and led with the "shouts." During the taking of this picture a dog spoiled two hundred feet of film by walking into the scene during Antony's oration. "Julius Caesar" was also the means of my getting a raise in salary, because of money I saved the firm. I was sent to town for 100 pairs of brown tights, with instructions to get them in a hurry. Unable to locate more than seven pairs, I conceived the idea of using brown paint. This saved the firm about $60, but lost them the service of a number of actors who had been inveigled into using the paint on their limbs in lieu of tights.

Moving picture actors were scarce in those days and many a time I doubled several times in the same picture. "The Servant Girl's Problem" is one I call to mind in which I played five different parts, three separate and distinct old maids and two character parts, a Jew and a Dutchman, and when the picture was finished it reminded me of a performance of a typical old-fashioned ten, twenty and thirty repertoire company—all action and no sense. "The Life of Washington" was another early picture in which I played fifteen parts, and in one scene, "At Valley Forge," I was compelled to die twice. This picture is still being shown.

In those early days there were no regularly equipped studios; only two rooms with no place to keep wardrobe or properties. If any special "prop" or scene was wanted the actors were called upon to make it. Frequently, when a picture was to be filmed, actors in costume came from all directions, some with hammers, some with saws, others with paint brushes or any tool they happened to be using at the time. In the picture "Romeo and Juliet" the balcony scene was forgotten until the last minute, and the actor who was playing Romeo had to build his own balcony. Even the office was stripped of all loose articles that could be used for "props." On one occasion a director had the safe moved to the "studio" and very important papers could not be obtained until the scene being filmed was over. Properties and furniture that could not be made were borrowed from neighbors.

There were two very important items that used to worry us—dressing rooms and lunch. The men when they had to make a change used to get in a corner and have three or four actors stand in front of them. These were called "living dressing rooms." The ladies were compelled to change in some convenient house. Lunch was the vital issue. The only place where we could get anything to eat was run by a woman, who after three months' profitable business married and closed up shop. Arrangements were then made to bring the lunch in hampers from New York. A couple of boards on horses served as a table and the sandwiches, pie, cake, and other eatables were spread out so as to be within easy reach. "Ladies first" was the rule, but the first lady to reach for a sandwich sounded the signal for a six o'clock rush and the modest got—nothing.

As there were no stock companies in those days the players were paid every night. Five dollars a day was the usual amount, except in special instances where an actor was called upon to play a particularly hard part, or some part that required special qualifications; then as high as $25 was paid, but this did not occur often. From two to three dollars extra was made when chases were put on or some extra stunt pulled off. It was usually a case many an hour with the thermometer 102 degrees in the shade, begging actors to allow the Vitagraph Company to hand them a five-dollar bill for a few hours work? One in twenty would accept, but every last one of them would "touch" me for twenty-five or fifty cents to tide them over until the next day. Then, perhaps, they would show up for work and perhaps not—more oftener not, as they knew I always had money, and gambled on the chance of my being touchable again when I wanted actors.

Before the Flatbush studio was built all pictures were taken on the roof of the Morton Building, 116 Nassau street, New York, the original home of the Vitagraph. After the building of the Flatbush studio, interior scenes were taken at the Nassau street address and exterior scenes at Flatbush. In a picture that had both interior and exterior scenes it was a case of collecting all necessary wardrobe and props and moving to Flatbush. It must have been a sight to see fifteen or twenty people get off a train, some carrying bundles and boxes with a sword or spear sticking out, a little bit of a fellow struggling along with a big suit of armor, and various other bulky properties distributed among the members of the party, but it was part of the game. Very few of the actors kicked and the populace became used to seeing us doing all kinds of stunts.

of a fight among the actors to be among the ones to jump into the water, over a cliff or off a building, so as to be able to put their names down for the extra money.

When I first went into the work, the pictures looked like a series of athletic scenes; simply motion—running, jumping, tumbling, with rapid movement of hands, arms and legs. Nothing that portrayed human passion. Now it is poetry in every movement—expression, which tells a story of what is taking place in the human heart; the depiction of love, hate, revenge, malice, joy—all thrillingly shown on the screen.

Before playing before the camera I had served a number of years in the legitimate. Three years I was in a stock company in Albany, N. Y., under the management of John W. Albaugh; I played with Edwin Booth, Joseph Jefferson, Lawrence Barrett, Maggie Mitchell, Lotta, Clara Morris, the elder Salvini, the late J. K. Emmett, Ada Rehan Mrs. Fiske (who was then Minnie Maddern) and many traveling combinations.

I have often been asked the question: "Do you prefer the screen to the stage?" Well, they both have their own peculiar charm, but to an old fellow like me the pictures have added lure in their elimination of uncertainty.

The Vitagraph firm has been very kind to me. The exhibitors have stood for me during many years before them on the screen, and the public seems to appreciate my efforts to please. I am satisfied—I wouldn't be a Christian if I asked for any more.

Greatest Force in World for Progress By Francis X. Bushman

Well-known Player Recalls His Entrance to Screendom and Sees Great Things for Pictures

MY ENTRANCE into the motion picture field was accidental. My attention was first drawn to pictures while playing in theatrical companies. In stock one has little time for anything but study; and after study come rehearsals, performances, and then more study. My only recreation at this time was the moving picture theater, and I found it very relaxing. Like other "fans," very soon I came to know the players, had my favorites and would watch the lithographs and lobby display for their appearance. Their attraction was irresistible.

Later when I broke down under the strain of stock work and was offered an engagement with a well-known motion picture concern I was delighted. Being a lover of the open, I felt that it would mean recuperation, and, better still, I would be able to remain in one locality sufficiently long to establish a home where I could have some social activity and real comfort.

Fortunately for me I made good on my first picture. But again came the call of the spoken drama, and an excellent opportunity was offered me. I was on the point of accepting it, but Theodore "Pop" Wharton convinced me that the motion picture field held out more and larger opportunities, and I there and then determined to remain in it. That will conclude my reminiscing.

I am far more interested in the worth of motion pictures and their wonderful possibilities than in personal anecdote. I have seen the motion picture industry grow to its present proportions and expect to see it attain a growth that will be one of the wonders of the world. I believe that even at present it is the world's greatest and most popular amusement, and has the greatest influence for good that the world has ever known—greater than the press or pulpit. Reaching as it does all nations and all classes, it constitutes itself the only practical Esperanto that is understood by the whole world, regardless of intelligence or illiteracy. The motion picture takes its wholesome lessons into all sections and preaches its sermons to those who know nothing of churches or creeds.

I believe, too, the tendency of the motion picture is to weld together those of every nation who are banded for good, for as we travel via the screen we will gradually come to realize that we are all brothers of God's family. It is an acknowledged fact that the mental retina retains more accurately what is visualized.

The poor who live in cheap, ugly homes and have never had an opportunity of visiting or seeing homes of comfort and great beauty are not only transported to elegantly furnished establishments in all parts of the world, but they are encouraged and educated in the exercise of good taste and refinement. Then, too, they are carried to cities of beauty and witness architectural wonders and structural triumphs only hitherto heard or dreamed of. In fact, many people have received their first introduction to nature by means of the motion picture.

All this has its effect on the home, or at least ought to. Imitation is inherent in all classes. Therefore, it is not difficult of imagination to find that the appealing and admirable conditions of living shown on the screen instill new ideas in the watcher and make him abhor whatsoever is unclean and unlovely. Thus the motion picture encourages the love of the beautiful and makes the appeal in a definite and retentive manner.

There is, too, a great moral uplift in the motion picture. Nearly every photoplay has its moral. Virtue is invariably triumphant, while vice has its corresponding punishment. Its teachings are not inculcated through fear, as is too often the case in church methods. The motion picture inspires by means of its visualized lesson; it makes virtue attractive and vice repellent; points to sin as the one thing retarding physical and spiritual growth. And because of all this I believe the motion picture theater should be encouraged and multiplied and kept open on Sundays. It keeps men from the saloon, the pool parlor and the cabaret and other forms of amusement that are not agents for health or morals.

The saloon keeper will tell you that his business suffers not from the proximity or activity of the churches, but from the nearby motion picture theaters.

Perhaps some reader may be inclined to think that I praise too fondly the industry with which I have the honor to be connected. But I wish him or her to remember that I have watched the motion picture field from every angle and viewpoint during my almost seven years as a player and am able to verify every claim I have made.

The motion picture art and industry have kept pace with the world's progress. They are no longer in swaddling clothes, but stand Jovellike among the world's wonders. The manufacturer wishes at all times to give the public the best in pictures—the actor should dream of nothing else. Some of our largest producers have risked hundreds of thousands of dollars in their efforts to encourage and elevate the tastes of the public.

So I conclude confidently that the motion picture industry has illimitable possibilities; is the greatest invention of the age; is provocative of moral uplift; needs not so much censorship but governmental encouragement, and is today the greatest force in the world for progress and for good.

The Actor in the Early Days ☼ ☼ ☼ ☼ ☼ ☼ ☼ By Paul Panzer

Reminiscent Review of the Beginning of Motion Picture Production

IN A CRUDE "studio" high up on the roof of an office building on Twenty-first street, between Fourth avenue and Broadway, I began my motion picture career. That was in 1905, and a picture called "Stolen by Gypsies" was being made by the Edison company. This picture was directed and photographed by Edwin S. Porter, later one of the founders of the Famous Players company.

After I had finished my work in the Edison picture I was engaged by the Vitagraph company. The Vitagraph studio at that time was also on the roof of an office building—the Morton Building, at No. 116 Nassau street—and well do I remember that "studio." The stage was a rough platform measuring about twelve by fifteen feet. The entire scenic equipment consisted of a wooden fence that surrounded the stage. There were two windows of different size in this fence, which was used as a background for all scenes. The fence had also a simple door, which upon occasion could be converted into a double door. J. Stuart Blackton was the director. He also acted in front of the camera. Albert E. Smith was the man at the crank. In these surroundings there were produced such pictures as "Monsieur Beaucaire," "Oliver Twist" and comedies of every description—all in single reels. Exteriors in those days had to be taken on the run. I remember that we were twice arrested for masquerading on the streets. But Mr. Blackton bailed us out both times.

We must have furnished a lot of amusement for the occupants of the structures surrounding the Morton Building, for every time we were at work there every window within reach of the eye held its capacity quota of spectators. I am quite sure that there was little office work done in that immediate neighborhood when we were "shooting," because most of the office employees were equipped with field glasses. They were generous with their applause, too.

After the Vitagraph company had made quite a number of pictures on the roof, property was purchased on Elm avenue and the Brighton Beach line, Flatbush. This little plot of ground was the nucleus of what has since grown to be one of the greatest of motion picture institutions. And it was when we began work in Flatbush that we had our first salaried director—the late William V. Ranous. I believe, too, that he was the first man to receive a regular salary as a motion picture director. He was a Shakespearean actor of the late Salvini school and a most capable man. Under his direction Vitagraph produced "Macbeth," "Richard the Third," "Othello," "Romeo and Juliet," "King Lear" and other Shakespearean plays. These were all in one reel each. Those are the days that I remember best. We built our own scenery and props, and we certainly must have presented an incongruous sight, doing carpenter work and painting canvas while we were dressed in the costumes of Shakespeare's time. After we had built a set we threw saw, hammer and paint brush aside and stepped on to the stage and assumed the characters drawn by the immortal Bard.

In this connection there is one thing that stands out with cameo clearness in my memory. There was a happy trio at the studio—a little girl named Florence Turner, a young man named Hector Dion and myself. Mr. Dion and I built our own frames for the scenery, and Miss Turner sewed the canvas together on a borrowed sewing machine. When all was ready, we three would tack the canvas on the frame. For these services we received the munificent salary of $14 a week; but we got $3 a day extra when we played in pictures. As a memento of those times Mr. Blackton still has one of the rough battle axes that I made of wood for the production of "Macbeth." We begged, borrowed, leased, bought and sold props of any and all descriptions.

It was then that such now-famous folks as Julia Gordon Swain, Charles Kent, Bill Shea, Ralph Ince, John Adolphi, Walter Ackerman and Edith Storey were making their debut in moving pictures. The late Bill Phillips was also among the group. Miss Storey made her first appearance as a page boy in "Francesca Da Rimini," a one-reeler of which we were all very proud.

Four years after I entered motion pictures I ventured, in my own mind, into a splendid proposition. I organized an independent concern known as the "Pantograph Corporation." It lasted just six months, and I was "broke." I then joined the forces of Pathe Freres, who had just organized an American company with a temporary studio in Jersey City. Production was under the direction of Louis J. Gasnier, whose wonderful adaptability to American methods and whose aptitude in combining the best of French art with the best of American art put him in the front ranks of motion picture geniuses.

Again, until the permanent studio was completed, I worked under primitive conditions. Theodore Wharton selected me for the lead in a picture called "The Gambler's End," with Octavia Handworth and Baby Handworth. I obtained the leading part in rather a humorous manner. Mr. Wharton had selected a natural type for the part—a man who looked like a gambler—but the poor fellow could neither act nor ride horseback. I happened to drop into the studio that day. Mr. Wharton welcomed me with open arms. I took the other fellow's clothes and the scenes that had been exposed were re-taken. After that picture Mr. Gasnier offered me a salaried position in stock which, at that time, staggered me. Then came five happy years, finishing with the wonderful serial "The Perils of Pauline." On the strength of that serial's success I received a flattering offer from John J. Quigley, of Boston. Under this offer I toured the New England States, appearing in person in Poli's and Loew's houses. This was a delightful and successful tour, in which I met thousands of my admirers face to face. They called me "The Beloved Villain."

Upon my return from that tour it was my desire to again play hero parts. But such was not my fortune. Once more I was doomed to a role of deep-dyed villainy in the sixteen-episode serial "Jimmie Dale, Alias the Grey Seal," which was produced by the Monmouth Film Corporation under the direction of Harry McRae Webster.

One Decade of Picture Acting ☐ ☐ ☐ ☐ By Hobart Bosworth

Veteran of Screen Triumphs Tells How He Got Started and How It Looks to Him Now

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD celebrates its tenth anniversary with this number, and what wonderful things have been accomplished and registered in its numbers during that decade! What a history of the very beginnings of our vast new art and industry—for it is both—its numbers have recorded! It has been for all of us a groping in the dark, step by step, over unknown ground, beset by a thousand difficulties. We had too little money to start, and suddenly it began to pour in on us so rapidly that it swamped us, and I often think clogged our growth by giving us a too commercial view of our work, caused too much wastage, and a smug content with things as they were.

I remember—such a few years back—the flat assertion made by many manufacturers that "exhibitors and public would never stand for pictures more than one reel long." And by contrast I heard a great director the other day, working on a twelve-reel feature, complain to a member of his staff that he was "as careless as though he were working on some miserable little five-reeler." As I heard him my thoughts harked back to the time we made "Monte Cristo" in three reels and wondered how we were ever going to manage our huge task.

Not in the history of the world has anything attained to like proportions in so short a time. We have had no preparation, no education, no technique, no history or traditions, no precedent. We have made, and are making, these things in all departments as we go along. Our photography keeps pace with our directing and sets and stories. We have had to learn by growth and mistakes only, groping our way into a pathless new country. What amazing progress we have made in those ten years! Astounding! Almost inconceivable!

We had to live down laughter and contemptuous disregard of our work. Take my own case: I had been an actor for many years, but broken health sent me to the Southwest. Only a very few months after the first issue of the WORLD a quiet-voiced gentleman called and asked me to play a moving picture. I was shocked, almost insulted. I had never seen one and didn't want to. I thought of my traditions—that Augustin Daly would turn in his grave if I so demeaned myself. I gave a decided refusal, but the quiet gentleman, who surprised me by not dressing and talking like a cheap circus man, said they were trying to improve the pictures by inducing better actors to work in them, and pleaded as a sop to my pride that no one would ever see me, that my picture would only be shown on Main street. The money tempted me and I fell—fell, too, in love with the work on my very first picture, and have worked, body and soul, for them ever since. The shoe is on the other foot now, isn't it? The only "legitimate actors" who have not yet appeared on the screen are those who are waiting to be asked.

Also we had to live down the contemptuous disregard of the press. I remember the eager joy with which I cut out a clipping from the editorial column of the Los Angeles Examiner, referring in a kindly and patronizing way to the possibilities of the motion pictures, and sent it to Mr. Selig. Surely we have come a long way since then.

My thoughts revert to the little shabby yard where began the growth of the colossal industry here in Los Angeles—where we made that little first one-reeler less than ten years ago. And I think of the wonderful studio in which I'm now working! It's like a dream!

As old Justice Shallow said:

Big Profits Ten Years Ago By George Kleine

President of K-E-S-E Gives Illuminating Comparison of Conditions Then and Now

MERELY to touch upon a few of the high spots or matters of importance that should be included in an article giving a retrospect of the past ten years in the motion picture industry consumes a large part of the entire issue of the World. The subject is so vast and space so limited that I shall not attempt it along these lines. However, a comparison between conditions in March, 1907, and March, 1917, will be illuminating.

The industry having found its commercial birth in 1896, an interval of eleven years had elapsed at the beginning of this period. There were not many manufacturers or exchanges in the United States during the early years. The sale of projecting machines was almost as important as the sale of films, the latter being limited in variety of subjects, and sales usually made to traveling exhibitors who would buy a few hundred to a few thousand feet and carry their stock from place to place, making additions rarely. The bulk of the business consisted of the sale of outfits which included a moving picture machine with stereopticon attachment, moving picture films of various lengths—from fifty to six or seven hundred feet—a few dozen lantern slides, stock paper, whose maximum size was about one-half of the present one-sheet; a calcium light outfit for oxy-hydrogen gases and frequently a cheap Edison Home Phonograph with a few dozen records. These peripatetics helped to sustain the dealers by an occasional purchase of supplies for making gases and a set of song slides.

In March, 1907, moving picture theaters that rented films from exchanges had just found themselves. Nickelodeons were springing up all over the United States, particularly in the larger cities, and in such great numbers that manufacturers of projecting machines could not fill all orders. Film exchanges then in existence had, with very few exceptions, started within the past year. They were poorly organized; prices were unstable and were largely guess work so far as they were based upon estimated expense for wear and tear of films; machine operators were not expert, and serious damage to films in projection was frequent. The length of subjects in this country had not yet been standardized to one thousand feet.

Manufacturers were at sea as to the quantity of new footage or number of subjects necessary to supply the demand weekly. I remember discussing this question with an eastern film manufacturer at that time, and he stoutly maintained that the entire demand would be satisfied by an issue of "eight subjects weekly," it being understood that subjects were of variable length, from about four to eight hundred feet each. Contrasting the conditions of that time with those of today we have in place of the nickel theater that seated from ninety to two hundred and fifty people the many picture palaces involving investments in single ventures as high as one million dollars. The program of 1907 consisted of about one thousand feet of film, of one or more subjects, changed twice weekly. This program was projected in some theaters as often as thirty times daily. It was this that made it possible for theaters of one hundred seats, charging five cents admission, to return fancy profits to their owners. The cost per foot of negative was possibly one-tenth of the cost today.

In those days manufacturers made heavy profits on their investments, and exchanges that started with a shoe-string in capital or without capital, by renting films from a few old concerns in order to subrent them to exhibitors, made big profits. Today manufacturers are gasping for financial breath owing largely to the exorbitant salaries being paid to stars; exhibitors are paying high rentals for films, and most distributing concerns are losing money. I believe that the testimony which has been given recently before the New York State Committee as to the unprofitable condition of the business is justified by the facts.

I had intended making some comments upon the trade press of then and now, but I have probably used more than the six hundred words allotted and will pause.

C. B. Burkhardt Reviews Picture Experience and Pays Tribute to the Moving Picture World.

IT was in February, 1904, or thereabout, that I first broke into the moving picture game. I bought my first machine, an Edison One Pin, in Chicago from Carl Laemmle. Any flicker? Well, yes.

At that time if we received a four-reel program with two or less repeats in it we thought it was "some" film service. At the present time I am paying about twice as much for service as in the old days, and it makes me smile when I read about some of the exhibitors of today "hollering" about having to put up a deposit that they eventually get back. How would they have felt about paying the fees of the Moving Pictures Patent Company of $2 per week to run your own machine? This meant $104 per year, payable in advance, and it had to be paid or the exchanges would refuse to send you your film. Of course there were independent exchanges from which film could be rented, but their stock of films and subjects were not of the best at the start.

In all the thirteen years which I have been exhibiting pictures I have missed only two weeks. This was on account of the Board of Health closing all my places. I operated the machine at all my shows, and in the early days could obtain only a plain resistance coil. Later on I purchased a set down transformer which was much better, of course, than the coil. My last purchase was a G. E. Mercury arc rectifier, after which I had no more trouble with light.

After using the Edison One Pin for some time I bought an Edison Model B, but am now using a Powers 6-B. My first screen of plain muslin, later coated with whiting, has now been replaced by a Minusa Gold Fiber screen. After worrying along with my machines for some time, I remember one day receiving a vest-pocket manual on operating moving picture machines. It was sent out by some film exchange, and was Mr. Richardson's first attempt. I have also a personal letter from Mr. Richardson with regard to operating a machine, and the way of resistance was hooked up to a 500-volt trolley wire proposition which I had at Homer Park.

The first copy of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD that I ever saw I bought at Champaign. It has certainly grown right along with the picture game, never lagging behind, but always in the lead and away ahead of all of us who followed its many helping suggestions and developments. I have always enjoyed reading the operator's column more than any other part of it. Of late years it has discussed a lot of things that I have not the time to get posted on; but it is surely making a lot of good operators all over the country. Through the efforts of Mr. Richardson most of them are expert electricians today.

In looking over some of my old books I find that the receipts have not always kept up with the expenses. But then think of the difference between investments now and when I started. When I entered the game I do not suppose that my investment amounted to much over $150, and today it represents $4,000. I own my theater, but am not showing in door receipts over $15 per week more than in the early days with the small investment. The fact remains that if I had not made the improvements some one else would, and why should I worry as long as the pictures paid the bills?

One more thing that old-timers will remember as perhaps the hardest to overcome was the small fuse at the power station. How many remember putting the whole town in darkness through blowing the main fuse? I used to have a circuit of six towns where I gave a show once a week. The first time around I blew the main fuse in every one of these towns. I have found out since that time that my trouble came from using 30-35 amperes A. C. I now use 65 amperes on direct side. Carbons were then five-eighths inch above and one-half inch below, and now one inch above cored and five-eighths inch solid below.

May the business continue to grow in the next ten years as rapidly as it has in the past. If so it will certainly be "some business."

The Advance in Theater Decoration By A. F. Powers

Designer for Decorators Supply Co., of Chicago, Tells of Rapid Development of Structural Artistry

THE development of the motion picture theater in the past ten years, viewed from the standpoint of its decorative features, has been so rapid that it could only properly be recorded on a moving picture film. It has kept pace with the rapid development of the quality of the pictures produced, which is saying a great deal.

The present standard of this whole wonderful industry and its foremost place in the amusement world are due fully as much to the development of the artistic and magnificent surroundings of the theater building as to the quality of the pictures produced. However, one must not forget that credit is due the pioneer of this industry who blazed the trail with his little store show, and created in the amusement-loving public the desire for entertainment that made possible the present-day theaters.

A. F. Powers.

It is only natural that in an industry that was entirely new and that grew by leaps and bounds progress should be made by natural evolution from the embryonic state in which the returns from the investment were purely speculative, in exact ratio to the confidence of the exhibitor and producer in the possibilities and permanence of the popularity of this new form of amusement.

The decoration and ornamentation of the first theater was confined to the fronts and lobbies chiefly, as it was considered necessary mainly to attract the patrons with the flash of decorations and illumination which would get them in and introduce them to this new form of entertainment. This was, in a way, the proper procedure in the beginning. Enterprising exhibitors, however, soon realized that artistically decorated and comfortable interiors were necessary to permanently hold the patronage already gained, and to induce the better class of patrons to attend.

The pioneer exhibitor was also handicapped greatly by his inability to get in touch with the proper specialists to produce an artistic and well arranged theater, especially so in localities far removed from commercial centers, and with the unfamiliarity of the local architects and contractors with the necessities involved.

The proper decoration of a theater does not mean alone the application of the ornamentation to the front and interior, but includes a comprehensive study of the proper arrangement of the whole building, both from an artistic and practical view. It is therefore necessary, in order to produce a theater that will meet all the requirements, that the architect or designer be familiar with the theater business in all its angles, and should be an expert in this particular line so as to be in a position to give his client the benefit of his experience.

Inasmuch as the decorations of a theater adds to the comfort of the patron through his appreciation of artistic surroundings, the whole arrangement of the theater should be carefully considered by the designer, such as the proper seating arrangement, the incline of the floor of auditorium and balcony and the manner and convenience of ingress and egress. All these points affect the comfort of the patrons. In fact, it is impossible to produce a wholly satisfactory theater unless the designer is thoroughly conversant with the motion picture industry in all its departments.

Let us hope for the good of the whole industry that it will continue to progress in the next ten years as it has in the past ten, and that the motion picture public will see better pictures and better theaters. We are sure that the exhibitor will see not only larger audiences, but better patrons, because of the education and culture produced by splendid productions and artistic surroundings.

Filling the Raw Film Demand

Eastman Kodak Company's Struggle to Perfect Quality and Supply Demand Have Been Boon to Motion Picture Industry

SEVERAL years ago an official of the Eastman Kodak Company went on a sightseeing tour through one of the New York motion picture studios. In the carpenter shop he noted a large spick-and-span stairway and said to his guide, an officer of the studio:

"Hello, what's this—a stairway going nowhere?"

"Yea, dang it," the studio man replied. "We used to paint 'em in the scenery, but you fellows make your films so blamed good that they showed us up in great shape. We have to show the real thing nowadays."

This incident epitomizes the results of a definite trend in the manufacture of Eastman cinematograph film. In the first big rush days of the industry motion pictures were, of course, in the novelty class and crudities could easily creep into stage settings. Even in the first hey-day period, however, those at the helm for the Kodak company kept their ears close to the ground and tried to sense what the future requirements would be. Quality then, as now, was of paramount consideration; but the company went further and made elaborate preparations for the future. Consequently, as the demand for film stock grew, the Eastman Kodak Company was ready with the goods and prepared to make shipments promptly, without a hitch. Naturally the company looks back with pride at this preparedness record and feels that it too has played no small part in placing the motion picture industry on the high level that it now occupies.

It takes a great deal of time and incidentally a great deal of money to prepare for the manufacture of a cinematograph film of high average quality in the large quanties necessary for present-day production or, for that matter, to prepare for such great increases in production as have been necessary in the past. And to keep ahead of the demand and always be ready for big business as the Eastman Kodak Company has done requires vision and pluck—the vision to anticipate every demand and the pluck to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars as a toll for preparedness.

To put its film on a high-quality basis the company has always made a special effort to obtain the best and purest of raw materials, which are worked together in the cleanest of surroundings. Every roll of film is examined and re-examined and subjected to repeated tests for quality, mechanical strength, speed, etc. A research laboratory has been organized in which trained scientists and photographers are continually delving into fundamental problems and searching for new ideas and improvements; but no change in the manufacture of any product is instituted until comprehensive trials and tests have been made. Service has always been an important watch-word. Orders are filled promptly and a large staff of men is employed in the field who are in close touch with the producers and keep the company posted about their requirements.

The demand for cinematograph film, which was at first for simple amusements only, has grown tremendously in the past ten years, and is, of course, still greatest and most varied in the amusement field. But new uses for the film are continually being found. The straight commercial use of film for advertising and selling purposes is increasing and in medicine the advantages of motion pictures for illustrating clinical lectures, special operations, etc., are becoming more and more apparent. The educational features of motion pictures in other directions are also growing in favor. Motion-picture outfits now form a part of most every naturalist's and travelogue lecturer's equipment. With the many new demands for film the responsibilities of the manufacturer naturally have increased many fold. The Eastman Kodak Company, however, is stronger than ever for preparedness and will exert every possible effort and means to produce high grade film to meet all the varied needs of the industry in the future, just as it has done in the past.

Optimistic Mechanical Outlook By Donald J. Bell

Donald J. Bell Talks About Progress of Mechanical Side of Industry in Past Ten Years—Predicts Continuance

THE purpose of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD to celebrate the tenth anniversary of its entry into the motion picture field is altogether commendable. The history of the industry has, for the most part, been made during the past ten years. It is surely worth while to study history as well as to make it, and we may well spend some time in reviewing the past in order that we may profit by its lessons.

Twenty years have passed since I secured a position as an operator and began to acquire a knowledge of the motion picture business in the School of Experience. The work fascinated me because of the tremendous possibilities of the motion picture, and I early determined to find my life work in the motion picture industry. It was natural that my attention should be attracted to the mechanical side of the business and that, as the years passed, the mechanical problems of the industry should command an increasing portion of my time and thought.

This tendency has found expression in the policy of the Bell & Howell Company, wherein association with Mr. Albert S. Howell, we have sought to solve important mechanical problems in the interest of increased economy and efficiency.

The motion picture industry of twenty—or even ten—years ago was a standardless industry. It has not yet altogether grown away from “rule of thumb” methods. But in those days an endless variety of perforation gauges, perforations of different shapes and sizes and a lack of agreement as to where the picture should start, combined to take the joy out of life and to make good screen quality impossible.

The necessities of the business have wrought certain changes and improvements. While no definite universal standard of film perforation has been adopted the tendency, until recently at least, has been away from freak perforations and toward a universally accepted gauge. The adoption of such a gauge must precede the introduction of real efficiency and economy into the mechanical processes of motion picture making.

Just as the motion picture business was standardless at the start and through its early years, so too the tools of the industry were crude and often inefficient. That good pictures were made and exhibited in those days is the strongest possible proof of the individual cleverness and efficiency of many men, some of whom have risen to high places in the industry. But often the handicap of poor equipment proved too strong to be overcome and the business suffered in consequence.

No doubt, the conditions here noted—the absence of settled standards and the handicap of insufficient tools—may be attributed to a spirit of conservatism, which regarded the enthusiasm for the picture as a craze and dared not risk the expenditure of time and money necessary to the introduction of better methods and the making of better tools. Happily, these conditions no longer govern. The moving picture has an assured place whether it be considered as a means of entertainment, a help in education or an aid in the advancement of science. And there are not wanting those who take the long look—who are willing to sacrifice something now in order that the future may be the better assured.

Ours is a great industry. And because that fact is being accepted by an increasing number of the men who rank as leaders, there is every reason to believe that better things are in store for us. The internal affairs of the industry must be so adjusted as to comport with the dignity and importance of it. To that end men are working unselfishly to promote mutual good feeling and good will within the industry—to win the confidence and respect of the great public, our patrons.

The character of the mechanical equipment of the motion picture business was at one time a drag upon its progress. Today this department is abreast of the others in orderly and systematic progress. As one who is engaged in the manufacture of motion picture machinery, I am certain that this condition will continue. And my efforts and those of my associates are pledged to that end.

The Turning of the Ways By George K. Spoor

Picture Maker's Profits Have Narrowed to What Can Be Saved from Waste—Strict Economy the Only Salvation, Says President of Essanay

THE motion picture industry has come to a turning of the ways. Early in the past decade manufacturer and exhibitor traveled along a broad and comparatively easy highway. But the road gradually roughened and narrowed, until now we have arrived at the crossroads.

Everyone sees the sign post that points out the diverging paths. It is plainly lettered; its directions are clear to those who can read. To the manufacturer who reads aright the sign of the times the way to ultimate and established success is clear; those who fail to interpret correctly are on the road to oblivion.

Ten years ago the maker of pictures was also confronted by a sign post. At that time, however, the deviation was marked by the man who could see the dramatic possibilities of the cinema and the one who did not dream of its development beyond the split-reel scenes. Today it is the parting of the man who tries to operate on the old-time principles and the one who sees that operation must be adapted to modern business methods.

The path of the manufacturer, until he became established, never was strewn with roses. He had battles to fight and problems to confront just as he does now; he had to fight ignorance, skepticism and prejudice. Now that the motion picture has been accepted as an established institution, the manufacturer is confronted by a new problem. His present battle is to put his business on a basis in which the enormous and ever increasing cost of production does not eat up all the profits.

The man who had the foresight to see the possibilities in pictures ten years ago, after he was well started in the field, had a relatively easy task to that confronting the manufacturer of today. The cost of production then was small; no enormous amount of capital was required. The motion picture was comparatively new and the public was eager to see pictures in motion regardless of their dramatic value.

Then came the divergence from the split-reel scenes to the one-reel drama, a picture with continuity of action. That was the first tremendous leap forward. Since that time pictures have been developed to the multiple-reel feature of today.

Gone is the time when two men can chase each other around the block and whack each other with slapsticks on a back lot platform and call it a comedy. It must now be a carefully prepared effort, skillfully executed. The public has been educated to discriminate between good and indifferent plays, and there is practically no market now but for the best.

Every manufacturer of consequence is striving to get out better plays. This has meant a tremendous increase in the cost of production. It has gone up by leaps and bounds. More competition has come and the market flooded with poor or indifferent plays, selling for almost nothing. The exhibitor also has hit the snag of competition and is looking for the best play at the least cost. So while the cost of production has increased, the profits have gradually diminished.

Gone are the days of the piker in the field. The man with small capital can no longer compete. It now takes vast resources and business acumen to carry on a successful motion picture manufactory.

The manufacturer has awakened to the fact that his profits are not what they were. For some time he has been seeking the cause. Some have discovered the leakage and are taking steps to plug the holes.

The lightning growth of pictures and the large profits naturally led to great waste. Money was literally thrown away. What mattered it to the man who was making millions that thousands were slipping out of his hands. The motion picture industry was a new and untried field. It had not adjusted itself to modern business methods. It has been working toward this end for some time, but it has not yet arrived.

Today the manufacturer of pictures is beginning to look after the thousands, just as the man in every other line of business has been doing. In the future it is these smaller sums of waste that will constitute the margin between profit and loss.

Undoubtedly the greatest waste has been in the production end. In the past years there was a lack of efficient preparedness in the making of pictures. They were made in haphazard fashion. There was no controlling force that mapped out far in advance the work of the various directors, so that some would be working on the floor while others were preparing scripts. There was constant conflict, resulting in interminable delays, with half of the force of directors and actors idle.

There was waste in studios not working full time and waste in men drawing large salaries only working part time. The delay of one meant the delay to the entire force, so that there was leakage on every hand.

This has been more or less rectified by the manufacturer of foresight, but the system is yet far from perfected. The manufacturer who hopes to exist in this time of competition is planning his production ahead. He is adopting means to see that his producing force is working in harmony, so that it is not interfering with itself; and working in harmony with the various other branches of the industry so that there are no hitches or loss of time to any department. He is putting his production end on a systematic, scientific, economic and efficient basis.

There is another waste that has grown through the strong force of competition. This is in the excess in accessories. Each exhibitor is feeling the force of competition, so he must throw out as alluring a bait to the public as possible. To meet the demand of the exhibitor the manufacturer must furnish this bait or the exhibitor passes up his picture, no matter what the merit, for one with something more tempting to draw his crowds.

It will always be necessary to give the exhibitor first-class advertising to attract his patrons, but it must be gotten out in a more economical manner and must be utilized more economically through the various releasing systems. It cannot be put out in wholesale quantities, for fear a competitor has more material, as at present, allowing a large part to go to waste. These are only a suggestion of the almost wanton waste of the past which every manufacturer now realizes.

The manufacturer who will be in business a decade from now will have read the sign of the times on the crossroads sign post. He will have established his business on a system of efficiency and economy, on modern business methods. The manufacturer who is not doing this now is on the greased skids that head straight and swiftly to oblivion.

Persuading Actors Into Pictures By Herbert Prior

When Directors Walked Broadway Looking for Types and Actors Took Parts Only for Pocket Money

MY FIRST introduction to the pictures occurred about ten years ago. In those days the actor did not seek the engagement, the director would walk down Broadway and when he saw a player of the type he wanted he would ask him if he had any objection to work in pictures. It depended on how much money the actor had in his pocket to tide over the summer months whether he accepted or not. If the five dollars meant anything to him he reported for work without any idea what he was going to do—it might be to play the lead or the butler. The pay was the same, no matter what the part was. But what a difference today; everyone is in it or trying to get in and the director can pick and choose without leaving his chair in the office and the actor for once in his life is getting a decent salary.

Herbert Prior.

Some of the happiest days I have spent in pictures were at the Biograph Studio, under D. W. Griffith. Before reporting to work the majority of us left our address (Biograph Studio) at the agencies, so if any theatrical engagement hove in sight they could telephone us and we would get enough time off to look into them. No one of us in those days thought pictures would amount to anything. I guess the theatrical managers thought the same thing, as it took them a long time to get into the game. The majority of that old Biograph stock today are mostly famous and rich beyond any of their expectations, and I'm glad of it, as they certainly worked for it.

I left the Biograph and returned to the stage, but not for long, as the company I was with came to a sudden death. My next picture engagement was with Edison, with whom I stayed three years, leaving to go with the Majestic. I played a year there, then returned to Edison and stayed three years. During my first year with Edison I went with J. S. Dawley to Cuba. That was the first time I had ever traveled at some one else's expense. Nothing was too good for us, everything the best. I used to sit down in the evening under a palm tree, take out my theatrical date book and read over the one-night stands and the bum hotels I had played the season before. Then I came to the conclusion that pictures were the things, and I prayed they might last forever and that I could continue to live and put my feet under some one else's table. At the present time I am under contract with the Canadian Feature Film Company, Toronto, Canada.

Programs of Variety Will Come Back Again So Declares Philadelphia Supply Man—Tells of Building Safe in Early Days to Store Twenty Reels.

BY LEWIS M. SWAAB.

IN looking back over the last ten years I have seen changes that indeed are remarkable. It was in 1904, April, that I engaged in business for myself, and at that time the rental of film was by no means as popular as it is today.

Time there was when films were kept in safes and to lend a reel of film meant more than what it is today. I well remember having a safe made in the early days to hold twenty reels and they were precious and as important as the bank account.

Only a few days ago I met one who has been in the feature film business for about five years, but who has never seen the ordinary fifty or one hundred feet films used in the early days. When he was informed that on many occasions twenty films, each only fifty feet long, or several films in number, were used to make up one reel, he was dumfounded; yet in those days this was of common occurrence.

Of course the ordinary exhibition of short length pictures will not be repeated, but I am of the opinion that the so-called feature film must to a certain extent be relegated to the rear to make room again for the program of daily release. It is beyond question a fact that children are not interested in the ordinary five reeler. The child wants variety, such as we had ten years ago or more, and he will get it, come what may.

It was in the early days before the amateur photographer engaged in the supply business and called himself expert motion picture engineer when the sale of a machine meant a splendid profit. It was also in the day when the industry was growing by leaps and bounds because it was not yet in the hands of the reformers, who hypercritically see wrong in everything and who eventually saddled on us the unspeakable censors.

It is a long way from censorship back to the day when one could rent a vacant store, and by the aid of a machine, a few cheap chairs and a piece of muslin sheeting, engage in a business that brought him returns far beyond his most sanguine expectations. It is true that some, for a paltry dollar, have made films that were to say the least unfit to show to the general public, but those should have been prosecuted by the police. However, the genus politician, who usually sympathizes with his constituents when they complain, saw an opportunity to create positions for his henchmen, hence censorship, which is at once uncalled for, un-American, and by no means unbiased; those who take themselves seriously actually think they are preserving the morals of millions, whereas they are merely forcing their opinion on the masses. Perhaps we would not object, were they capable and efficient and of the proper calibre, but they are not selected for their fitness so much as they are to satisfy the political ambitions of those to whom they owe their appointment.

To look back ten years, one can truthfully say, "Them was the happy days." I take this means of wishing you continued prosperity.

From a Pennsy Barroom to the Rialto

Roxy Tells a Story of Romance and Battle, of High Hope and Hard Hustling and His Reward

IT IS now about eight years since I first went into the moving picture business, but it seems only yesterday that I stood up on my little balcony in the old dump of a hall behind the barroom at Forest City, Penn., with its 250 undertaker's chairs, an old Power No. 4 Machine, a screen made from an old bed sheet, and a second-hand piano. We were running then three single reels for 5 cents. To me those days afford the most pleasant recollections. How I worked and how I strived, but it didn't discourage me—I loved it.

S. L. Rothapfel.

I used to get up in the morning at day-break, and go out and paint my own signs on paper that I procured from the printing office—ordinary one-sheets of different colors—and I became quite adept with the brush. I used to arrange my music for the orchestra, which consisted of a piano player, and then I went up and cleaned my machine. When I had everything spick-and-span, I cleaned the theater, met the train in the afternoon, got my films, looked them over, and saw that the patches were in good shape. Then I was ready to make my announcement from the back of the little balcony, where the people had to turn around in their seats to hear me. Gee, those were the good old days.

I remember one instance when I had to get an old Vitagraph reel which I had advertised. I walked from Forest City to Carbondale in a blinding snowstorm, a distance of seven miles each way, so that I would not disappoint my patrons. I left at 4 o'clock in the morning so as to return at 9.30 and not disappoint my audience. That audience consisted of four people. Shortly after this, however, I began to build up.

A Mr. Shirley, who is still manager of the Wilkes-Barre branch of the General Film Company, took me to a convention, where I met, for the first time, a great many men with whom I was destined to be thrown into contact later. I voiced my dreams and my ambitions to a Mr. Chalmers, who listened carefully and who believed in me and who made me promise to write several articles for the Moving Picture World, which I did. They were the first I had ever written for the moving picture industry. What I had seen at the film service convention so impressed me that I immediately began to look for larger fields.

Then came my invention of the daylight pictures and the trip around the country putting them in the different theaters. Next came my management of the Alhambra Theater in Milwaukee; then my sojourn in Minneapolis, then my coming to New York.

It is like a dream or a tale from Fairyland, but here I am, safely ensconced in the Rialto, still dreaming and still wishing to do bigger things, and just as dissatisfied today as I was after my trip to New York the first time. Some day perhaps I am going to have my fondest dreams realized, to have a theater so magnificent, so fine, so big, so powerful that it will stand, not alone as a monument to myself but to the entire moving picture industry.

I cannot express to you how grateful I am to the Moving Picture World for what it has done; to the members of your staff, each and every one of them, and especially to a former member of the staff and my good friend James McQuade, who used to take me in a corner and lecture me for hours and get cross if I didn't agree with him. Never will I forget his first visit to me in Minneapolis. Arm in arm we walked around the corner and it was then I first discovered his fondness for the spirit of Peppelford and learned that his liver was out of order, and that he was about to expire. Good old soul, there isn't anything I wouldn't do for him.

It was the Moving Picture World that first gave me any prominence, that discovered me, as it were. It told the moving picture trade what I was trying to accomplish, and may I take this occasion to congratulate it upon its tenth anniversary and to wish it continued success along the lines which have done so much to bring the industry to the place it has attained. May it bend every effort to fight the enemies of the picture relentlessly until the picture is so big, so powerful, so influential it can laugh with scorn at the puny attempts to discredit it. May it wage the war against the grafters, continue the fight against censorship, urge and demand cleaner pictures, better pictures, better direction, and better stories. May it insist and preach the doctrine of maintaining an ideal, and never pander to a taste.

All of us in the industry must put our shoulders to the wheel and assist your splendid publication in its fight to place the moving picture on the highest pinnacle, a place where I am sure all of us who love it and have it at heart hope some day to see it.

How the First "Independent" Started

David Horsley Tells an Interesting Yarn of His Beginnings as a Producer

HAVING devoted the past ten years to the production of motion pictures I have naturally been a more or less important factor in the "game," as we like to call it, but whether I have been a star or just an extra is not for me to say, as naturally my point of view might be prejudiced.

The things that stand out clearly in my mind from the early days have a humorous tinge, although many of them were tragic at the time. My entree into pictures came about through meeting an old friend, whom I had not seen for several years, and I discovered that he had been with the Biograph Company for two years. This chance meeting led to my opening a motion picture theater, which failed to pay expenses, so after a few weeks I closed it. This was in 1907 and the loss of a few hundred dollars was a very serious matter. I decided that I would get my money back out of the same game I had lost it in if it took me the rest of my life, so after thoroughly canvassing the situation I decided that the next best bet was manufacturing, as there was a scarcity of pictures. I believed that I could make better pictures than were being made by any of the manufacturers except the Biograph and Pathe, whose photography was the envy of the other makers.

Not having any knowledge of manufacturing it was necessary for me to depend on others to do the actual manufacturing. Under the arrangement I made I was to furnish the bank roll and sell the pictures while my Biograph friend was to paint the scenery, write the scenarios, select the actors, direct the pictures and any other little thing that we had forgotten to enumerate. Another chance acquaintance, who had had experience with Miles Brothers as a cameraman, was to obtain a camera and act as cameraman, do the developing and printing and a few more little things connected with the manufacturing of pictures.

A small building, which I owned in Bayonne, New Jersey, was made into a laboratory and the yard in the rear of the building was floored over for a stage so that the entire plant covered an ordinary city lot, twenty-five by one hundred feet.

When the plant was ready for operation word was sent to the laboratory expert, but he declined to proceed with his bargain, as he had meanwhile obtained a "steady" job at fifteen dollars a week and much preferred to follow a conservative course rather than to come to me under an arrangement whereby he was to receive twenty-five dollars per week and one third of the "profits." No amount of argument could move him from his determination, so in desperation I decided that I would have to do the camera work myself. I needed a camera, however, and the one that he was to obtain had in the meantime been sold to a photographer in Cuba.

Bright and early the next morning I went to Orange, New Jersey, and tried to buy a camera from the Edison people, but they did not seem to be anxious to inflate Mr. Edison's bank account with any of my money and explained that they did not sell cameras.

A visit later in the day to the Biograph studio on Fourteenth street, New York, met with the same result. As I was leaving the Biograph office my gloom was lightened somewhat by Edward Gausman, a stranger to me, who either had a kind heart or had taken a liking to me, and suggested that I might obtain a camera from George Kleine on Sixth avenue. Through the visit to Mr. Kleine's office I learned that cameras were not obtainable in this country, but that they could obtain one for me from England and that it would take from eight to nine weeks to get it. I could not see my way clear to wait eight or nine weeks, as I had learned that a combination was being formed and that unless I could get my pictures on the market before the trust plans were carried out I would be left high and dry with no market. I was now in the project so deeply and the situation was so serious I determined that something would have to be done and done quickly, so I decided to build a camera of my own.

With no knowledge whatever of motion picture mechanism, never having seen a motion picture camera of any kind, I started to figure out in my own way the mechanism that would produce the results. I worked feverishly for several weeks, putting in many hours with a few tools and finally succeeded in making a machine that would answer the purpose.

The first picture I made, "The Cowboy's Escapade," would not be classed as a masterpiece according to present standards, but in those days it was considered a good picture and told an interesting story.

Any review of the old days would be incomplete without some reference to the late J. P. Chalmers, founder of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, and without doubt the man entitled to the most credit for the rapid advance of the art, for without his advice and knowledge, which he gave just as freely to the struggling beginner as to the more fortunate manufacturers who had already gained a foothold, many of the present manufacturers would not have survived in the fierce struggle.

Mr. Chalmers always advocated clean pictures and refused advertising of questionable productions when the finances of his publication were in a precarious condition and demonstrated in more ways than one that he was one of the least mercenary of men. His publication was for a long time the only bulwark the industry had against hostile legislation, which was inspired by the regular theaters, who began to fear for their own interests, which the growing popularity of the pictures threatened.

Personally I wish to acknowledge a debt of gratitude to Mr. Chalmers for the advice he gave me during my early struggles and for the photographic knowledge, of which he seemed to have an inexhaustible store, and in which I was sadly lacking. The friendship between Mr. Chalmers and myself was never ruffled except on one occasion and that only for a short time. At the time when the patents situation was in its most critical period Mr. Chalmers visited me at my plant to try and discover the reason for certain photographic troubles that I had, and after we had talked some time and he was about to leave for New York he casually asked me what camera I was using. While I did not doubt his sincerity and trustworthiness I did not feel that it was wise to say what camera I was using so I endeavored to turn the matter off jokingly by saying, "I am using a Billiken camera," the toy called the Billiken being very popular at the time. He did not catch the joke and said, "Billiken, Billiken, I never heard of that camera. Is it patented?" To which I replied, "Yes, in all uncivilized countries." I saw immediately that I had offended him and nothing that I could say seemed to remove the first impression.

In the next issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD he scored very heavily by stating, "In a conversation recently with an independent manufacturer, who specializes on cowboy pictures in New Jersey, I asked him what camera he was using. To which he replied that he was using the 'Billiken.' For making unsteady pictures we can certainly recommend the 'Billiken' camera."

Mr. Chalmers soon recovered his kindly feelings toward me and my enterprise and our friendship continued until the time of the accident which removed from our midst the industry's best and most ardent advocate and defender.

No Longer Unhonored and Unsung By Carl Louis Gregory, F.R.P.S.

Giving Public Recognition to Cameraman Has Done Much to Stimulate Artistry in Motion Picture Production

OF all the square miles of paper besmeared with printer's ink and lurid lithographic colors for the exploitation of the motion picture perhaps as large an area as a few square inches out of each 640 acres of puffy publicity has been grudgingly given to the men who made possible the popularity of the photoplay. I refer to the cinematographer and to the inventor of cinematographic apparatus.

It is a sign of great portent that the real progress of the cinematographic art bears almost a direct ratio to the increasing recognition of the hitherto "unhonored and unsung" workers whose labors have brought the camera to its present high estate.

There is no stimulus so great as appreciation. Placing the photographer's name on the screen in equality with the author and director has done more for the artistic and photographic improvement of the motion picture than any other cause.

No less an authority than the noted psychologist Hugo Münsterberg asserted that the dramatic and emotional possibilities of the photoplay have not kept pace with the improvement in photographic quality. It is up to the producer and the director to get in still closer collaboration with the photographer.

The past presages the future; the cumulative progress of the last decade will be more than duplicated in the half score years to come.

Had I the space at my command I could fill the pages of this entire magazine with the names and achievements of those who have made important contributions to this great industry. As it is, I can only name a few and omit with regret many whose work has been as illustrious as those who are mentioned. They all belong, the mentioned and unmentioned, with the names that head the roll such as Daguerre, de Abney, Muybridge, Marey, Aushütz, Edison, Paul, Lumière, Friese-Green, Pathé, Gaumont, Carpentier, Jenkins, Latham, etc. Even some of these like Edison have continued their labors into the last ten years.

In the field of photographic materials many important advances and improvements have been made by men who are still devoting their entire efforts to farther refinements. Among them are Kenneth Mees, Professor E. J. Wall, George Eastman, James Wallace, Professor A. B. Hitchins, Lumière, Seywitz, Sangers-Shepard, and Chapman Jones.

Smith and Urban have given us a glimpse of the limitless palette of nature's colors which will flash in all their gorgeous glory on the cinema screens in the decade to come. They are the vanguard of a patient army whose goal will soon be reached. Already in their laboratories such men as Joy, W. Burton Wescott, Professor H. T. Kalmus, Dr. D. F. Comstock, C. W. and Van D. Kelly, Frederick Ives, P. D. Brewster, Hernandez-Mejia, C. Raleigh, W. F. Fox, and others are striving to make commercially successful the natural color processes which they have invented.

Camera construction has pushed forward under the impetus of such men as Donald J. Bell, F. B. Cannock, C. B. Akeley, C. F. Jenkins, H. A. Keepers, J. Roy Hunt, Newman and Sinclair, Ernemann, Prevost, De Brie, Ernest Moy, Schustek, Edison, Lubin and Comodore Blackton.

Electrical illumination has released the cinematographer from the superstition of the sun god, and he now pays allegiance to Steinmetz, Cooper-Hewitt, Kliegl, Wohl, Mayer, Allison, with incense from cored carbons and mercury vapor.

To the wide range of subjects impressed on the retentive retina of the camera's eye, George and Ernest Williamson have added the limitless depths of the sea.

My allotted space is nearly spent and I can only hint of the scientists who have coupled the motion camera with the microscope and the X-ray; who, with the ultra-speed camera, reduce the flight of bullets to the appearance of idly swimming fish or who compress a life cycle into a few swift seconds. And last but not least, Bitzer, Broening, Wyckoff and their brethren of the camera crank whose once unknown names are now limned in light on thousands of cinema screens.

Song Slide the Little Father of Photodrama By Charles K. Harris

How Actors Posed for Still Photographs in the Days Before the Entrance of the Motion Picture Camera

ALITTLE over twenty-five years ago I attended an entertainment given at a church social and saw a magic lantern performance and was very much entertained at some of the funny slides as well as the scenic illustrations and colored views.

While sitting, gazing upon them, an idea suddenly took birth in my brain. "Why not have magic lantern slides made for one of my songs and have it thrown upon the canvas?" I waited until after the performance and met the man who gave the entertainment, who, by the way, was a Chicagoan and a slide manufacturer. I laid my proposition before him and asked him if such a thing could be done. He told me to have photographs taken of the actors, as well as the locations in which the scenes of the song were to be laid; to send him the negatives and he would do the rest.

I had just written a song entitled "I Love Her Just the Same." There was an act named "The Silvers" doing a singing turn at the Alhambra theater in Milwaukee—my home town at that time—and I asked if they would consent to pose for these pictures. They were delighted to do so, and that was the birth, not alone of the illustrated song slide, but of the moving picture play scenario of the present day, as an article published ten years ago in the first issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD will testify. By reading that article you will find that the same methods that were used in making song slides are now being used by the greatest moving picture directors in making their scenarios.

In making song slides for "I Love Her Just the Same" I laid out the scene for each line. Scene 1 contained a farmhouse, with a loving couple seated about a table; scene 2, a quarrel; scene 3, the wife running away from home with another man at night; scene 4, the streets of Milwaukee; and so on, to at least twenty-six different scenes. I was compelled to look for locations, as well as the different types who were to appear in this song, and I was just as careful in selecting the types and different locations as the most celebrated producers of picture plays at the present date. I purchased a stereopticon machine for the Silvers, as well as a curtain; rehearsed them in the song, and it was first sung at the Alhambra theater in Milwaukee, where it created a sensation as the first illustrated song ever thrown upon a canvas.

The next song to be illustrated was "Break the News to Mother." As I could not get the war scenes for this song, I was in a quandary for a while, when suddenly the idea struck me of painting backgrounds of soldiers fighting, and to have them photographed. I never will forget the rendition of the song with these slides. They were simply awful. I was scared to death when the song was put on for the first time by Joseph E. Howard, at Haverly's Minstrels, Chicago, but in spite of the crude pictures it was a novelty and the audience took it like a duck takes to water. I was thunderstruck when I received a telegram from Howard saying that the song and slides were a sensation.

Edwin Thanhouser, who today is one of our greatest moving picture producers, leased the Academy of Music in Milwaukee and placed a wonderful stock company therein. I conceived the idea of using regular actors for the slides. I placed the proposition before Mr. Thanhouser, who gave me his help, advice and encouragement and told me he would be pleased to allow me to use his company any morning to make the pictures for a song I had written, entitled "One Night in June." I laid out the story in regular scenario form—thirty scenes; obtained one of the best photographers in Milwaukee, and scoured Milwaukee for location. I then secured five carriages, and with the entire company and a photographer I directed the thirty scenes for the song, and the difference could be seen the instant it was flashed upon the screen. The actors knew how to pose, and in fact fell into it naturally, and the slides and song were a wonderful success.

Here is an illustration of how hard it was to secure locations, etc., for pictures:

I had just finished a song entitled "Better Than Gold." The story concerned a party of traveling men in a Pullman parlor smoker, arguing as to what was better than gold. They made up a purse of $10 in gold for the best answer to the title. One of the traveling men said that he wished that he was a child again on his mother's knee, back again in the old home, and away from the world's sins, sorrows and troubles, which he thought was better than gold. Another traveling man wished he had $100,000. With that money he could live comfortably and do a lot in charity and live to a happy old age in peace and comfort. The conductor, who had listened to the conversation, butted in and in his gruff way told them their wishes were all very good and true, but he thought the best wish he could think of and which to his mind was far better than gold was his wife, baby and home. The $10 in gold was promptly turned over to him. However, how to get the interior of a Pullman parlor smoker for these slides was a puzzle.

John Hinsey was the superintendent of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul road. I laid my plan before him. He immediately saw the possibility of a great advertisement for the road, as he knew the song would be sung in every theater in the United States. He told me if I would just take the first flash of the new parlor de luxe train which had just been put on to run between Chicago and St. Paul he would grant my request. I agreed, and a beautiful parlor car was switched off in the yards, with a conductor and a porter. At the old Plankton House I found five traveling men who eagerly entered into the project. They were taken over to the train and were rehearsed just the same as a moving picture scene is rehearsed today, with the result that this song and slides also created a sensation.

I believed in natural scenes. I did not like the idea of painted drops, as they never looked natural when thrown upon the screen, and the audience were commencing to "get wise" as to what was a painted drop scene and what was a natural scene. When I wrote "Hello, Central, Give Me Heaven," I needed the interior of a telephone exchange, with all the girls at the board, to make the slides realistic. I applied to the superintendent of the telephone exchange and I was turned down flat.

While attending a banquet the following week in Chicago I sat beside a man who, when he learned I was a composer, grew interested. I told him of the trouble I had in securing the interior of a telephone exchange. He handed me his card. To my surprise I learned he was the vice-president of the Chicago telephone exchange. He told me I could use the interior any Sunday morning. You can take my word for it, I jumped at the chance. I rehearsed the girls at the board—especially one of them, who was supposed to be the leading feature of the song, and she acted the part just as well as any of the $10,000 stars today. When the scene was flashed upon the curtain the applause was tremendous, as the audience recognized the real thing. From that time on no more painted drops were ever used by me in any of my illustrated songs.

Shortly after that time the New York publishers were beginning to recognize the drawing power of illustrated songs and were following in my footsteps. It was not long before every publisher in the United States publishing ballads was using illustrated song slides, and in every vaudeville and burlesque theater throughout the United States for many years the song slide held its own and was always the hit of the bill until suddenly the moving picture came into vogue, and that was the finish of the slide business. Very rarely now, except in the very small cities (and I doubt even if they are seen there at the present time) can an illustrated song be seen.

The country is moving picture mad, just the same as it was mad over the illustrated song slides, which has gone the way all other novelties of that kind go when newer novelties and newer inventions take their place. Consequently, it was natural for me to write scenarios, and so when the song slides passed into oblivion I turned my attention to the writing of scenarios, and among the original scenarios which I have written and which have been produced in moving pictures and have all made successes are: "After the Ball," "Always in the Way," "When It Strikes Home," "The Hearts of Men," "School Bells" and "Should a Baby Die?"

I am also working on a number of scenarios, taken from some of my songs, such as "Break the News to Mother," "Somewhere," "A Mother's Duty," "Fools in Bohemia," "The Girl Who Forgot," and one hundred others which will soon be produced in moving pictures.

Al Jolson, one of the biggest singing comedian stars in America today, was one of the earliest singers of illustrated songs, under the team name of Jolson and Moore. He sang with illustrations "Hello, Central, Give Me Heaven," "There'll Come a Time Some Day," "I've a Longing in My Heart for You, Louise," "For Old Time's Sake," "Just Behind the Times," and many others.

Meyer Cohen, the "California Baritone," was also a famous singer of the illustrated song, and whenever his name was flashed on the screen on a slide it was always the recipient of a round of applause. He was always given the hardest part on the bill, viz., to close the show, and invariably was the hit of the bill, which only goes to show the hold the illustrated song had upon the audience at that time. Some of the best singers in America today, stars in comic opera and musical comedy, were graduated from the illustrated song slide class.

Joseph Howard, who is a star in vaudeville now, for many years sang my illustrated songs. In fact, if all the names were to be mentioned of all the stars today it would cover an entire page, and in the title of my new song, entitled "You Came, You Saw, You Conquered," the story is told.

The slides came, saw and conquered, and passed away into oblivion, as I stated before, for something newer and something more wonderful.

A Short Story of Large Contracts

Resume of the Many Changes That Have Been Effected for the Better in One Decade.

BY HARRY SCHWALBE.

REMARKABLE changes certainly have taken place in the last decade in the exhibition, distribution and manufacturing end of our business. The exhibiting end has doubled over the five-cent show of the old-time store variety to theaters of large seating capacity and prices of admission ranging from ten to fifty cents.

About ten years ago most of the theaters were conducted by three persons, one man at the door, a piano player and an operator. At the present time when visiting the up-to-the-minute theater you are first met by a uniformed footman ready to open the door of your limousine, then a polite ticket agent, then an attentive doorman, then a courteous usher requests you to follow him to a chair that costs about twenty times as much as the chairs cost when this business was started; suitable music is arranged in keeping with the theme of the feature which is projected. In place of the old tinny rattle-trap piano you find an orchestra of skilled first-class musicians, in addition to which there is usually an organist receiving about eight times as much salary as the pianist formerly received. The ventilation of the theater is carefully looked after, loud smelling so-called "disinfectant" is entirely done away with, and nothing but pure air, and in many cases washed air, is the only ventilation that the theater of today has.

In addition to this the average program of today is carefully balanced and selected. Great care and many hours of thought are given to this phase of the work by careful theater managers. Where formerly anywhere from five hundred to one thousand feet of film were given to the public at an admission of five cents, today the average is at least eight thousand feet of film.

The distribution of film has changed likewise. The autocratic dictatorial exchangeman is fast disappearing.

The time has passed when the object of the exchangeman is to charge the exhibitor arbitrary prices, little caring whether the exhibitor can live or not under the burden that is imposed upon him, and the time has come when the exchangeman assists the exhibitor to select his program and arrange the prices therefor so that the exhibitor will have a reasonable chance of realizing a fair return on his investment. This same spirit of co-operation is rapidly coming to the front between the exhibitors and exchangemen all around.

Needless to speak of the improvement that the manufacturers have made. We all remember the subjects that varied from fifty to seven hundred feet in length; a comparison in our mind between these subjects and the immense spectacular, well acted features that are being offered today with high-priced stars, expert cameramen, beautiful lighting effects and gorgeous settings, will satisfy us our business certainly has made remarkable strides in the past ten years.

I hope that the time is not far distant when a general spirit of co-operation on the part of manufacturer, distributor, exchangeman and exhibitor will make it possible for our industry to reach still higher planes.

Directing in Other Days Was No Snap

Silent Bill Describes Some of the Difficulties Surrounding Picture Making with Scant Personnel and Small Purse.

By WILLIAM F. HADDOCK.

I HAVE often wondered what some of the present day directors would do if they were confronted with the problems we who were directing in the early days of the industry met. In those days it was hard to get actors to work in the pictures, as they were looked down upon and considered somewhat in the light of a joke, and to admit that you were a celluloid actor was to lay yourself open to ridicule. Our scenery, which was painted on canvas, was used over and over again, until the slightest movement caused it to wave like a flag flying in the breeze. If we requested the use of a residence for our exteriors we were frowned upon and often threatened with the dog. Added to this, we had no assistants, and usually had to write our own scenarios and very often had to act as our own property man; not infrequently doing carpenter work as well and helping to construct our sets. We had no location man, consequently we would leave the studio in the morning with our actors in autos, bus or trolley cars and ride until we found something near what we wanted, and then beg, borrow or steal the privilege of working there; and all this for a very nominal salary. The close-up and fade-out, used so extensively today, were unknown, and not half the cameramen knew how to make a double exposure. The director of today has his scenario constructed by a specialist in that line, at least one assistant and a staff of scenario writers, carpenters and property men at his disposal; a trained technical director, a thoroughly competent cameraman and a location man; in addition to all this he has a flock of automobiles at his disposal to transfer his people from one location to another, and is not looked upon by property owners as a highwayman fit only for the noonday meal for the inhabitants of the kennel.

Today a director can spend any amount he desires on any and every scene of his picture, but in those days if we spent more than ten or fifteen dollars on a prop it had to be one that was used through the entire picture. If one of us had suggested hiring a railroad train for one scene we would have been considered a fit subject for Matteawan. Being obliged to economize in this way at one time nearly landed me in jail, as the following little story will explain:

We were out on the marshes in the vicinity of Hackensack working on a picture that was to be known as "The Trials and Tribulations of a Cameraman." The idea in the scene was for a cameraman to be grinding on his camera and be struck by a train, after which he would pick himself up and brush off his clothes and go back to work.

We made arrangements with the conductor and crew of a local train to pay no attention to a dummy that had been placed in the middle of the track with a fake camera, as a substitute for the regular cameraman. We had quite overlooked the fact that a mail train was due about that time and the local took a siding to let it go by. It is quite probable that the crew of the local supposed that we knew all about the mail train being due first, but we didn't. Along came the mail train bearing down on the poor dummy. When we saw it was going to stop we began to realize that in about half a minute more we would be guilty of holding up the United States mail, and therefore liable to imprisonment. There was nothing to do but run, and there was no place to run except through the swamp. All hands, men and women, floundered in the mire while the mail train came to a halt quite close to the dummy cameraman. I have no idea what the conductor had to say, but I do know that when we got into Newark that night we were a sad looking lot and kept to the dark side streets to make sure that we would not be arrested for vagabonds.

I was one of the first directors to take a company away from New York, and this happened shortly after my introduction into pictures, when I went with a few Edison players to Savannah, Ga. There, after one week, I was left, through a misunderstanding, with a cameraman and with very little money. I loafed for about three days, and then my Yankee blood rebelled over the fact that expenses were piling up and no results were being obtained. I took my nerve in both hands, got out the camera and went to work. On the day the new cameraman arrived I finished a one-reel picture, that, while not perfect in photography, was one of the best sellers of the day. Since that time I have made pictures in all parts of the United States, Mexico and Cuba. I have seen the companies that were the leaders then stop producing entirely or produce under another name; companies that were unheard of and undreamed of then rise to the top.

Today the names of Lasky, Zukor, Fox, Laemmle, Powers, Brady, Goldfish, Selig, Hutchinson, Rolfe and Freuler are known as leaders in the business. Will they still lead ten years from now, or will other names take their places? Or will some one man dominate the industry as Morgan did the banking and Schwab the steel industry? Who knows? I don't, but I hope I'll be here ten years hence to read the answer in the Twentieth Anniversary Number of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

When the Field Was Fresh ☼ ☼ ☼ ☼ ☼ ☼ ☼ By A. Kessel, Jr.

Possibilities in Early Days Astonished Kessel and Baumann—Found that Renting Paid and Manufacturing Paid

"THE last ten years in moving pictures," said A. Kessel, Jr., president of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, "have seen the business bound forward with wonderful strides. I think it safe to say that the world has never known a business which has multiplied so marvelously in so short a time.

"Ten years ago I had no idea of what a moving picture was like, other than it was a series of photographs of people moving to and fro.

A. Kessel, Jr.

"I will never forget," said Mr. Kessel, smiling at the recollection, "how I came to enter the field. It was in 1908. I loaned a friend $2,500, and when the money was not forthcoming I went to see what property he had, to protect my loan. He showed me six reels on a shelf in a little office. I didn't know a reel from a Chinese prayer, and I asked him what they were. He said he rented them out to moving picture people and then he explained his business.

"It looked good to me. When I asked him if he knew where there were any more reels, he said a fellow in Brooklyn had thirty, but wanted $5,000 for them. I bought the thirty reels for $2,800 and that was how I started my first exchange.

"Then six or seven of us got together and formed a little combination. We districted the city into territories and agreed to keep the price up to a certain point—ten cents a foot! Some of those in the combination started other exchanges outside of New York City.

"I had a pal, named Charley Baumann, who had a small commission office on Sixth avenue. I took a part of Charley's little office, put in a few films, placed a man in charge, and made Charley a partner for the use of his office. Charley didn't know anything about moving pictures and gave me the laugh when I declared him in. 'Don't bother me,' he said.

"This was my sub-exchange. At the end of the first week when my manager gave Charley $210 as his share, Charley didn't say anything, but his look meant, 'My God, this can't be right!'

"Next week, when his share was $320, he began to come down early in the morning and look around to see what a film was, and got busy with me in renting them. In a month Charley's bit had gone up to $1,000 a week, and then it quickly shot to $2,000 a week.

"Right at this juncture, the other members of our little combination got sore at me for running a sub-exchange and they fired me out of the association. This put us in a devil of a fix, because we had about $30,000 worth of film on hand and we couldn't get any more, for the reason that the people in the association who made the pictures would not sell us any. Of course, I knew a film was a moving picture, but I had no more idea of how the moving pictures were made than a baby knows how to run an aeroplane. But there was nothing to it—we simply had to make the pictures!

"Say, the first picture we made was a wonder! We had no story, but I directed it. And such a cast! Charley Baumann was the father. He played the old man and nearly broke his neck coming downstairs, and shook hands with everybody in sight in the first two hundred feet. Charley certainly put in the action. As a picture it was a scream, and I want to say right now that there is one picture in the world that will never be thrown on the screen again for love or money.

"Well, we made three pictures and then put a little 2x4 ad in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, announcing three coming releases.

"It was agreed that the first picture was not to cost over $200, and when we figured it up and found it cost $215 we had an all-night fight and the partnership nearly split. We finally compromised by cutting off an excess wagon charge of $2 and let it go at $213. This first picture, by the way, brought us in $2,300, and when we figured over $2,000 profit on that first picture we said to ourselves: 'By Golly, there's something wrong here!'

"Well, we went on and prospered—prospered because we made good pictures, and then the General Film people began to sue us, claiming we had infringed their patents. They tried hard to put us out of business and how they nearly succeeded is a matter of film history. We fought them in every possible legitimate way, and when they sent around men to smash up our cameras we hired men to smash up the men they hired to smash up our cameramen. It got so we never sent out a cameraman that was not protected by at least ten strong-arm guys, who smoked Havana cigars and lived on the fat of the land.

"Through all the bitterness of that desperate fighting and that deadly competition, we tried to make better pictures than anyone else and I think we succeeded. They got after us in every possible way, and we retaliated in kind. Finally, we got together all our available assets and put $135,000 into a plant in Brooklyn. Then we hired away from the Biograph Company every good actor they had and doubled their salaries. But our laboratory man failed us, and over night our whole investment of $135,000 went overboard. We were cleaned! The Biograph gave us the laugh and put up a two million dollar plant, but we stuck at it and now we have four studios, running capacity.

"If we have succeeded in spite of all obstacles, it is because we have conscientiously endeavored to give exhibitors the very best product at the lowest possible rate. We have spared no money in endeavoring to put out week after week the best pictures in the market. We have turned over many a picture for less money than it cost us to make, but all the while we have remained steadfast to our set purpose—namely, to give quality and to give no offense.

"Mr. Ince and Mr. Sennett are recognized master directors in the business. An Ince Kay-Bee and a Sennett Keystone are the standards of moving picture excellence today.

"When I look back and think of the sturdy battles we fought, and the hardships we endured, and realize finally what we have achieved in the moving picture world, I cannot help taking a little pride and comfort in the fact that all our worry and work have not been in vain."

Reminiscences of Picture's Babyhood Days By Edwin Thanhouser

Interesting Details of Difficulties Under Which Manufacturers Labored—Shoveling Snow from Stage and Making Locale Fit the Clime

IN NOVEMBER of 1909 the walls of our first New Rochelle studio were up and waiting for the glass for the skylight. We experienced a long delay in the delivery of this glass, just as we had a long delay in obtaining anything connected with building a studio. Everything had to be made. There were no stocks of cameras, perforators, printers or lamps available, or any of the necessities of moving picture making. Our failure to get glass to cover our roof did not deter us, however, from taking pictures. Winter was coming on early, but our enthusiasm was not to be chilled. Though we had a roofless winter studio, yet we decided to start our picture career. A big stove, with a few screen lean-tos for dressing rooms, were to make it possible. It was necessary each morning to shovel snow from off of our stage before beginning work.

I remember well Christmas Day of that year when the studio was all buried in snow. The happy idea occurred to me to use the snow by changing the location of our story to "In Siberia." It wasn't long before our stove and the sun melted our scenery completely and another change in the script was necessary. The scene shifted suddenly to "Later—A Warmer Clime."

Our company was exceptional, for we had an established scenario department to start in with. This was a novelty in that the other independent companies depended upon the morning's mail and the immediate inspiration of the director for a scenario. I remember asking Mr. Lonergan to write me a moving picture scenario after I had outlined to him what my ideas were and what the requirements should be.

The result was a script called "The Mad Hermit." There were plots and counter-plots enough in this one-reel subject to make up any twelve-reel melodrama of today. It started out with a stunt—a runaway horse pulling a buggy containing a man, a woman and a baby. As the horse galloped madly by the mother saw a white-haired, long-bearded hermit cross the road. It was quite natural for the mother to throw her child in the hermit's arms to save its life. Of course we used a fake baby. We rehearsed the scene so diligently that our dummy was all worn out by the time the scene was ready, and when the scene was finally taken and the supposed child was thrown from the carriage the sawdust broke loose and turned into a veritable snowstorm effect. At any rate, it looked like a snowstorm on the screen, and we changed the title to correspond.

Our first release was called "The Actor's Children," a one-reel subject with "heart interest." At this time there was only the Patents Company supplying regular releases. We independents, five in number, were in the early months of our career. We had no established market, and we had to sell our pictures to such scattered exchanges throughout the country who were unable to purchase the product of the Patents Company and who longed to get into the business.

I took a chance and boldly made nineteen copies of "The Actor's Children" without a single bona fide advance order and sent them out to nineteen dealers throughout the United States. Most of the exchanges were unprepared for the sudden responsibilities of buying a thousand-foot subject without thinking the matter over several weeks. The result was that out of the nineteen copies sent out ten were returned, most of them with letters saying that they were agreeably surprised at the interesting production we had turned out, and if we expected to make another one to be sure and let them see it, as they would enjoy looking at it. Some said they had all the films they needed that month.

Our next film was a picturization of the well-known novel and play, "St. Elmo." "St. Elmo" was having a New York run at the time, and our picture made an instantaneous hit. I only printed ten copies of "St. Elmo" to start in with, and sent them for the most part to the exchanges that had bought "The Actor's Children." The fame of "St. Elmo" soon spread, and I had telegraphic orders for more prints, until I had disposed of twenty-five. Then "The Actors' Children" began to find its own, and soon I had disposed of the ten copies that had been returned to me from my first attempt. Our second picture, "St. Elmo," indicated that I was early in the game of making picturizations of novels and stage successes. In the early days I produced "Jane Eyre," another picture play from a novel, and "Thelma," a picturization of the novel and play. Soon we put out "Romeo and Juliet"—the first company among the independents to put out a two-reel subject, and the first to put out a Shakespearean production. "Romeo and Juliet" in two reels was too much for our exchanges to absorb at one time, so we had to put it out one reel at a time—a week apart.

Dickens' "David Copperfield" in three reels followed not long after, and this had to be put out one reel at a time, so that it took three weeks to get out the three-reel subject.

Early in the moving picture business I made a statement that the time was coming when one moving picture would provide a whole evening's entertainment. I was ridiculed for this, and that was only seven or eight years ago.

"The Vicar of Wakefield" was one of our subjects produced in the early days in one reel. We are now about to market this same subject in eight reels, featuring Frederick Warde. The eight-reel subject just completed marks the most ambitious production the Thanhouser Film Corporation has thus far attempted.

I suppose every producer who entered the film business had certain ideals as to the needs of the art. My pet ideas were always that we must have good actors, and that there should be some repose in the characterizations instead of the then proverbial jumpy, quick action. The idea in the early days was that motion pictures should have as much motion as possible—never mind the acting.

In one of our early productions, "Pocahontas" by name, we tried a dissolve for the first time, and though it jumped and shook and shivered, we received telegrams from all over the country and columns of praise. It was commented upon everywhere.

A funny thing happened when we were taking a one-reel subject called "A Girl of the Northern Woods." A minor part of a woodsman was intrusted to an ambitious young actor, and his principal work consisted in setting in front of a log cabin and smoking. He had rehearsed this scene with becoming modesty and restraint, but all the while he was plotting to steal the center of the camera for himself. When the photographer began to turn the crank my woodsman at the same time began to smoke, and he smoked and smoked and smoked—like the consolidation of seven chimneys, his idea being that an unusual column of smoke would rivet all eyes upon him. When we developed the negative we found the scene so clouded in smoke that the entire action was lost in a dense haze—the effect of one pipe and an overzealous actor.

One of our early pictures, a comedy, had in its principal feminine role a leading woman with the real "erratic temperament." She seemed hopeless, such were her eccentricities of temper. In one scene we employed a live monkey. When this temperamental leading woman attempted to pick up the monkey it bit her in the finger, and from that moment she was a changed being, a sweet tempered, amiable and almost angelic actress.

Most of the early manufacturers will remember the universal practice of placing the company's trade-mark on every scene, whether exterior or interior, that they made. It was with pride that we put a big "T. Co." in a king's palace, in Juliet's tomb, in a slum scene or a fashionable drawing room, or in our exteriors. Location never embarrassed us. We, together with other manufacturers, put the largest sized trade-mark we dared in the most conspicuous place in every set.

We put on "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in one reel and offered it at the same time that a rival manufacturer was putting it out in two. I remember a bit shamefacedly that I advertised broadcast: "You can see the whole thing in one reel—why buy two?"

It was not unnatural that exchangemen in the early days were totally mistrustful of the ability of a would-be manufacturer to make pictures. "You say you can and are going to, but show us," was the invariable answer to your prospectus of what you intended to do as a manufacturer. They would buy one picture and at the same time express an almost certain opinion that that was the last good picture we could make. There was no stability in the business, and many of us would not look more than thirty days ahead for the permanency of our business life.

A Toast to Those Who Made Mistakes

Courage of These Men Made Present Eminence of Industry Possible, Says "Pop" Lubin—One Weak Spot Yet.

BY SIEGMUND LUBIN.

IN commemorating its tenth anniversary THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD will doubtless thrill with admiration over the motion picture achievements that mark the beginning of a new decade.

Let me bespeak a tribute to the mistakes that have been made and the men who had the courage to make them. Each of these mistakes has served as a stepping stone to success.

Without them the industry could not have attained its present position of eminence. So, while the loving cup is being passed around, let each of us grasp the opportunity to drink a toast to the man who made mistakes.

It is due to him that the experimental stage, with its manifold difficulties and staggering cost, has been passed.

The shoals and reefs have been charted and buoyed and the motion picture navigator of today in shaping his course is enabled to steer clear of the rocks that threatened the voyager of yesterday.

While out of the breakers and headed for the port of perfection it is not yet all clear sailing for the motion picture craft.

Storms will still be encountered. Fog and collision are still to be entered upon the log of the navigator. But guided by the charted experiences of the adventurous pioneers, the man at the helm will be serene among obstacles which once spelled disaster.

Facing the future with confidence born of priceless experience founded upon mistakes the worker in the world of motion pictures should be an optimist.

All of the mistakes, however, have not been made. It is my belief that I have put my finger on one of the weakest spots in the structure. For some time I have been working out a plan to remove it.

In the near future I hope to put into practical operation the plan now being evolved. I believe it will score immediate success.

Meanwhile, and to all, may you live long and prosper.

Siegmund Lubin.

Twenty-Four Years in the Picture Business

That's the Record of George Breck, Supply Man of San Francisco—A Reminiscence

GEORGE BRECK, of the Breck Photoplay Supply Company, Inc., of San Francisco, began his connection with the moving picture business in 1893. Twenty-four years is pretty near the limit. It's so long ago Mr. Breck is satisfied that his setting up of a motion picture projector in the Orpheum Theater in the Bay City in the year named was the second event of that description within the confines of the United States. It was an Edison Vitascope Mr. Breck mounted, one that previously had done business in one of the large theaters in New York.

George Breck.

The affiliation then established in the industry Mr. Breck has never broken.

Mr. Breck in the early days built a projector known as the Picturescope, of which many were sold. He was threatened with infringement litigation, but instead he became the agent for the Edison machine. This was about fourteen years ago.

Mr. Breck built up a large coast trade in motion picture supplies. On January 1, 1916, the business was incorporated under the name of the Breck Photoplay Supply Company, Inc. The growth of the Vitaslide Company, in which Mr. Breck was deeply interested, had so expanded it became necessary for him to incorporate that also and to bring in managerial assistance. Thomas Maguire, an old time exhibitor of Portland, Oregon, came in as manager and part owner. The company is doing a large wholesale and retail business, covering the entire coast with its distributing agencies.

In the early days of the business Mr. Breck traveled through the coast towns doing stereopticon advertising and lecture work. On one of these occasions he gave an advertising outdoor exhibition in the temperance town of Pomona, in Southern California. The projector was placed in the second story of the building over an awning so that the operator could not see the sidewalk underneath, the picture being projected on a screen on the opposite side of the street. The exhibition being a little late in starting, nobody appeared on the street to see the "ads" and pictures, but, nevertheless fearful noises, howls, screams, stamping and ravings were heard on the sidewalk under the awning. Mr. Breck could not imagine what was going on unless some man with the tremens had got in the wrong town.

The next day when Mr. Breck was around collecting for the "ads" one man threw down the money with a look of disgust saying, "There's $3 gone to —." Upon making inquiry as to why this statement was made, the man replied that there was no one out to see the exhibition. Mr.

Breck promptly responded this could not be true, as the noise on the street established the fact that there was some one there. To the astonishment and everlasting amusement of Mr. Breck the man loudly replied: "That was me. I paid for the ad and thought I would try to get somebody out to see it."

Independent Production Made Balboa

Horkheimer Brothers Have Always Been Independent Producers, Says Balboa's President.

By H. M. HORKHEIMER.

THE plant of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company at Long Beach, California, is the best indication of what has been accomplished by my brother and myself since we first started making pictures in 1912. At first it was a game of hide and seek with the sheriff for us, because money was scarce and obligations were very much not so. But we pulled through. The plant that now occupies all four corners of two intersecting streets grew from one small building in the space of four years. Balboaville, as the section of Long Beach is now called, is a community all by itself with a population of more than 350 workers. It comprises a score of buildings, substantial, attractively finished and set off by appropriate landscape gardening.

The initial capital of $7,000 has been turned over and over. At present the Balboa Studio represents a very substantial investment, and is operated at a weekly expense far in excess of the original capital. It is the property of E. D. Horkheimer, my brother, and myself. He is associated in the active management of the plant and is secretary and treasurer of the Balboa Company. I hold the office of president and general manager.

When I decided to enter the film world I determined at the very outset to be an independent producer. I have always remained such. I attribute any success that may have been ours to that reason. I endeavored to avoid what to my mind was the handicap of tying up to a single release. The result has been extremely gratifying and, I believe, Balboa is at present one of the largest actually independent motion picture studios in the industry.

At the present time Balboa has three active outlets—Pathe, General Film Company and B. S. Moss. In our time we have sold pictures to William Fox, the World Film Corporation and other well known distributors. I believe that our position in this respect is unique in motion picture annals. We have proceeded on the assumption—the fact, rather—that there is always a market for good pictures.

The Balboa Company has made a vast amount of money since going into business. Aside from what has been acquired for operating expenses and a good living the profits have all gone back into the business. That's the way we have kept on enlarging. We have never resorted to outside capital.

H. M. Horkheimer.

A Glimpse Into the Past By J. Stuart Blackton

Happenings of the Early Days Told by One Who Took an Active Part in Them—Tricks That Won't Pass Muster Now

JUST before the great San Francisco fire we erected our first Vitagraph studio building. It seemed rather a fine and inspiring thing to have an entire structure all our own, set in the midst of our own broad acres in Flatbush, just on the hither side of Sheepshead Bay. We had been producing pictures for quite a few years already—in a rented room, and on a house-top, in the down town section of New York. Now, we told ourselves, we would do pictures that should have the benefit of all the trimmings and improvements. Before the cement-block walls of our new motion picture home were fairly up, however, we realized that we had made one very vital mistake. We ought to have planned a building just four times as large as the one we were rearing. Otherwise put, the progress of our business out-distanced our architectural foresight in the ratio of four to one—even while our walls grew before our eyes.

J. Stuart Blackton.

A few years earlier, housed in a little eight-by-ten studio, my partner, Mr. Smith, and myself, had sent flocks of little home-made and home-grown films out toward the American public. Harbingers they were—of the vastly bigger things to be. The American public had responded so heartily that the Flatbush studio, which had once been a dream, resolved itself into an actual duty. But we hadn't gauged the extent of that duty—it had turned out so much bigger than our expectations. We consoled ourselves that we had at least plenty of room and that more cement blocks might be purchased and laid one on the other. This studio, with all the trimmings and improvements, about which we had dreamed, revealed itself as the merest nucleus of things to come—before we had even housed ourselves in it.

In spite of all that, there was much thrill and zest in being able to send out pictures that represented the very summit of the art—for those days.

Take "Raffles," for instance. How proud we were to be able to describe so huge a feature in our business prospectus. One of these neat catalogues de luxe is before me as I write. A few quotations at random will give the film fan of to-day a better idea of this picture of yesterday than any words of mine: "By arrangement with Kyrle Bellew and Liebler and Company, 'The Adventures of Raffles the Amateur Cracksman, Seven Thrilling Adventures in Eighteen Wonderful Scenes.'"

If our eye now skips to the bottom of the page, we will learn that "Raffles" was 1,050 feet long, a most sensational size. On this same page, the various adventures of "Raffles" are described in detail. The general character of this synopsis may be illustrated by a quotation from the paragraph labeled "The Third Adventure."

"Raffles . . . rescues his pal in a very nervy manner. This subterfuge is very cleverly executed, and the audience really sees the point and admires Raffles' stratagem."

Happy innocent days—when a catalog could assure an exhibitor, with candid pride, that an audience sees the point. We can't always do that now. Exhibitors have grown skeptical.

In that year of 1905, I had not yet outgrown my fondness for all kinds of "trick" photography, generally of my own devising. What pride I took in carrying out all the weird happenings in "The Haunted Hotel"! By means of a stop mechanism in the lens-shutter, I endowed heavy pieces of furniture with airy animation. The knife sawed through the loaf of bread unassisted, "In a manner calculated to baffle the spectators," as our catalogues might have said.

Nowadays, a vastly different order of problem engrosses my attention.

The enthusiasm is the same, but I fear I have outgrown my joy in lens magic as a thing by itself. Camera tricks are still all right, but they have reached a point where they must interpret rather than divert. The things that interest one nowadays have big names and sound very "highbrow." First and foremost comes screen psychology. We had begun to think of that even before we moved into the big, free spaces of Flatbush. But, on the whole, it was more engrossing to get a picture of a miniature girl, about two inches tall, dancing on the bowl of a bachelor's smoking pipe, than to make any camera study of that bachelor's individual temperament. Such psychology as we sought was along pretty elemental lines. A gambling man wore a checked suit and a fierce, black mustache. A western man wore a sombrero and carried pistols and knives. About there, our psychology generally stopped. If we wanted a good many types at once, we asked Bill Smith, or Jim Brown if he couldn't find us a few. Then Bill Smith would scratch his head and remember that John Jones, Ed. Morgan and a few others might come over to help us out, if we got 'em on the telephone. And, Jim Brown would recall three or four acquaintances who would be "just what we were after." Following which we would round up as many of these proxy friends and acquaintances as we could, and proceed with our picture.

Nowadays, the most experienced actor must first "show us" in a registration made by the camera. He may, in his own proper person, appear to be exactly what we are looking for, and yet transpire as an altogether different character in his film version. He may look strong in life and weak on the screen, or vice versa. Mind you, I am not saying that such contradictions are inevitable. They are not. The camera is generally a very truthful if slightly exaggerated analyst of actual characteristics. But, its analysis often seems to diverge from face values, and I make the assertion with no thought of punning.

Colors, too, had comparatively little value for us in those early days. What could colors matter when the only fate ahead of them was transmutation into plain black, or white, or gray? Nowadays, we have discovered how infinite a scale of gradation lies between the black and the white. We assemble photographs of every varying tone of every color on a chart, and if our picture heroine is told she must wear a particular shade of cerise, it is because we know just what tone will be produced in the picture through the use of that shade. Problems like these, and the manifold problems of lighting, constitute the "aesthetics" of the screen. That is another "highbrow" word about which we worried less in the older days. It engrosses us now—keeps us awake more hours than our "haunted hotel" tricks used to in the olden days. A rousing big western story, say eight hundred feet long, didn't go in much for aesthetics back in 1905. It contented itself with thrills.

Death's Toll for the Decade

THE hand of Death has not fallen heavily upon the big men in the motion picture business during the past ten years. Few men prominent in its affairs have passed to the Great Beyond. Most notable among these, mentioned in order of demise, are:

Charles J. Hite, president of the Thanhouser Company at the time of his death, August 22, 1914. Mr. Hite was killed in an accident while driving his automobile. He started in the motion picture business in Chicago in 1905 with S. S. Hutchinson, carrying on an exchange business under the firm name of Hite & Hutchinson. Afterward he became interested in the manufacturing of films with Mr. Hutchinson in the American Company and was one of the incorporators and directors of the Film Supply Company, and later of the Mutual Film Corporation, with which he was connected at the time of his death.

John Bunny, famous as a screen comedian, died at his home in Brooklyn, N. Y., on April 26, 1915.

Samuel Long, one of the organizers of the Kalem Company, died at his home in New York City on July 28, 1915. Long started his motion picture career with the Biograph Company in the photographic department. His success with the Kalem Company placed him among the leaders.

M. A. Neff, best known for his work as organizer and first national president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League

To-day we don't even stop at the things I've alluded to already. We throw a whole system of ethics on the screen in the form maybe of an eight or nine reel parable. We try for eloquence in pictures. Our "Battle Cry of Peace" was a preachment. We've tried hard to make our "Womanhood" an epic poem. In pictures like these, we've gone deeper than screen psychology. We've thrown heart and soul into the problem of screen metaphysics.

To all these things I can do no more than passingly allude. They are matters for a big book—much bigger than the one left us by the late Hugo Munsterberg. Maybe some one among us may write that book some day, if the fascination of picture making should ever relax enough to give us the time.

of America, died in New York City on October 6, 1915. He began as a picture theater manager in 1907, and was three times elected president of the National League.

Arthur Spiegel, president of the World Film Corporation, died in New York City on April 7, 1916. He was a comparatively new man in the motion picture business, but he headed a corporation of importance and gave promise of doing much constructive work. His home was in Chicago.

William T. Rock, one of the pioneer picture men and founder of the Vitagraph Company of America, died at his country home at Oyster Bay, New York, July 27, 1916. He was one of the best known picture men in the business and probably the wealthiest.

Gaston Melies died in France during the year 1915, to which country he had retired after turning its affairs in New York to his son, Paul Melies. He was well known to the trade and began business here as representative of his brother, George Melies, a French producer.

George A. Magie, widely known film salesman and manager of production, died in Chicago on October 12, 1916.

Edgar J. Mock, editor of Motography, a trade paper published in the interests of motion pictures, died in Chicago on December 18, 1916.

Fred Mace, a veteran comedy player and director, died in New York, February 22, 1917. An extended notice of his death is given in the news columns of this issue.

The Great Works of Pathe Freres

Buildings in France Cover Many Acres and Provide Employment in Peace Times for Thousands of Employes

THE house of Pathe Freres is one of the most important film manufacturing and displaying concerns of the world, and perhaps the most important industrial concern of France. It is a house which employs over 6,500 workers and which in time of peace has offices in almost every civilized country on the globe.

Situated along the large boulevards, "the glory of Paris and wonderful center where the five parts of the world meet together," the head office of Pathe Freres occupies a sumptuous building. Here are situated the executive and accounting departments of the company, which alone employ about 400 men and women. At the ground floor an immense hall gives access to the exhibition rooms and premises for the sale of phonographs and moving picture apparatus.

On the first and second floors are the salesrooms and the auditorium, the general management and the various departments connected with it, and the magnificent room of the Board of Administration. On the third floor are the executive offices of the moving picture business. On the fourth floor is installed the very important department of film exchange and sale of apparatus for France and the colonies. There is also to be found the management of the "KOK" cinematograph device for private families, together with the associated sales and exchange departments. The other floors are reserved for the various departments of the Pathe News, the senior of the moving picture press.

The city of Vincennes, the cradle of the famous manufacturers and founders of the Pathe Freres company, has rapidly grown to be the city of the film. The factories, which cover an area of 20,500 square meters, representing a workshop and studio area of 28,000 square meters, occupy permanently a staff of 1,700 employees and workmen of both sexes.

In 1908, the date of their creation, the works of the Rue des Vignerons occupied a modest area of 1,600 square meters. At present the works employ a staff of 900 employees of both sexes.

In 1907, when the concern of Pathe Freres was still purchasing from outsiders the necessary raw film, their daily production was 30,000 meters of printed film; in 1909 it was 70,000 meters. Since 1913, the date at which the house of Pathe Freres finally freed itself from foreign tutelage, the daily production jumped to 160,000 meters. Today it amounts to over 300,000 meters a day, and the factory is sufficiently vast and equipped to furnish regularly a still greater output.

The hothouses, menagerie and laboratories, as well as the vast studio special to that department, occupy the largest part of the old buildings in the Rue des Vignerons. In these premises are continuously working a number of French and foreign savants assisted by experienced operators. They have created the marvelous scientific films which have become the indispensable auxiliaries of teachers and public speakers. Among such educational productions may be mentioned films on popular science, entomology, microbiology, radio-cinematography, oceanography, etc., also ultra-microscopic views.

The Pathe News was founded in 1909. It was received with general enthusiasm all over the world. Previously located in the factory of the Rue des Vignerons, Pathe News soon increased in such proportions that its transfer to the head office, Boulevard des Italiens, was made necessary about a year ago.

At some hundred yards away from the factory of the Rue des Vignerons, 39 Rue du Bois, is the coloring factory, which occupies immense premises over five stories high and keeps busy a personnel of over 500 girls.

The lack of light, which is an unavoidable consequence of the winter season, has induced the Pathe Company to erect a third studio in the country of eternal sunshine—the marvelous coast of azure of Southern France—thus doing away with any possible stoppage in the production.

Older than the factory at Vincennes—it was erected

Charles Pathe.

Pathe Studio, Jersey City, N. J.

in 1905—the factory at Joinville-le-Pont occupies an area of 15,000 square meters and provides permanent work for 1,100 persons. The establishment is equipped with a 500-horsepower engine, with boilers which can evaporate 10,000 kilos of water per hour. The production amounts to 150,000 meters of emulsified film per day, i. e., about one-half of the daily production of non-flam base in the Vincennes factory. At the Joinville factory also are developed, printed, verified and forwarded to the various parts of the globe the plays edited by the house of Pathe Freres, which represent a daily production of 150,000 meters of printed film.

The factory for the mechanical construction of all moving picture apparatus of the well-known Pathe Freres brand is located in Paris, at 9 and 13 Rue des Envierges, on an area of 8,800 square meters, and employs a staff of 850 workmen and 100 clerks. Besides the cameras and projection machines, this factory makes all devices used in the manufacture of films, punching machines, measuring, cleaning and printing apparatus, etc., as well as small motors for continuous and alternating current, transformers, rheostats, switchboards, etc. The manufacture of moving picture and electrical apparatus alone is assured by 1,070 machine tools.

Ten Years of Film Publicity

Sam Spedon Relates His Experience as an Originator of Advertising Stunts.

TEN years is a long time to go back, for a man who lives in the present keeps up to date—keeps pace with the conditions of the present and lets yesterday remain where he left it. Nothing makes a man feel and look more like a “has-been” than to take out the old family album and the dog-eared scrapbook and refer back to the reminders of the past.

Just because a fellow is called the dean of publicity men is no reason why he should be elected to live ten years of his life over again and record the sins and transgressions of that decade, unless it might furnish some material for his obituary. These reminiscences being entirely my own, I trust you will pardon the necessity of using the first person singular.

Sam Spedon.

Ten years ago there wasn't much moving picture publicity to speak or write about; my actual experience began eight years ago when I went with the Vitagraph Company. At that time the Vitagraph produced a one-reel picture each week; the publicity for its releases comprised a one-page circular, descriptive of the picture with a half-tone cut of a still and a one-sheet poster printed in black and white with a big half-tone cut of one of the stills. To get out this publicity two newspaper men, Epes W. Sargent and Frank E. Woods, were employed, assisted by George Hedden and supervised by Messrs. Smith and Blackton. The Vitagraph output then increased to two releases a week. It was at this time A. E. Smith said to me he thought there was a very comfortable little niche for me in the publicity end of the business. I often wondered if he meant that as a joke, for it was not very long afterward he fitted up a corner of the negative and joining room where I was installed (it always reminded me of a stall), as the advertising and publicity manager of the Vitagraph Company of America. With the aid of a stenographer I assumed what seemed to me one of the most important positions in the undeveloped industry. This feeling was enhanced by the distinction of being the first regularly recognized publicity manager in the industry with an actual publicity department. In addition to getting out the publicity I interviewed actors, actresses and aspirants; incidentally I drew plans for “props” and went to the libraries, sometimes at night, to get references and to make sketches of periodic furnishings and costumes for the more pretentious productions. If there was nothing to do till tomorrow I read scenarios, then called manuscripts.

To make a long story short, the releases increased until they reached six every week, with one or two “specials” of two to five reels, making the output from twenty-four to thirty reels a month. In the meantime we added photographs of the plays, postal cards, advertising novelties, colored one, three, six and twenty-four sheet posters and special music. All the releases had to be seen before written up and published in a monthly bulletin of fifty-six pages, with publicity matter, music cues and helps. For four years and a half I handled the whole outfit with the aid of two stenographers and an office boy, who did the wrapping and shipping of photographs and novelties. I almost overlooked the weekly contributions of publicity to the trade and newspapers. By way of recreation I engineered the personal appearances of the players on “Vitagraph Nights,” conducted our exhibits at all the expositions and represented the company at conventions, etc. By way of variety, in addition to writing the ads, I made most of the drawing for the ads to save expense and not deprive my employers of a new flying machine or some other necessity.

Wherein did I sin and transgress? By setting the pace for all other publicity men, up to three years ago, who were expected to do the same things and show like results.

Three years ago the Vitagraph plant and outfit grew to such proportions it gave us a more commodious room for the publicity department, where the light of the sun shone in, the first in five years, and we could look out upon the earth that surrounded us. The publicity staff was increased to five, including a man to write publicity.

Three years ago came the dawn of a new era in motion picture advertising and publicity. The one-man publicity department of the Vitagraph had foreseen the coming era, was prepared with all the necessary office equipment and arrangements, but it lacked the monetary appropriation, the authority to exercise the initiative and the staff. Since then its staff has been increased to sixteen, including two artists, each one of the sixteen doing his or her special bit.

The history of the Vitagraph publicity department is characteristic of the old-line producing companies. Those who are engaged in motion picture publicity and advertising today under present conditions can hardly be expected to fully appreciate what it meant in years gone by. It is only a repetition of the history of commercial advertising; I have been through both campaigns and watched their growth and development. While I have been through both, I am not living in the past. I rejoice, with those who rejoice, to see motion picture publicity and advertising come into its own and know that it has not yet reached its limit.

The Small Town Exhibitor By H. S. Newman

By One With Nine Years' Practical Experience—Pays His Respects to Some Film Salesmen and Suggests More Co-operation.

DURING my nine years exhibiting experience in different sections of Delaware, and at present located near two large cities, I am prompted to give some of my observations pertaining to the relations existing between the film exchanges and the small town exhibitors. I have come to the belief that producers and exchanges are neglecting a fertile field of output by the manner in which service is supplied to the smaller exhibitors of the country. As the small tributaries are essential to the forming of and maintenance of larger streams, likewise the small exhibitors now contribute to and eventually will prove a vital factor in the maintenance and growth of the great motion picture industry.

The service, with few exceptions, now available for use by small exhibitors at a price permissible of profit is a disgrace to the companies producing the pictures and to the exchanges supplying same to exhibitors. Exchanges, exempting a very few, send out road representatives that antagonize an intelligent exhibitor on the first approach. Time and again I have had a salesman representing an established film organization solicit business, using as his principal argument "It's a clean up." If I did not warm up under this assertion, he would open up his "Pandora" packet and fish out a lurid poster, or else one showing nudity of the female form. "It will pack your house," he continues. Yes! perhaps it might one night, but how about weathering the storm of protest sure to follow the exhibition of a questionable production in a straight-laced, small community? On one or two occasions I have had a salesman call at my home to see me when his condition from excessive bending of his elbow caused a hostility on my part that made me cuss an exchange that employed this type of a representative. When will exchanges realize that the type of their representatives reflects the quality of their organization? No definite steps seem to be taken to study the needs of the locality where business is solicited. We hear the same old story in the same old way. Selling methods followed with a country exhibitor that more aptly apply to his city brother. No argument advanced to show where the exhibitor will profit, except the old stereotyped expression "It's a clean up," or it's the "biggest thing on earth." The industry is old enough to demonstrate the fact that what might be shown in one locality at a profit proves a loss in some other locality.

Many photoplay fans in towns adjacent to cities, since the advent of the automobile, frequently attend theatres in the larger cities where the film brands shown in their home town are exhibited under the most favorable conditions; namely, good grade of film, good music, most attractive surroundings, etc. Naturally, they come home, hunt up the local exhibitor, and desire to know why he does not show film like that seen in the city theatre. This type of fan knows something is radically wrong when in his home town he is forced to watch a "rainy" film, a film with a hundred and one jumps caused from improperly made patches, a film completely matted with oil; sometimes with no title, and oftentimes merely a flash of subtitle. It is not a pleasant ordeal to explain to this fan why he is not shown better film. When a fan from a small town visits the city he very naturally will seek that theatre where his favorite brand of pictures is advertised to be shown. The better grade of film of any particular make that we can give them at home creates a demand to see that brand whenever one is visiting in another town or city. If poor film of any brand is constantly exhibited in the smaller communities, residents of those communities, when they have an opportunity to witness some other brand in some other town or city, are more than likely to seek such change in brand feeling that the brand names of those films they are in the habit of seeing may all be in the same faulty condition, no matter where they see them advertised.

If other large commercial enterprises take unlimited pains to satisfy small town dealers and users of their products, why should not the same efforts prevail in the fifth industry of the United States? Are there not enough small town exhibitors to warrant one print or more being used solely for their use by the exchanges? By this I do not mean a worn out print, but a new one.

A short time ago I received an invitation to attend a luncheon given in a nearby city by one of the most prominent film organizations. I had to pinch myself to see if I was really living. I was not a user of this particular program, hence the more complete the surprise. Attending this affair, I was treated to the first concrete evidence that at least one distributing agency had foresight enough to at least reach out and seek co-operation with the small exhibitor. Exhibitors present vouched for the reality of the good things this organization was supplying its patrons, chief of which was film in excellent condition, new prints having been bought of early releases that had proved their worth as money getters and that were available to small town exhibitors throughout the territory, and at a price, too, that would permit of a profit by the small town exhibitor. A large assortment of free advertising accessories calculated to help the exhibitor make money is also available.

A representative of one of the large express companies was present and stated how this particular exchange manager was instrumental in arousing his company to an appreciation of the importance of better express facilities, citing what had already been done along these lines and promising other reforms to come—think of it! Is the small exhibitor at last to come into his own? After waiting nine years for co-operation of this nature, surely at last there is hope. I predict this progressive distributing concern is going to sign up a bunch of appreciative small town exhibitors who will whoop their heads off for this particular program, and who some day, if not at once, will prove valuable assets.

Let the exchanges give a better inspection of all film, and devise a system of reports covering its handling by all employees of the exchanges and the exhibitors. Arrange a different schedule of film rentals commensurate with the earning possibility of any film with any exhibitor anywhere. Give the small exhibitor a chance to live. Some of us have large families and have no other source of income. Exchanges seem to lose sight of the fact that in most towns it is only feasible to give one exhibition, namely, at night. It is not possible to start at 11 A. M. and continue until 11 P. M., as is the custom in very large towns and cities. The opportunity to earn the price of the film rental and to make a profit is a mighty uncertain proposition with but one exhibition. As is often the case, the small exhibitor has for a competitor a church entertainment, or a free lecture by some fraternal organization or woman's club, which will pull just enough of his patronage to turn the evening's exhibition into a losing venture. When this happens on possibly a couple of the three or four running nights that you have been in the custom of running your show, it is easy to infer how often the country exhibitor has to dig deep into his reserve funds to meet his film rental and other expenses.

Exchanges play safe. They have your hard earned coin in their coffers before a reel of film is shipped out. Weather conditions or other deflecting causes cause them no concern—only the exhibitor has to take the gamblers' chance, and when he only has one chance to win can any one wonder that he is sometimes a hard prospect to handle, and that he is prone to squeal at some of the abortive prices asked for decent film, and in some cases for "junk?"

The problems of the small town exhibitors are in a class by themselves. Exchanges err in trying to solve them along the same lines as applied to large town and city exhibitors. The same exactions of film rental should not apply. Concessions not logical to larger exhibiting centers should be given small town exhibitors.

Salesmen capable of studying the needs of the smaller exhibitor and willing to aid them in making their ventures profitable are the only ones who should be sent into such territory soliciting their trade. To send any other type is doing both the exchange and exhibitor harm.

Thanks to the efficient trade journals, the small exhibitor can keep posted on doings pertaining to the industry in general. To sell some of us film we desire to know how far any organization will co-operate to meet our needs; we want assurance by demonstration that promises made by salesmen will be respected by the exchange; we want film in a condition that it can be projected with credit to every person concerned, and we want it at a price that will enable us to make a decent profit.

When it pleases certain powers that be to let the small exhibitor know that he is considered a cog in the wheel of this great big growing industry, I firmly believe they will not regret having done so.

When Film Reviewing Was a New Job

When there were only seventy picture titles released a week, commenting on the films was a different job, and in many ways pleasanter. There was Chester Clapp of the Mirror, Calder Johnstone of the Telegraph, and the World man. Projection rooms were never entered. I suspect we were better known to the vaudevillians, who saw us every day, than to the screen players, but those were the good old days.

Development of the Gaumont Company ☼ ☼ ☼ ☼ ☼

Founded in 1893, This Notable Establishment Has Taken Prominent Part in the Development of the Motion Picture Art

THIS well-known French firm was founded in 1893 under the name of "Comptoir General de Photographie," and has occupied since that time the building at 57 Rue Saint Roch, at the corner of the Avenue de l'Opera, Paris. It became a corporation in 1895 under the name of L. Gaumont & Co. Under the direction of the founder, Leon Gaumont, the company rapidly extended its activities to all branches of photography.

In 1895, within two years of the founding of the company, Mr. Gaumont began work on the problems involved in the perfection of animated photography. In that year the company placed on the market pictures obtained with the apparatus known as the Demy Bioscope. A year later Mr. Gaumont built the Chronophotograph, using the principle of the tappet (came d'entrainement) invented by Demy. His next apparatus, built for professionals and named the Chrono, met with such success at the Universal Exposition in Paris in 1900 that four-fifths of the cinematographic attractions at the Exposition and throughout Paris were provided with it.

Realizing the growing importance of the moving picture branch of the industry, a new department was created to take charge of the manufacture of apparatus and also to take cinematographic pictures and release them for public showing. This department was organized as a separate corporation late in 1906, under the name "Société des Etablissements Gaumont."

The growth of the plant had difficulty in keeping pace with the development of the business. In 1896 the first quarters occupied the small space of 1,100 square feet and only a dozen employes were required, a ten horse-power generator being sufficient for all purposes. By 1912 the company required 157,000 square feet of floor space and a 1,000 horse-power generator, and had forty-six branches in foreign countries. At the present time the Paris plant of the Gaumont Company occupies an area of 275,000 square feet and requires a 2,000 horse-power generator. The main hall of its immense studio has 11,000 square feet of floor space and a height of 60 feet.

Leon Gaumont.

Gaumont Plant, Rue Carducci, Paris.

The company also has ample grounds and a studio for outdoor work at Nice, on the Riviera.

During all these years the founder of the company and the staff working under his personal direction have developed many inventions and marked improvements in moving picture cameras and apparatus. In 1900 the Chromoscopé was put on the market. By this machine colors were photographed by the three-color process. The study of this problem continued to interest Mr. Gaumont, and in 1912 he presented, first at a private view and later at a public showing on December 6, 1912, at the Gaumont theater, some very beautiful colored films. The company also placed its first "talking picture" machine on the market in 1902, adding improvements the following year and marketing it under the title of the Chronophone.

Among the rewards obtained by the Gaumont Company at important exhibitions are the following:

First prizes at the Universal Exhibition of Paris, 1900.

The Universal Exhibition of Liege, 1905.

The International Exhibition of Milan, 1906.

Hors Concours at the International Exhibition, Lille, 1903, and at the Universal Exhibition at St. Louis, 1904.

The American branch of the Gaumont Company has its headquarters, studios and laboratories at Flushing, N. Y. Its productions, including its well-known weeklies and scenic films, are released through the Mutual Film Corporation. The South American headquarters of the company are at Buenos Aires, Argentine Republic.

Every Year Like Ten, Says Universal Man By R. H. Cochrane

In Malden Signed Effort He Describes Weird, Impossible, Fighting, Scheming, Hustling Years—Million Feet of Film Sounds Not So Big Now.

FULLY one hundred years of experience have been crowded into the ten years that have passed since I first came into the moving picture business. For that reason it is rather a tough job to tell you in a short article, such as you request, the recollections of the ten wildest, busiest, craziest and most fascinating years of my life. Furthermore, this is my maiden effort in this line, for in ten weird, impossible, fighting, scheming, hustling years this is the first time I have written a signed story of my experiences for any publication.

Certain things which stand out clearly in my recollection of the earlier years of the business may strike you as trivial, but here they are:

Very shortly after becoming interested in the exchange business with Mr. Laemmle in Chicago, I learned that the New York Exchange then owned by Miles Brothers had a million feet of film in its vaults. At that time the figures seemed staggering. A thousand reels of film! I could hardly realize that any exchange could accumulate such a tremendous quantity, for at that time Mr. Laemmle us with a bank guaranty covering the cost of the film, for that was the custom in those days.

And yet how short a time it was before dozens and then scores and finally hundreds of exchanges each had a million of positive film on hand for rental purposes. This one little contrast, according to my notion, does more to open the eyes to the wizard growth of the business than any other comparative figures.

Another evidence of development in the business is along an entirely different line; I refer now to the mental growth of the men in the trade—in all branches of it.

In "the old days" there was an overwhelming mass of petty jealousies, personal hatred and fostered bitterness. It was impossible to get any very considerable group of exchange men or producers or exhibitors to work together for the common good, because each of us thought the other had an ulterior motive. And each of us was generally right! Agreements were made only to be smashed. Practices were indulged in which would not be tolerated in any business which pretended to be decent.

For example, I will never forget the occasion when there was a large meeting of exchange men in Chicago at which time the members were supposed to pay their dues. Some of them started to write checks, but William H. Swanson, who was president of the association, pounded for order and said:

"Fellow-members, no checks will be accepted as payment of dues to place the members in good standing unless such checks are certified."

"Why not?" asked someone in the room.

"Because," replied Mr. Swanson, "I have here a whole drawerful of checks that have been dishonored at the bank where I tried to deposit them!" And as he spoke he pulled a drawer from the desk and displayed a solid mass of checks from all parts of the country—and every one of them worthless.

Contrast this with present day conditions and you will realize that there has been a growth in more ways than one.

Nowadays it is possible for competitors to meet and act like sane men. It is possible for them to speak sincerely, to lay their cards on the table and to work for the good of the whole instead of selfishly.

R. H. Cochrane.

and I were operating on a handful of reels, not one of which would we send to an exhibitor unless furnished

Still another feature which strikes me as I take a ten year look backward is the fact that each different branch of the trade always considered itself the goat of the trade. The exhibitor has always felt that he was crushed by the exchange; the exchange has always felt that it was torn to pieces between the exhibitor and the producer; while the producer has always felt that the exchanges and the exhibitor were doing their blamest to drag him down and down and down.

Possibly in another ten years we will all come to realize that this feeling is purely imaginary in each instance; possibly we will realize that each branch of the trade has its separate work to perform and that it must take the bad with the good.

Let's not indulge in talk about "the good old days of the film game," for as a matter of fact there's not a man in the business today who would go back to the early stages of it if he could. It's so much cleaner than it used to be, so much more advanced, and contains so much more promise than it ever did that "the good old days" seem like the dark ages in comparison with the rosy present and the still rosier future.

How a Film Exchange Started By Sol L. Lesser

Conditions in San Francisco Ten Years Ago, After the Fire—A Film Exchange That Filled a Need.

FROM its rough, early stages, when the moving picture catered only to the uneducated and unrefined, with its poorly lighted, badly ventilated—shall I call them theaters?—with its tin-can piano, has evolved the modern picture theater, artistically modeled, well built, well fitted, thoroughly ventilated; with its wonderful environment and careful detail as to music, settings, etc., appealing to the masses, and bringing out, in spite of early intolerance, those who even five years ago looked upon the moving picture show as a menace.

Sol. L. Lesser.

Ten years ago, after the fire that burned this city, the moving picture first came into prominence in San Francisco. Reminiscent of this period was the small, veritable fire-trap in which I ground out many thousands of feet of film, in direct contrast with the well ventilated, clean operator's booth of today.

When the city was rebuilt after the big fire, there were practically ten moving picture shows in a radius of three blocks, which comprised the center of activities at the time. With a string of theaters located in the very heart of this district, and a daily change program, our only solution to the problem of obtaining suitable films suggested itself in the organization of an exchange.

Primarily to meet our own requirements, a franchise was obtained for the first independent films—the Imp, Thanouser, Powers, etc., and the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., was organized. Our first departure from the single reel program, then in vogue, came in the purchase of "Dante's Inferno." It instilled in me the desire to buy more feature films, if possible. At this time, however, the only available features on the market were foreign made, in antipathy to the American tastes.

When the Mutual program was first launched on the market, the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., obtained its output. With the first two-reelers released on this program, particularly the Kay-Bee's and Broncho's, came the absolute realization of the possibilities for expansion in the renting of films of longer length than the single-reelers of that period. When Harry Raver launched the All-Star features, I signed for the entire output, among which were "Arizona," "Checkers," "Paid in Full." All of these proved mighty successful from the box office standpoint to the exhibitor. I then conceived the plan of an organization to handle only feature film—calling it the All-Star Feature Distributors, Inc.

Thus we were the pioneer feature exchange of the Coast, operating in California, Arizona, Nevada, Utah, Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico, Washington, Oregon and Idaho. These states were handled from offices at San Francisco, Los Angeles, Portland, Seattle, Denver, Spokane and Salt Lake City. Simultaneously I purchased Selig's "Spoilers," Vitagraph's "Christian," and Itala's "Cabiria." I handled all three of these productions in the same manner as a road show. Each company had its advance man and manager.

Careful attention was given to proper advertising and newspaper exploitation. We billed every town we played, as though he had a circus. With meritorious box office winners to back us up, we gained the lasting confidence of the exhibitor in our territory, who began to look to my exchange for the big productions.

The successful exhibitor today is the man who runs the theater pointed out by the populace as the house to go to because of the assuredness of always seeing a good show. I have endeavored to pick my features in the same way, so that the exhibitor, when in need of an absolute money getter, can feel confident that any picture from my exchange will net him the desired results.

During 1916 we marketed Selig's "Ne'er Do Well," Universal's "Where Are My Children?," the new De Luxe Edition of "The Spoilers," with repeated success. We were among the originators of the Metro program. We handled Vitagraph's "Battle Cry of Peace."

So far the year 1917 has brought Herbert Brenon's "War Brides," Selznick's Clara Kimball Young productions, Ince's "Civilization;" to be followed immediately by Selig's "Garden of Allah."

Each and every person in my employ labors under one primary instruction. Make no promises for the financial outcome of a picture that cannot be backed up. First, last and at all times figure from the exhibitor's standpoint. His confidence and success mean the survival of the industry.

With "The Spoilers" began my system of specializing on every picture. We studied the requisites necessary for the making of each picture a money getter, for the mutual benefit of the exhibitor and myself—with the result that in the very limited territory of California, Nevada and Arizona, we are today booking solidly five prints of everything we handle, without a single salesman on the road. The money other exchanges spend in travel and salesmen's salaries is used by use for exploitation of the films—to the direct benefit of the exhibitor.

Last year, handicapped with a limited territory and with surplus capital at my command, my organization purchased Selig's "Ne'er Do Well" for the entire United States. I was successful in obtaining, as an associate in the handling of this great picture on a national basis, the Vitagraph Company of America.

My faith in the masterpiece production is greater than it ever was. Through a vista of myriad films I see shining the beacon light for the real, meritorious, masterpiece production. By "masterpiece" I mean a big, clean-cut product, with plenty of action—which is extremely essential, and which best suits the particular tastes of the American audiences.

Slim Days in Keystone Beginnings By Mack Sennett

Starting a New Company Not So Easy As It Seemed—Coupons Very Soon Displaced Pawnbroker's Slips, However.

THE motion picture has been galloping ahead at such a gait that to be ten years old is to be almost archaic. Five years ago we were just beginning work at the little shanty on the vacant lot where the Keystone studio finally grew and thrived.

Mr. Kessel, Mr. Baumann and myself had started the company on a shoestring. I had been acting in and directing comedies with another company. It looked very easy to start a new company. All you had to do was to hire some actors and put them up in front of the camera and take the picture and—well, there you were. We found out afterward that it wasn't so easy.

All the money we had between us went up with one puff and whoof. Then we had to start in pawning the family jewels. And sometimes it looked as though there wouldn't be enough family jewels to last.

The first pictures we took were at Fort Lee. We didn't have any studio and there was one scene where we just had to have an interior; so we borrowed the house of some worthy and kind hearted Christian, and moved the furniture out on the front lawn and used that for an interior.

We had a cameraman who looked like a Russian grand duke and talked as though he had invented the art of photography. We didn't have money enough to hire automobiles, so we went out in the street cars or walked. We pinned our faith to this photographer with the grand air. When his first pictures were developed we found that he had spoiled the whole thing and that all our watches and our sacrifices had gone for nothing.

We braced up our flagging courage and moved the company out to Los Angeles and started the Keystone studio. In those days I was author of all the scenarios, actor, director, film cutter and telephone girl.

Mack Sennett.

Oddly enough the first pictures we made at the new studios were also failures.

Just when things looked to be so bad they couldn't get much worse they turned and began to improve. Finally the grand day came when our first dividends were paid.

The Keystone now has one of the largest studios in the world. We have a big electric light studio where eight or ten companies can work at once. There are two big outdoor stages, a wild west town, a swimming tank and all manner of equipment for the accommodation of the twenty-one companies which regularly work under the Keystone banner.

Expansion in Lantern Slide Industry

Increase in Ten Years Measured by the Remarkable Figures of Five Thousand Per Cent.

By JOSEPH F. COUFAL.

TEN years ago the lantern slide industry was an educational institution; today it is a commercial proposition. Lecture slides and recitation slides were the output of the manufacturers in business at the time; song slides were just breaking into public favor. Maxwell and Simpson gave the public a novelty treat when they played the song slide attraction over the vaudeville circuits. The music publishers were quick to appreciate the value of the song slide, and so that end of the slide industry grew rapidly. Within the short space of two years Scott & Van Altna, De Witt C. Wheeler, Al Simpson, Lindsey Gordon, Al Harstn, Levi Company, and the Novelty Slide Company were manufacturing song slides in large quantity. At one time as many as twenty new songs per week were being illustrated.

Joseph F. Coufal.

A condition of overproduction then arose, which is parallel to the overproduction of feature pictures today. Keen competition took place; the price of slides was reduced considerably and quality suffered in like proportion. Moving picture patrons became tired of listening to meaningless songs, illustrated in most cases by poor slides. The cheap song slide singer did his share to bury the song slide attraction, so that after four years of sensational success the song slide passed out of public favor and off the programs of the motion picture theater.

Long before this unfortunate condition arose the writer introduced the advance slide for advertising coming attractions and productions in advance. When the two-reel subject was introduced in the motion picture industry the exhibitor quickly saw the need of giving the longer picture advance publicity, and experience quickly taught him that a slide projected on the curtain, showing a scene from the play and accompanied by a short description of it was a most direct and efficient means of advertising his program ahead. In a comparatively short space of time almost every exhibitor was using the advance slide. As the features grew in length the value of the advance slide became more and more apparent. Today there is not a single feature manufacturer or distributing company that does not use advance slides.

Rapid, indeed, has been the growth of this end of the slide industry; from figures which I have been able to gather from reliable sources I can conservatively state that eight thousand advance slides are made every day; that is, an output of about fifty thousand slides a week. Ten years ago the annual output of slides made in the entire country was figured at fifty thousand, so that in the short space of ten years the feature advance slide has increased the output of the slide manufacturer more than five thousand per cent. I have not pointed out the thousands of slides that are produced each day for national advertisers and lecture purposes. I have simply confined my comparison to feature slides, such as are used by the exhibitor in his daily advertising, and I believe the figures are large enough to impress any reader with the progress of an industry that is older than the motion picture itself, and that it is, beyond a doubt, one of the most staple and necessary accessories in the motion picture business.

Right here I feel it my duty to sound a note of warning. Like the song slide, the feature advance slide business has grown very rapidly, and in some instances careless workmanship has resulted from low quotations and rush orders. I want to impress upon the exhibitor the necessity of paying close attention to the quality of the slides he uses. A poor slide will do him more harm than no slide at all; a cheap slide is a detriment to the theater, a liability to the picture that it advertises and an insult to the intelligence of the audience. Good slides cost the exhibitor no more than the poor ones, and he owes it as a duty to his patrons to give them the best, whether it is in motion pictures or in slides.

A Decade of Educational Advancement ☞ ☞ ☞ ☞ ☞

What Has Been Achieved in the Past Constitutes a Promise for the Future

IN A SURVEY of the last ten years the development of the moving picture has been essentially an educational one. Growth and progress have marked the steady advance toward the realization of those ideals which the believers of the possibilities of cinematography forecast as within the marvelous range of the camera and the screen in their new relationship. As an entertainer the moving picture has no equal in the popular mind, indeed its uses in this respect have become nearly universal; and, while ten years ago there were many crudities and some vulgarities, the natural educational qualities inherent within the scope of the pictures have manifested themselves to the exclusion of all those things which aroused the hypercritical. The writer does not allot any credit to censorship for any of the marked advances or improvements in the presentation of the pictures of the day.

The Reverend W. H. Jackson.

Censorship has only served the ordinary functions of the law—sufficient at all times for such purposes—in suppressing the vicious which always creeps in wherever there is a combination of a morbid taste with prospect of financial gain. Apart from this, all credit so rightly due to the standard of the moving picture to-day is the proof of the natural result of a power which possesses within itself life and growth with educational functions. With the great development of the picture theatre along lines of the highest order perhaps the only weakness is shown in the unlicensed demand for most exorbitant and improper salaries for a certain class of so-called "stars." When this common error shall have also become adjusted (as it surely will), then again will the moving picture continue its progressive course as the people's educational entertainer.

Along distinctly educational lines the growth has been firm and steady but not fast, or at least not as fast as could be wished; this is no fault of the picture but rather the result of desultory adaptability by all classes of educational authorities. Educational institutions generally have had the question of the educational powers of the moving picture thrust upon them with such suddenness that they have not been able to keep pace with its progress. In newly built schools and institutions, secular and religious, the question of the use of the picture never caused one moment's hesitation, due provision always being made for them to the fullest possible extent. In the old buildings and under conditions already existing the adaptability of the pictures caused many unwished for delays which are being steadily overcome. In another ten years the universal use of the moving pictures, not as an aid to but as a part of the educational system, is assured. This not by prediction or wish, but as a natural result of the experiences of the last ten years, as also of their own natural growth and progress.

Lest it may seem that the moving picture has become necessary along but two lines, the educational and the entertaining, it may be well to point out that there is a larger and perhaps still more generally useful field for its profitable employment: Journalism and the Library. The newspaper is so far one of the most forceful of its many useful characteristics—a program in the leading daily exhibitions is poor now that has not its fair share of news of the most important and valuable kind. The European War has not only given an incentive to this class of picture, but has opened the door for such a power of illustration, enlightenment and record that a far greater impression has been made upon the multitude than was possible with the discovery of printing. Great has been the power of the press, greater is and will be the power of the picture.

The library of the picture will be a world power in the future. Only by letting the mind dwell upon what help today would a picture library of the past be can we form an idea of the value to future generations when the picture library shall bring from history those riches which history alone holds secret.

These are the days of the full strength of the early youth of the moving picture, no longer in its infancy, but in the buoyant strength of that vigorous development associated with healthy growth of youth the days of maturity will be truly remarkable for their educational advancement and advantages.

The last ten years has seen the coming together of all classes of leaders in literature, science, art, music, the drama and all scholastic circles in behalf of that which appeals to them in the moving picture possibilities. With these forces (which ten years ago were in no way to be counted upon) no optimistic outlook can be portrayed which will unduly enlarge the vision of the future; to all this the moving picture which has been interwoven with the progress hitherto will still be dedicated with the highest possible motives looking for the highest possible achievements.

Projection Light By J. H. Hallberg

Birth and Development of Electric Economizer and Motor Generator for Control of Motion Picture Arcs

IN THE fall of 1907, on a certain cold and dreary evening, while sitting around the stove in the moving picture and lantern slide establishment of Al Harstn, on East Fourteenth street, in company with a friend of mine who had business there, I was first initiated into the requirements for improvement in the means then used for the control of projector arcs. While we were conversing an operator, much flustered and disturbed, rushed into the room, carrying with him parts of a moving picture outfit he had used the night before while giving an exhibit in a small Pennsylvania town. He immediately unloaded his mind before all of us and stated that he had to call upon the Electric Light Company to put in a special large transformer, and had to construct a water barrel rheostat on the premises in the exhibition hall in order to secure sufficient illumination to show his pictures. He said the arc roared like a threshing machine and could be heard all over the building; that his carbons sputtered and that he had an awful time trying to keep the light sufficiently the expectations of all concerned, and at about that time Hugh Hoffman, a former associate in the editorial department of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, who then conducted a theater in Jersey City, happened in. He was told about the wonderful improvement in the illumination and the great saving of from 50 per cent. to 60 per cent. which could be effected by installing this device in place of the rheostat on his moving picture machine. The cost of this model was necessarily high, but Mr. Hoffman did not bother. He said: "If the Economizer will do for me what you claim for it I will pay you $100 for it, and you can bring it over any time and test it out." The following day the test was made in Mr. Hoffman's small "Nickelodeon" in Jersey City, and there, for the first time, was the "Economizer," or Transformer, as some people call it, put into actual service. It may be stated that this original device was never removed, as it performed its work to Mr. Hoffman's entire satisfaction, and was left there until the theater was finally torn down several years later.

After this preliminary installation had been made other models were constructed in fireproof cases and submitted to the New York Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity, where at that time Jack Skerrett, now general manager of Nicholas Power Company, was the chief inspector. After exhaustive tests by the department, both in the laboratories and in actual service, the Economizer stood the test and delivered the goods as claimed for it, and was the first transforming device approved for use in Greater New York on alternating current, with moving picture machines, in place of rheostats.

Harvey L. Watkins, representing B. F. Keith's moving picture interests throughout New England and Canada, was one of the first managers controlling several theaters who adopted this device for all of his shows.

In the meantime, while the Economizer business was put on a commercial basis, I was devoting my time to exhaustive experiments to produce direct current at the arc for moving picture machines, where the current supply was alternating current, because it was appreciated by all concerned that the smoothness, quietness and intrinsic brilliancy of the direct current arc would mean a wonderful improvement in the projection where only alternating current could be secured.

These motor generators could not be constructed like ordinary motors and generators which would require resistance or rheostats in series with the arc, which would necessarily materially reduce the efficiency and greatly increase the expense of operating and the cost of the motor generator. Therefore an entirely new type of motor generator was devised with such regulating qualisteady to give the exhibition.

J. H. Hallberg.

While taking in these statements of one experienced in the practices of that day, it occurred to me that great improvements could be effected by applying certain principles and devices to overcome just such difficulties as this particular operator had met with.

On that evening the now well known "Economizer" was born—at least in my mind—and it was not more than ten days before a working model of the Economizer, in crude form, was ready for a test. The test came up to ties necessary to permit the arc to operate directly across the terminals on the generator without a rheostat in series with the arc. As a result of these developments a motor generator was produced, which ranged in capacity from 30 to 60 amperes, adjustable at the will of the operator with a small controller in series with the shunt eld of the generator. Many of these machines were installed and they revolutionized the projection with alternating current. The expense of motor generators of this kind, when considered in conjunction with the many small houses with seating capacity under 300, limited the general application of the motor generator, and only the larger and more prosperous houses felt that they could afford to install them—in the beginning, at least.

The introduction of the larger theater with 600 or more seats, the elimination of vaudeville as a part of the moving picture performance, and the introduction of the feature film called for better projection, and the expense was then justified, due to the increase in the admission price and the larger number of seats.

While 35 to 45 amperes was considered a large amount of current for the direct current arc, three or four years ago, the better exhibitors who are up to date and who desire to give their patrons a real picture performance, realizing the value of greater brilliancy at the arc in order to bring out the delicate half-tones in the shadows portrayed by the film on the screen so as to make their pictures stand out in relief with great distinction, have called for generators capable of delivering up to 100 amperes for the arc.

How the World Has Grown

THE accompanying cut will illustrate the growth in volume of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. It shows a bound volume of the first six months of 1908 compared with the first two quarters of 1916. In the little volume are 552 pages, an average of a little over 21 pages to an issue. In the two large books there are, for the first quarter, 2,110 pages and in the second 2,324—that is, those numbers are folioed. As it is the practice of the WORLD not to folio "inserts"—i. e., the colored sheets of advertising that are printed independently of the regular run—the actual total of the volumes is considerably in excess of the number quoted. These are sufficient to make the total for 1916 well above 4,700 pages for the first six months of last year, or between eight and nine times the bulk of the issues for the corresponding period of 1908.

Six Months of the Moving Picture World—Now and Then.

This growth as a rule has been gradual. The first acceleration came with the organization of the Patents Company at the end of 1908 and the corresponding activity of the independent manufacturers. Again, beginning about January 1, 1914, the growth in the number of pages became marked. January-June of 1910 contained 1,136 pages; July-December of the same year the number was 1,564. January-June of 1911 recorded 1,636 pages and the last half of the year 2,128 pages. The first half of 1912 showed 2,524 pages, the last half 2,688. In 1913 the figures were for the respective six months periods 2,816 pages and 3,080. In 1914 they were 3,668 and 3,674. In 1915 the pages had jumped to 4,232 and 4,746.

PARAMOUNT SALESMAN TRANSFERRED.

H. C. Remington, who had covered the North and South Dakota territory for Paramount's Minneapolis exchange, has been transferred to the Milwaukee office and will cover Wisconsin and the surrounding territory, succeeding Leo Eckstein. Mr. Remington's position in the former territory has been taken over by F. W. Bauer.

from the pages of the Moving Picture World. (If you don't believe it look at the accompanying snapshot, which was taken while Vic and his wife were at Santa Monica Beach lately.)

Mrs. "Vic," who is a daughter of Eberhard Schneider, says that the honeymoon enjoyed by her husband and herself would have been incomplete if they had not kept in touch with the doings in the motion picture industry through a thorough perusal of the pages of each week's Moving Picture World.

Mr. and Mrs. Miller will return to New York from the Coast this spring. They plan to make the trip by automobile, and have allowed for stopovers at all points of interest along the transcontinental route.

FAIRBANKS WINS INJUNCTION SUIT.

Douglas Fairbanks, according to a decision handed down by Justice Hotchkiss in the New York Supreme Court on February 23, cannot be restrained from making pictures for any concern other than the Majestic Moving Picture Company. The decision was reached in the injunction proceedings brought against Fairbanks by the Majestic company, who alleged that the star had violated his contract with them. The court held that there was insufficient proof that Fairbanks had waived that provision of his contract, which stated that David W. Griffith was to direct all of Fairbanks' pictures. But the star will have to answer to the $200,000 damage suit, which the Majestic company has brought for alleged breach of contract.

In the case of the Majestic company against John Emerson, who is also alleged to have left the Majestic company while under contract, Justice Hotchkiss decided that Emerson should be restrained by an injunction from working for any other company pending trial of the $100,000 damage suit brought against him.

ANOTHER TAX ON THE EXHIBITORS.

The Music Publishers' Association passed a resolution that no place of entertainment or amusement, charging an admission fee or being run for revenue can use any music copyrighted by its members, without paying a fee for the privilege of playing it.

They decided that moving picture theaters are included in this resolution. We understand the fee is sixty dollars a year, or a proportionate amount for any portion of the year.

Facts and Comments

GREETINGS and best wishes to every reader of our Tenth Anniversary Number. On this occasion in the life of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, we must express as fully and as heartily as we can our appreciation of the continued and constantly increasing interest and support of every branch of the trade. In getting together the material for this issue, it has been a source of greater satisfaction than we can express to find so many of the friends of the early days who have achieved and who have maintained leading positions in this wonderful industry.

* * *

THE respect and goodwill of the friends of the old days is the most valued asset we possess. To the exhibitors who have been readers for years (some ever since the paper was started), to the film manufacturers and exchanges, to the theatrical equipment and supply manufacturers and dealers, to all who have used and supported the paper in any way, we express the hope that we may continue to merit your confidence and support to an even greater extent than in the past decade. We certainly will make every effort to do so on the same straight, clean and upright principles which have governed our past relations and which controlled the late founder of the paper.

A SOMEWHAT peculiar phenomenon is the great number of welfare leagues and similar organizations that are springing up all over this country like daisies in the month of May. Underneath all of them lies the desire that is ever present in the minds of the few to make laws for and control the lives of the many. Surely we have a sufficient number of laws and more than an ample number of elective officials in every community to carry out these laws. Again does it seem reasonable that volunteer and non-elective bodies of irresponsible enthusiasts or propagandists of this or that fad are likely to improve conditions? We think not. We have more than enough of good laws and good means of enforcing them. We have efficient city, state and federal officials and departments competent to cope with any question, and they are responsible to the people.

MOVING pictures to-night at the — church. Admission one, three and five cents. Notices like this are not infrequent in the newspapers. No doubt many of the churches are finding it hard to meet the competition of some of our well-conducted picture houses, but it seems to us that this is unfair competition for the theater men. We also have an idea that no church running pictures in this way should receive films from any reputable exchange.

UNDER the caption "Our Neglect of Export" our worthy amusement contemporary, The Billboard, published an excellent review of film export conditions in its Christmas number. This article covered the ground most fully and gave many concrete examples of how American film manufacturers were either ignoring export possibilities or selling them for a trifle to some London or other European agency. The writer of the article dwells particularly on the possibilities of reaching the great Mongolian population and the Latin-American field. It was particularly with a view to developing this latter field for American films that the publishers of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD took up the publication of a Spanish monthly at the first of last year, under the title Cine-Mundial. While progress has been slow, the volume of correspondence has steadily increased and our Latin-American film men have shown that they can and will pay the price for the right kind of film. Few of our American firms have yet made real effort to handle this business intelligently, even to the extent of conducting their correspondence in Spanish. It does seem that now is the time to get a first-hand grip on this business.

Our American banks have very greatly increased their connections in foreign countries. The shipping lines running out of New York to South American points are steadily adding to their fleets and increasing the number of sailings. As this country is producing more than half the world's supply of film, does it not seem reasonable that the export trade in films should be largely centered in New York? Cine-Mundial is doing its share of popularizing American productions in all the Spanish-speaking countries.

We're at the Dawn ☼ ☼ ☼ ☼ ☼ ☼ ☼ By Louis Reeves Harrison

TEN years ago there was naught but scorn and ridicule for the "Movies" in newspapers and periodicals, and we're still getting it from editors who do not know enough to follow public opinion, much less guide it in the way it should go. Others fall into the ranks more or less reluctantly, still proving, though all unconsciously, their lack of those qualities which make for leadership. They lack imagination. They can not project their minds into the future and conceive of what has not been, as Jules Verne did of the submarine, as inventive genius always does.

As far as theaters were concerned we were in the cellaret stage. We sat in coffin-shaped rooms, with the darkness of funeral drapings about us and watched a badly vaccinated film projected in wobbly fashion on what had every appearance of being a dirty sheet, and this to monotonous strumming on one of those kind of pianos they take in exchange by a young lady of the chewing-gum variety occasionally assisted by a bristly-haired young man with a drum, triangle and sand box. It took courage to be prophetic.

I dared to look forward. I described the opening of a beautiful theater on Seventh avenue near Forty-second street, where there was a stage decorated with flowers, a grand organ and an orchestra or large proportions, then admitted at the end that it was only a dream. At Forty-second street and Seventh avenue, a few doors from this dream theater now stands a beautiful one with grand organ, orchestra and flowers on the stage, almost exactly like the one described in these columns many long years ago. But it took courage to be prophetic just the same. Not one in a thousand believed then that moving pictures would ever rise above a form of cheap entertainment for the shockhead and lowbrow.

Up rose that wall of the incompetent which did so much injury to stage representations—"Give the people what they want, raw meat and plenty of it." We got it. I think one story did service a thousand times. The noble hero is accused of a crime he did not commit and convicted on evidence "planted" by the villain. He was on the point of being executed, usually by an enthusiastic band of cowboys, when the villain is mortally wounded and makes a dying confession to the heroine. She flies to the rescue and arrives just in time to save the innocent and otherwise innocuous hero from a shameful and undeserved death.

It was that sort of stuff that kept millions of intelligent people from attending the picture shows until it was stung out of existence by those scorpions the critics. Those progressive gentlemen, ever busy with new ideas, spoke out fearlessly when their sense of justice and fitness prompted such utterance, though they often wounded the sensitive natures of advertising producers to the point of breaking off friendly relations with their respective papers. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD in particular championed the oppressed exhibitor with a sturdy independence that more than once imperilled its advertising support.

In the evolution of no other art has there been such a manly fight put up for quality of production. Merciful to the weak, when there was obvious sincerity back of the effort, intelligent critics exerted a tremendous pressure on the strong, not merely to maintain a standard, but to improve it in all branches of artistry. There have been incompetent critics, men of extreme opinions, ignorant of the principles and difficulties of production, but, as a rule, they were honest. On our own staff, I recall no instance of bidding for advertising favor.

No matter how fair-minded a producer may be by nature he becomes biased by a single viewpoint—there is more than one facet to the brightest jewel. An author writes a story of vital significance and effective structure. A director of intelligence selects a flawless cast and handles the visualization with unusual skill. The financial result is staggering. The release pays a profit of many thousands of dollars. The producing concern is complacently delighted. "See what we did!" Yet the first thing they do is to destroy a happy artistic combination. They obtain another story by the same author and put in a cheaper director, or keep the director and dispense with the author.

The stupidity of producers themselves, in not grasping the composite nature of motion-picture making, is responsible for a very large percentage of the failures recorded. There are even many critics who do not perceive the necessity of composite effort, and the art falls back upon the personality of certain gifted interpreters, the star performers. We have gone to extremes in the personality of actors and in the skill of remarkable directors, and thus moving pictures are still incomplete in their very essence.

We are just beginning to understand that there is an aim. They have been limited by accident and true sense of direction in a very large number of cases. The basis of success is that rare and beautiful quality which has not only made the other arts so fascinating, but has provided us with nearly all improvements that make daily life enjoyable, creative imagination. Not understanding the origin of any art of expression, how can we judge beforehand of results? We will only grow the weed and the thistle until we plant the field with the seed of creative genius.

But we're at the dawn. Through rose tints on the horizon comes filtering now and then a faint gleam of light that is bound to shine in the full unless the day is overcast by persistent stupidity. We are no longer the slaves of words. No trammeling vernacular need spoil our spiritual awakening. Intelligent people are beginning to love and understand this lusty young art of expressing thought and emotion. Genius will provide the thought and emotion to be expressed, increasing our experience through intense assertion of the individual and save us from monotony of presentation, the deadliest enemy of joy and success.

When the sun of intelligence rises out of the morning mists, when we reach an artistic adjustment and balance of composition, people who go to the picture show will no longer pray for relief from monotony and dull repetition. They will see on the screen the gold of inspiring drama, the shadows of guiding tragedy, the flowers of romance, even the marvels of science, so completely presented that the critic will find his vocabulary of praise inadequate. We are now wandering in the visible world of color and form. We shall then penetrate the invisible world of passion and thought.

We are not at the dawn for those who thought in one-reel terms a few years ago, who are thinking in terms of attenuated five-reel imitation and repetition today. They had no imagination then, and they have none now. The new generation and those of the old generation who are benefiting from experience will increase the virility of screen representations, only using life's physical incidents of action and circumstance to bring out the spiritual side of human nature in storied form. To reach intelligent people at the picture shows, we must address them with intelligence, and, in the art of so doing, we're at the dawn.

Commercialized or Subsidized ☞ ☞ ☞ ☞ By Rev. W. H. Jackson

MANY good and broad-minded people who sanction the exhibition of moving pictures on Sunday only hesitate at what is called the commercializing of them on that day. A certain anti-picture clergyman is always sounding the same note; he has opposed high class concerts on Sunday solely on the ground that a charge for admission was made, thus, the simple fact that a cash payment, the purchase of a ticket, being a matter of trade, the Sabbath law against Sunday trading is thereby broken; therefore, if allowed in one instance the whole flood gates of trading might be opened, and a wholesale desecration of the Sabbath follow.

There is logic in this general view of the whole situation, but is there wisdom in the basis upon which these conclusions are allowed to grow? Surely we are not so incompetent that we do not know how, when and where to draw the lines in the universal application of any or all laws; if we open the window of the house to let in a little fresh air, are we by that act logically compelled to open all the windows and doors for a hurricane or, on the other hand, are we to be compelled never to open a window, fearing lest by so doing we run a risk of being inconsistent if we don't open all the windows and doors?

The Supreme Court of the United States has decided that there is a "rule of reason." Under the rule direct application of reason let us, as a common sane people, look at and do things reasonably; let us also remember that there is a law of casuistry to help us in these things, so that we are not blind leaders of the blind, but walking openly as in the day.

At a closer glance, however, the writer has come to the conclusion that the whole question is one bearing on the relationship between that which is commercialized and that which is subsidized, and to find out where the one ends and the other begins. What is the difference between paying cash for a ticket entitling one to a seat in the building (a commercialized transaction), or the payment by check in advance for a seat in a building (a subsidized transaction)? Are not both payments for the same purpose? Are not both transactions similar? Do not both transactions have the same results, i. e., a hired seat for a financial profit? The matter evidently narrows itself down to the method in which the money is paid; if beforehand by specific arrangement it is legal, right and good; if as cash at the time, it is illegal, bad, and wrong; nay, further, should be made criminal offence.

We are reminded of a good old piece of righteous denunciation of such hair splitting as this when we remember one who said, "Ye strain at a gnat (nickel), and swallow a camel (check)." It is probably true to say that there is not a fashionable church in New York of any denomination which has not its system of seat-rents, a commercial system, a poor man's prohibitory system, a legalized Sabbath day cash transaction, simply and only because it is changed from a commercial act to a subsidized one. Is it not worth while endeavoring to find a plan as to how the poor man can subsidize his legitimate Sunday attractions, or is he to suffer every time, and everywhere, simply and only because he is poor. Surely we are punishing him terribly for his poverty, as though it were a crime and he a criminal against whom all legislation must be aimed, lest he enjoy some of those privileges which only the rich can command.

What a hue and cry is raised because in asking payment for a seat on Sunday to cover expenses the exhibitor is only asking an honest thing. Where is there a church or institution of any kind which would live for one year if a financial claim were not made? Is a prepayment, or an agreed payment or a collection not a payment or a charge? Some will answer that it is free will. Granted, but let the free-will offering fall short and the people will soon be told how much they have fallen short which must be made up and that in hard cash.

If, then, there are many of those who feel that the commercializing of the picture is its only or even its greatest evil, surely it will not take long for them to see the injustice of their fears. Can a picture exhibition be right in a church where a collection is taken, and wrong in a place where a charge is made?

The more we delve into this question the more we find that while there are many and various problems to be solved, they can and must be solved, and not dismissed in an off-hand way with supercilious contempt, and the law invoked to stultify the desires of the many according to the limited views of the highly favored few. The writer takes the view that those who enjoy all the privileges of life must find it incumbent upon them to see that those less fortunate shall, by some means, have kindred opportunities. In the lowest places in life we give bread to the hungry and clothes to the ragged. In the higher places in life we give a free education to all who can not or do not wish to pay for their own. True life is doing all it can for the benefit of each other, and those who place a stumbling block in another's way must be condemned. "Sunday was made for man." Let us do all we can to find out how man can best profit in the use of it; strain the rules of casuistry to find the helping way and not the hindering one. Let us for once call commercializing and subsidizing a distinction without a difference, otherwise we shall, if we discriminate between them, be guilty at the same time of dividing free citizens into castes and make lack of riches a crime.

Thoughts of a Jellyfish on Beholding the Backbone of a Whale

O vast and voluminous vertebra!
That giveth thee power to make thy way
Where minnows and jellyfish hold sway
And have the nerve to say their say
On moving questions of the day.
No wonder thou art ready for the fray!

O backbone anything but frail!
That meets and moves thy mighty tail
Minnows and jellyfish to assail,
At thought of thee we all turn pale!
Thou scourge of spinelessness; thou flail
Of falsehood! thou nail—
—er of nothingness; thou—
Words fail;
But, anyway, old mammal, I'll go bail,
At swallowing thine own words thou art a whale!

And yet, for all thy class,
Methinks 'tis strange it came to pass,
Thy backbone at this end, alas!
Supports the jawbone of an ass.

We Are Facing Facts; Not Theories By Sam Spedon

IF YOU heard the shrill cry of "fire!" rend the midnight air what would you do? You would get the old bucket brigade together, haul out the old hand engine and do the best you could to fight the flames. If you sent twenty or thirty miles to the next town for a more improved fire apparatus the house would be burned down by the time it arrived.

When you hear the cry of "censorship, tax and Sunday closing bills" in your midst, get the exhibitors of your state together and fight the impending measures as best you can. Don't look elsewhere for help, if you do the legislatures will have passed the bills and everything will be over but the wake. Call on your local senators and assemblymen, go before the legislatures in a body, with your hometown orators and spokesmen to present your plaint and make your plea. Send out your S. O. S. and P. D. Q. messages to every exhibitor in the state and tell him to get busy. Don't send elsewhere for the silver tongued orators and erudite literature; if you do you may be locking the barn door after the horse is stolen. If necessary canvass the sentiments of your theater patrons by the use of your screens and give expression to your own in the columns of the local press. Every little bit helps.

We have any amount of high browed literature, so has the National Association, telling about the persecution of the early Christians and the martyrs of free speech and press. Our editor in chief wanted us to write some more of it. What's the use? We are getting this more to the point stuff off our chest, hoping it will stir up some action and everybody will get busy. Indoor oratorical sports and literary exhibits are not practical when you have got to go to it and do something to rescue the perishing and care for the dying.

We know you need cash to oppose unjust legislation and you will need it worse if you don't oppose it, so you might as well dig down in your old jeans and chip in. The Lord only helps those who help themselves. How in the name of all that is sacred and profane do you expect others to help you if you don't help yourselves?

The Christman censorship bill was killed in New York state. Three censorship bills were squelched in Indiana and federal censorship was squashed in Congress. These results were accomplished by the concerted action of a few, who got busy and did things.

You have been reading, talking and showing pictures about preparedness for the last two years. If you have not heard the cry of "censorship, taxes and Sunday closing" in your state, now, in the time of peace you should prepare for war. Get together, organize and do something. Be prepared, for these things come upon us as a thief in the night, seeking whom they may devour.

Avoid Suspicions of Graft

By SAM SPEDON.

THE circulated reports of the appropriation by a few individuals of a portion of the profits from the exhibition held at Chicago last July brings all organized effort of the industry under suspicion.

Any organization which undertakes an exposition, ball or entertainment with an advertised object should give a published statement to those concerned, of moneys received, expenses incurred, and showing that the profit, if any, had been applied or given to the advertised object. A statement is due those of the industry who have contributed their money and support to the success of such undertakings. Their success depends upon co-operative effort and all co-operators are entitled to know the result of their co-operation. The abuse of confidence and privileges is what has brought many, individually and collectively, into disrepute.

The recent reports we have received from Chicago are a repetition of those we have heard about the expositions held at the Grand Central Palace in New York City, and they awaken all the suspicions attached to those functions.

With a knowledge of the deplorable facts connected with last year's Chicago exposition, we would be amiss in our duty if the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, as the representative journal of the industry, did not call attention to them and urge all organizations in all branches of the industry to insist that the game be played fairly, with all the cards on the table, above suspicion, and see to it that a few unprincipled ones do not bring reproach upon all the rest of us.

Exchange Fails—Ties Up Deposits

Triangle Brooklyn Distributors Discontinue, Owing Exhibitors for Advance Rentals.

ABOUT one year ago the Big T. Booking Company of Brooklyn, N. Y., secured a special franchise to distribute Triangle productions in Brooklyn and Long Island. This franchise has been discontinued and the Triangle pictures for Brooklyn and Long Island can only be secured now from the New York Triangle Film Corporation's office of New York City.

Some of the Brooklyn exhibitors, who had placed their deposits for the Triangle service with the Brooklyn office, are now anxious to have these deposits returned because they cannot continue the service without placing a fresh deposit with the New York corporation.

We are informed that the Big T. was an entirely separate and independent business concern operating under the special franchise for Brooklyn and Long Island with no connection whatever with the Triangle Film Corporation. It is, therefore, up to the Brooklyn exhibitors to look to the Big T. Booking Company for the return of their deposits placed with that concern.

In answer to the exhibitors' appeal for the deposits in Brooklyn they were told at the Big T. office that they would all receive their deposits just as soon as arrangements could be made for the return of the different amounts, which we were informed aggregate about $1,800. This reply did not satisfy the exhibitors, as many of them need their money to deposit with the Triangle Film Corporation of New York, if they wish to continue the Triangle service. They claim that the holding back of their money by the Big T. works a hardship upon them by being deprived of its use when they are sorely in need of it.

The exhibitors claim, and we agree with them, that this experience with the Big T. is an evidence of the seriousness of the deposit system, particularly if an exchange conducts its business merely on a franchise, with no tangible assets to counterbalance the responsibility it assumes.

MIRIAM FOCHE WITH FOX.

Miriam Fouche, a new William Fox discovery, will make her debut in filmdom in the photoplay starring Valeska Suratt. Miss Fouche, who spent practically all her life in the Ozark Mountains in Arkansas, has the feminine role next in importance to Miss Suratt's. Miss Fouche is a crack rifle shot, as she dwelt for a decade on what is known as "The Devil's Backbone," in the Ozarks, where no timid individual would have a very happy time, as bear and catamount are almost as plentiful as the foliage.

SON BORN TO CHARLES GROGG.

Manager Charles Grogg, of Grogg's Theater, Bakersfield, Cal., has a smile for the whole world these days. And it's only for a "little tiny reason," but that reason is a mighty important one to the fond parents. The "reason's" name is Walter Charles Grogg; arrived February 11; weighs ten pounds, and he looks like his dad.

No Other Business Would Stand Censorship By B. B. Hampton

If Average Industry Should Suffer Interference Experienced by Picture Men Revolution Would Result

IF the principle of censorship should be applied to general business as it has been to motion pictures in certain states we would have had red revolution in this country within twelve months' time. The American business man would rather fight than tolerate practice that the motion picture industry is compelled to endure in those States where censorship is now in existence. Good pictures, wholesome pictures, instructive, progressive pictures are impossible so long as any man or any group of men are given the automatic right to determine what shall or shall not be shown on the screen.

Censorship is un-American. Censorship in any form is so repugnant to American ideals and traditions that our people would not tolerate it in pictures if—there are two "ifs"; the first is, if the public is made to realize that if censorship creeps into one phase of our life it will find its way into others; and second, if motion pictures can be made clean the demand for censorship will die.

The very popularity of pictures is responsible for the demand for censorship. The movies have won such an important, intimate place in so many million homes that fathers and mothers deeply resent the sewage that slips on to the screen.

"We don't dare let our children go to the movies," they say, "because we cannot be sure that they will not see indecent or suggestive pictures hidden under smugly hypocritical titles."

Along comes the politician with his eyes on new jobs for the faithful and suggests censorship. The public, without thinking deeply enough to understand the dangers of censorship, responds to the place-hunter's suggestion—and censorship threatens us in nearly a score of states.

Statistics Prove Small Percentage of Evil.

In fairness it cannot be said that the motion picture industry has brought this curse on itself—any more than the charge of indecency can be made justly against the publishing industry because an occasional panderer prints a vile book or starts a filthy magazine or newspaper. Fortunately there are very few evil pictures, but unfortunately they are very obnoxious. Statistics compiled by experts prove that in 1916, of nearly ten thousand reels less than one hundred reels (about twenty-five pictures) were objectionable. Less than 1 per cent. of the output is to blame for the danger that now threatens to throttle the art.

However, we must not deceive ourselves. This bad 1 per cent. is very bad. Men who live, breathe and have their being in the Tenderloin of New York and the little Tenderloin of Los Angeles forget that the great American public is not an ass. This unhealthy type of producer thinks he can market a mess of filth by disguising it as "art" or "reform." He believes that by posing a preacher at the opening of a "white slave" picture he can "get away" with rotten sex stuff. Or by hiring a preacher to "indorse" his "picture" that every mother and daughter ought to see" he can deceive "family trade" into regarding his work as "reformative."

No human being can fool himself so thoroughly as the hardened Tenderloiner—unless it is his money-blind brother of Wall Street. The producer who knows America by living in a high priced hotel in Longacre Square knows nothing. If he spends a few weeks in New England, or the Middle West, or Down South, disguised as a human being, he would learn that his little tricks, his evasions and sophistries, fool no one but himself. He would learn that the filth, the sewerage that he is pouring on the screen interests no one but the evil-minded, the diseased and the curious.

He would learn that his vile stuff is ruining the movies. If he digs deep enough he will find the great "silent vote" is being cast against the movies. Mothers and fathers who can not and will not spend the time necessary for thorough investigation and careful discrimination have reached or are reaching the conclusion that the movies are dangerous. These people have been shocked and horrified by the things thrust at them on the screen. They have taken the safe course—they have forbidden their children to go to movies, or at least have placed restrictions on them.

This "silent vote" is the power back of the demand for state censorship.

Hand in hand with the filth-producer is the exhibitor who uses the sign "Children Not Admitted."

These two classes are the sewer-scurvers who have befouled the industry.

Publishing Pictures Should be Regulated As All Other Publishing is Regulated.

The overwhelming majority of men who create pictures know that only clean pictures will pay. They demonstrate their knowledge by making none but clean pictures (note, please, the statistics to which we have referred in a previous paragraph).

There is no basic difference between the publishing of printed words and printed pictures and the publishing of pictures in motion. Both sets of operation consist of entertaining and educating the public by setting forth news, views, facts, stories.

We hear nothing of censorship of the press and yet decent publishers face constantly the problem of competition with filth.

Everyone who reads these lines can recall scandalous, sensational newspapers that sprang up suddenly, flourished for a time and disappeared as quickly as they came; or magazines that reached popularity through the sex-lure channel; or books that got into demand because of their naughtiness or vileness.

These things prosper—or apparently prosper—for a period, then they fade away and we hear no more of them.

The decent newspapers, the high class magazines and the standard books move steadily forward. For every thousand copies of filth sheets or sewerage books published in a year, ten million clean, wholesome periodicals or books are circulated.

The 99 per cent. in the picture industry know that cleanliness and decency are the only things that pay eventually, and this great majority is determined to drive the filth purveyor out of the industry. All that they ask of the public is that the men who publish pictures in motion receive the same treatment that is given to the men who publish words. If the publishers of newspapers, magazines and books do not need censorship—and certainly they do not need censorship—then there is no need for censorship of the publishers of pictures in motion.

The Police Power is Sufficient.

The simple truth is that the police power of cities and states is abundant to regulate publishing, no matter what form the publication may take, the existing power is abundant to safeguard the public.

Further, the facts are that the police power has been so trained that it operates effectively against the publication of vile books, magazines and newspapers—and in some places it operates effectively against the publication of vile motion pictures. Notably in New York City the present commissioner of licenses, George Bell, is said to have exercised this power to good purpose.

In comparing censorship and the police power, we must remember that censorship permits no appeal to the courts or so restricts appeal as to render it practically impossible or ineffective. This condition is so monstrously un-American that it is unthinkable. Our forefathers fought and died that they—and we—might have the right of trial by jury and the right of appeal from lower courts to higher courts. Our whole outlook on life is based on these principles, but censorship of motion pictures sweeps aside these fundamentals and delivers us bound and gagged to petty autocrats.

Ask your business and professional friends their opinion of a system that would prevent appeal from the decision of a police magistrate or a judge of a lower civil or a probate court. Ask them how long they would tolerate a condition that placed them on trial for a misdemeanor or a crime without the right to summon a jury; or what would they do in a civil suit in which a small judge had decided against them and refused an appeal to a higher court? Is it extravagant to say that Americans would prefer red revolution to a general condition of this kind? And yet that is the situation threatening the pictures industry in many states today.

We do not need new laws. We need to use nothing more than the police power as it exists in relation to the balance of the publishing business. We need to educate the public that publishing pictures in motion can be regulated by existing means just as well as publishing pictures and words in type.

Reform From the Inside.

Mr. Griffith's idea of "reform from the inside" is excellent. It is fundamental.

No reform can be genuine or permanent unless it comes "from the inside." People cannot be legislated away from evil. Legislation may create conditions to restrain the vicious or to bolster up the weak, but real, lasting changes for the better can come only when a majority of the class affected want the improved conditions.

There can be no question as to the prevailing sentiment in the motion picture industry. The demand for good, clean pictures vastly outweighs the demand for the vampire and sex-lure sewerage that threatens the life of the industry.

The picture business is today largely in the hands of serious, responsible, decent men who have made large investments and want to do all in their power to protect these investments. These men know that their only hope of permanent success is in developing and holding "family trade." The nickels and dimes of women and children form the backbone of this half-billion dollar industry. Women and children abhor smut and suggestiveness. Ask one hundred theater owners if this is not the case, and ninety-nine of them will answer "Yes," and assure you emphatically that objectionable pictures have worked a most serious injury to the business by driving decent people away from picture houses.

The publishers of pictures are moving swiftly and effectively. The leading producers, distributors and exhibitors, working through a special committee in the National Association led by David Wark Griffith, have pledged themselves to aid in the prosecution, under the criminal laws, of every producer of indecent or obscene pictures in the United States.

Thomas Evans an Early Bird

President of The Evans Film Manufacturing Co., Made His Start in 1908.

THOMAS EVANS, president and general manager of the Evans Film Manufacturing Company, whose plant is located at Two Hundred and Sixteenth street and Broadway, New York, became active in the motion picture business late in 1908. At that time he organized the Pantomograph Corporation, of New York. The concern was not a big success, and Mr. Evans accepted a position as western representative for David Horsley — Centaur Films, Chicago. Later on Mr. Evans became the representative of A. G. ("Sole Agent") Whyte. It was after he had been with Mr. Whyte for some time that Mr. Evans was made general manager for Powers Picture Plays.

Thomas Evans.

Continuing his rise in the industry, the man who now heads his own corporation was made laboratory and studio manager for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. That was at the time the Universal was formed, and when their producing activities were confined to Coytesville, N. J. It was the experience gained in the latter position that led Mr. Evans to form his own company.

Mr. Evans' company specializes in laboratory work, and so busy has the Evans plant become that it is working day and night. It is never closed. This is due to the fact that the high quality of the Evans company's work has never been lowered in the slightest degree, no matter how busy the plant has been.

Upstate Man Champions Sunday Shows

Rural Districts Opposed to Sunday Opening—No Immediate Legislative Action Likely—Clergymen Discuss Films.

DECLARING that he would as soon have his son go to a motion picture show as to hear Billy Sunday, James Bradshaw, a well known resident of Troy, addressing a meeting of ministers and laymen, when the entire program was devoted to a discussion of Sunday pictures and censorship, has stirred up a tempest among certain friends of the pictures and likewise certain admirers of the evangelist. Coming just at this time, when members of both the Senate and the Assembly are looking ahead and wondering what, if any, action will eventually be taken either on Sunday pictures or the censoring of films, Mr. Bradshaw's views have been given much publicity among legislators. If any action favorable to Sunday shows is taken at the present session, it is certain that it will be in the face of most strenuous opposition from the rural sections. Judging from the petitions that continue to come to the members of the Legislature, some central and controlling body in the church is conducting a systematic campaign through this and Central New York.

Rev. J. V. Moldenhauer, of the Second Presbyterian Church of Troy, was some time ago selected as an official investigator of the motion picture houses in what is termed the Albany conference. For several weeks, it seems, Mr. Moldenhauer religiously viewed almost every picture that was shown on the screens of this and surrounding places. Judging from his report to the conference, he was not highly impressed with what he had witnessed.

"From what I have seen," the minister reported, "I believe that the pictures exhibited today show evidences of a primitive mind. It requires no intelligence to follow the plots and every plot is repeated over and over. To my way of thinking the greatest virtue in the pictures is the scenic development."

Rev. C. H. Walker also spoke and severely arraigned those pictures tending along sex lines. He said that many of the advertisements and titles were so worded as to arouse the curiosity of both the old and the young along lines that should not be permitted.

Summing up matters, as the situation now appears from expressions among both Senators and Assemblymen, no legislative action is likely either along censorship or deciding the Sunday question.

HOLBROOK BLINN AND DORIS KENYON IN "THE EMPRESS."

Holbrook Blinn and Doris Kenyon, two celebrated stars, will appear on the Pathe program in "The Empress," a five-part Gold Rooster Play made by Popular Plays and Players, to be released March 11th.

Mr. Blinn is one of the best known actors on the stage. From the time when at the age of six he appeared with Frank Mayo in "The Streets of New York," he has been identified with the best plays and best companies.

Miss Kenyon, while still very young, has achieved an excellent reputation as an artist and has a most charming personality which screens particularly well. It was recently announced that she has been engaged to play opposite Henry Walthall. "The Empress" has been very well put on and the story offers both Mr. Blinn and Miss Kenyon excellent opportunities for their art.

NORTHWESTERN STATE RIGHTS BUYER IN TOWN

G. A. Hager, of Seattle, Washington, who is one of the best known film men in the Northwest, is in New York on the trail of good state rights propositions. He is stopping at the Hotel Breslin. Mr. Hager has ventured into the state rights field with a knowledge of film conditions in the Northwest that will stand him in good stead. He has been active in the selling end of the film business for several years, his efforts being confined mostly to the territory in which he and his associates will operate.

Mr. Hager was, up until about the middle of January, manager of the Universal exchange in Seattle. Before that he had been connected with exchanges in Montana, Portland, and several of the other larger cities that lie West of the Rockies. He states that the new business will have its main branches in Portland and Seattle. Mr. Hager's home address is 2021 Fourth avenue, Seattle, Washington.

S. G. SLADDIN LEAVES FOR MONTREAL.

S. G. Sladdin, general representative of the Consolidated Film Corporation, left last Monday for Montreal on an extended business trip through Canada in the interests of Consolidated. Mr. Sladdin expects to be gone several weeks.

Random Shots About Export By F. G. Ortega

THE export situation ten years ago—but let's talk about something serious. Ten years ago we were fighting tooth and nail to keep foreign competition in this country within reasonable bounds. We all know how well this was accomplished. Let's talk about the present.

The war has entered its last stage. From now on France, Great Britain and Italy will pay as little attention to export as the Central powers. Export means surplus energy and none of the belligerents has any to spare. During the final, the most savage phase of the struggle, they will countenance no effort or initiative that is not directly connected with the war.

The Latin-American republics have suffered from the war even more than we have. They have had the same internal troubles, brought about, as in this country, by unassimilated immigration of different nationalities. Some of the southern republics have found themselves on the verge of civil strife. They are tired of this gigantic conflict, and during the past two years, thanks to Mr. Wilson's stand in regard to Mexico and in spite of the yellow press and other yellow-thinking elements in our midst, they have been drawing closer to us mentally as well as in a commercial sense.

London was, before the war, the film clearing house of the world—at least this is what American manufacturers were taught to believe. Before Cine-Mundial, our international organ, made its appearance a year ago, the Spanish and Portuguese-speaking markets, with a population of over one hundred millions, were as little known as Mesopotamia to most of our producers. The foreign activities of our companies were dominated by the English metropolis. If anyone suggested in the downtown district of New York that hardware, dry goods or any other line of merchandise should be sold in Argentine or Brazil through London houses, he would be placed in the hands of an alienist, but this is exactly what our producers were doing. The manager of a company that had just released a pretentious feature—a very stout gentleman, by the way—yawned so much when one of our solicitors tried to impress him with the importance of South America that he nearly fell out of his chair. Another so-called export manager lost a lot of breath and became quite excited in an attempt to convince the writer that the London houses were and had been exporters "by divine right" (textual words). And this man was a German, think of that!

France is out of the running today as a film manufacturing center. Its half a dozen selling and distributing organizations, some of them the most important in the world from an international viewpoint, are really helping our manufacturers, as they have been compelled to use American-made subjects to keep their contracts. Italian film production is on the decline. This is acknowledged by its foremost critics. But whether it is or not, the fact remains that the Spanish and Portuguese-speaking public are sick and tired of the eternal tragedy and morbidity of Italian scenarios. Great Britain, being a tributary nation in this field, was bound to suffer most in abnormal times, and the war has brought about the entire collapse of its foreign moving picture trade. It is needless to say that this has had no marked effect on Latin America, as England never supplied the market. We have another proof of this in the recent announcement made by a London trade publication, which admits the "enormous importance of South America and proposes to start an edition in Spanish to help the British middlemen. We presume that the "invasion" will be attempted with American brands. However, these post-humous activities—for that is what they are, in fact—have no practical meaning and will not change the export situation, although their significance is great as an object lesson to our producers.

It is true that our producers know very little about Latin America and its possibilities; but in spite of the opinion of some of our self-appointed experts, our British friends know even less. Their ignorance of conditions is so great that in a recent article published in the magazine referred to we find the following statement regarding Mexico: "At present any old junk, so long as it can run through a machine, can command big prices." This is wonderful. So any old junk will go in Mexico, eh? How about Granat, of the Salon Rojo, who six months ago bought over $30,000 worth of films in New York and Chicago? And the other exchanges that practically every month are sending experienced buyers to the large producing centers of the United States? Moreover, how in the name of common sense can you get big prices for any article in Mexico, when the Mexican dollar that used to be equal to fifty cents gold four years ago is only worth today seven or eight cents?

Some of our manufacturers are already entrenched in Spain, Portugal and Latin America, but many still lag behind. What can be done in six months today will take years of constant effort after the war, so no time should be wasted. The theory that the southerners will not pay reasonable prices has been exploded. If they are willing to post fancy figures for Bertini, Menichelli or Boreli subjects, what will happen when they become familiar with our stars, who act quite as well and have the advantage of youth, beauty and superior technical direction?

No manufacturer of any importance should be without branches or agencies in Buenos Aires (for Argentine, Chile, Uruguay and Bolivia), Barcelona (for Spain and Portugal), Rio Janeiro (for Brazil) and Havana (for Cuba, Puerto Rico, Venezuela and Colombia). We do not mention Mexico for obvious reasons.

It should be remembered, however, that haphazard theatrical methods in dealing with foreign countries only foment trouble and that films where every Mexican or South American is a bandit or a "desperado," whatever that means, should be kept in this country or shipped to Europe, Africa or the North Pole—they are not appreciated in Latin America. And films where the cute hero, with cowboy hat and sport shirt, becomes dictator of Brazil in a couple of days, or puts to flight the whole Mexican army with his trusty revolver, are not popular either.

Whether this country goes to war or not, if the film manufacturers are far-sighted enough they will emerge at the end of the crisis with their products firmly established in Latin America and with the consciousness of having done more toward practical Pan-Americanism than all the politicians with their theories and speeches.

There is nothing cold-blooded in this way of looking at things. We take no mean advantage, but are merely coming into our own. The Italian and French houses will doubtless compete with us in foreign markets after the war and we should hail this competition with open arms, as monopoly in any line has always meant stagnation.

Alice Brady Has Narrow Escape.

For several days Alice Brady has been receiving the congratulations of friends upon not having been burned as badly as at first supposed in a fire episode, which forms the spectacular climax of a motion picture in which she is to appear as the star player late in April.

"After it was over," said Miss Brady, in recounting her experience, "I took an inventory and discovered that I had lost a big bunch of hair from the very top of my head, together with a part of one eyebrow, the sleeve and shoulder of the waist I wore and about a third of my skirt. On the reverse I had gained two large, sore blisters on my arm, a raw spot on my elbow, a bruised ankle and the knowledge that, however I may feel about woman suffrage, I never wish to be a fireman."

The scene of this exciting incident in Miss Brady's photoplay, which is called "Maternity," represents the exterior of a large hospital, in which the heroine, with her child, is among the patients. The structure takes fire, many of the inmates throw themselves from the windows and roof, and the mother and child are trapped upon an upper story. At the critical moment the flooring gives away and they fall through the flames to safety.

ErB and Goebel May Spring Surprise.

Ludwig G. B. Erb, president of the Erbograph Company, and O. E. Goebel, president of the Consolidated Film Corporation, spent four days in Atlantic City the past week, during which time certain matters that eventually may be of considerable importance to the film world were considered. Mr. Erb entertained a party of important persons at the Traymore Hotel.

Since the success of "The Crimson Stain Mystery" serial, which was produced by Messrs. Erb and Goebel, the eyes of many men in filmdom have been centered on these two factors, as it is known that they have other and greater plans in the making.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

WRITE US EARLY AND OFTEN

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD carries the most complete record of Exhibitors' News. This department aims at being the fullest and fairest chronicle of all the important doings, in the ranks of organized exhibitors. To keep the department as complete and as useful as it is now we request the secretaries of all organizations to favor us with reports of all the news. Coming events in the ranks of the organized exhibitors are best advertised in this department of the Moving Picture World.

EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE ORGANIZER.

In answer to recent inquiries in regard to the Exhibitors' League Organizations and for the information of exhibitors in any of the States, readers will kindly note that Fred J. Herrington is National Organizer for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. All correspondence on the subject may be addressed to him at 402 Knox avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.

What to Say to Your Law-makers

Two Letters on Censorship That Cover the Ground Quite Thoroughly.

WHILE some exhibitors are wondering what to say and do to aid their local organization and themselves in the fight against censorship and other unjust legislation, we present the following letters written to State legislators by a couple of wide-awake fellows, which will serve as examples of what can be done, and furnish copies for other exhibitors to follow.

Shepherdstown, W. Va., Feb. 5, 1917.

My Dear Senator:

Just at this time I would like to take up with you the censorship bill now before the legislature, and to attempt to explain to you that such a bill is wholly unnecessary and that it will work a hardship on the exhibitors of the state, and at the same time defeat many of the good points which the bill is intended to create.

I have had three years' experience along this line in Shepherdstown. When I took hold of this business here I found that the matter of censorship had been thoroughly and practically done by the people themselves. When animated objects were thrown on the screen here a dozen or more years ago it was a novelty and the people flocked to see these animations, regardless of the merit of the subject, but just as soon as the novelty wore off and the people attending had time to digest what they were being shown the censorship worked in a practicable manner, with the result that the exhibitor went out of business entirely. Many others attempted to revive the business along the same lines, but without success.

Three years ago I was convinced that the press and the screen were in the same line of endeavor. That each were for public consumption, education and entertainment. Our success has proven the wisdom of the trial. Where before the churches, the schools and others interested in civic advancement were against moving pictures, today these same interests are our customers and our friends. We did this without censorship other than that of the people themselves, and we find that it works better and more effectively than any board of a few persons could do it.

Besides, there is no earthly reason in West Virginia for such a board. Practically every film shown here in this state has either been censored by the National Board of Review, the Pennsylvania State Board, the Ohio State Board, or the Maryland State Board, and many, many cases all four. The question arises if the work of these four boards is unsatisfactory will a fifth make it better? I think not.

The picture business today is being hounded to death by those in the several states who are after political berths. The business today is paying more taxes of various kinds than any other form of business, and I personally know that many of them are losing propositions, even though the general sentiment is that they are money makers and small gold mines in themselves. Nothing is further from the truth.

More than that, there is today sufficient law, both national and state, to do away with improper pictures. The jail is the proper place for offenders along this line, and if we will only make the law as effective against the screen as against its twin sister, the newspaper, you will find no need of censor bodies.

If the bill is passed it will prevent many houses in this state showing many excellent pictures. Do you realize that we have less houses in West Virginia than they have in the city of Philadelphia or New York alone? The present trend of the distributing end of the business is for open market plan, and many, if not the most of the best pictures, today are being released and sold on this plan. With a censor law in West Virginia it will simply deprive West Virginia exhibitors from showing these wonderful pictures on account of the loss in time and cost of censoring. Every day counts with the producer, and he won't let a picture lay off a week or so to be censored in this state when he can keep it working in one of the nearby states, and this will mean that our exhibitors will not get it until, perhaps, the film itself is worn out by use elsewhere. Of course you understand that the cost of censoring finally comes upon the exhibitor and not upon the producer as many suppose. We pay the bill, and I want to tell you frankly that many of us are now paying the last cent the business warrants, and it either means that we go out of business or go to using inferior pictures, something that the bill wishes to discourage.

Our state is situated badly for distributors. We have few large cities, costly delays in express service from one point to another, and many other elements of cost that makes our service expensive, with little hope of profit to the producer. We get most of our service from three points—Pennsylvania, Washington, Cincinnati. All of these incoming films are censored in their respective states, and I would like to know if their censoring in West Virginia will improve them one bit? I think not. Besides, what is to be done with the hundreds of pictures that come to us from other sections of the country? It simply means that we cannot rent them at all except in a few cases, and the cost incident to delay would make such prohibitive.

The day of censoring of moving pictures is practically past. The day for criminal action is looming into view as the one and only effective measure to take from the market pictures such as should not be shown. Why not let us prepare for the new era rather than the dead past? A newspaper which printed improper matter would be acted against legally. Why not its companion?

All connected with the business see the day of better pictures for the better people in the better theaters is here, and this will in itself do more and better censoring than all the censor boards combined. Because every man and woman loves good, clean, moral entertainment and will patronize that kind and condemn all other kinds, and it is this influence which is righting any wrong that may have been committed in the past. If the few who disregard this law of right and morality for the sake of making a few illegitimate dollars why not arrest him and, if guilty, sentence him to the proper place for all offenders against the law?

It is my personal opinion that a law passed which invited the producers to submit to it films for review and then to publicly advertise throughout the state the names of producer and title of subject would be a plan that would do more good than anything that could be done. This board should be of a highly educated class and above partisanship and bias. There should be no compulsion about the matter and no fees attached. We all know that hundreds of films are being made that the censors never touch, and it is this class of producers and exhibitors who should be encouraged. We are today doing business with certain well-known producers whose efforts have done more to create proper sentiment for clean pictures than all other agencies combined. Why not let us encourage them, rather than subject them to special tax and discouragement?

I hope the law will not pass before the whole matter is thoroughly threshed out, and I believe if the legislature would properly consider some of the objections outlined above they would come to the same conclusion. You are at liberty to make such use of this letter as you deem proper.

With kind regards and best wishes, I am,

Yours very truly,

C. S. MUSSER,
Manager Opera House.

Eldorado, Illinois, Feb. 17, 1917.

Dear Sir:

Some time in the near future there will come before you at Springfield a bill for so rigid a censorship of theaters in this state as to practically drive them out of business.

I am writing you, asking that you oppose this bill when it comes up, and in this connection I wish to point out to you that censorship of moving pictures has proven a failure in every state where it has been tried, for the simple reason that censors are not able to agree as to what the public should and should not see.

In Pennsylvania, where a state board of censors exists, there occurred recently an absurd instance of irresponsible authority. The Chestnut Street theater management was ordered to eliminate, as injurious to public morals, photographs of Emperor William of Germany and Field Marshal von Hindenburg.

Could anything more completely illustrate the evils of censorship than does this instance? Is this not taking away the rights of American citizenship?

The theory of censorship is that people do not know what is best and good for them and must therefore be guided by a small clique of officially appointed wisacres, drawing large salaries which they do not earn.

The picture business of today is an overburdened affair, and to add additional burdens that are unnecessary would cripple the industry.

I ask that you investigate this matter before it comes to a vote. If there is any information you desire regarding same, please call upon me. All we ask is a fair deal, and I am sure that you will not vote on the bill until you have gone into it from both sides. Thanking you in advance for your attention to this matter.

Yours very truly,

STEVE FARRAR.

NORTHWEST EXHIBITORS' MEETING.

The last meeting of the Northwest Exhibitors' Corporation was one of the most active on record this year. A warm discussion of what constituted an indecent picture was one of the features of the meeting, while Thomas Furniss' talk was another. Chairman D. G. Rodgers of the convention committee told of plans for the annual session of the corporation May 1, 2 and 3, and announced that there would be plenty of interest to exhibitors after meeting hours without

Brooklyn Ball a Winner

More Than 2,000 Attend Brooklyn Exhibitors' Affair—Many Stars in Attendance—Function a Big Success.

CONEY ISLAND, New York's famous Summer playground, temporarily became the center of the film world on Washington's Birthday Eve, February 21, when the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn and Long Island held a movie carnival and ball at Stauch's. More than two thousand persons attended. Motion picture stars by the score were there; exhibitors by the score were there—in fact, every branch of the industry had its happy representatives, who made merry in spirit with the many hundreds of film fans.

The atmosphere of the famous dance-pavilion was surcharged with the carnival spirit. Everybody caught it and did its merry bidding to their fullest ability. Dancing was the main diversion, but was every once in a while made secondary in interest to the feature attractions presented by those in charge. Chief of these features was the grand march, which was led by Douglas Fairbanks and Anita Stewart. Many of the other shining stars of the East took part.

The marchers were forced to wend their way through an intricately tangled network of varicolored paper ribbons, and the effect was startling and spectacular. Colored cords had been stretched over the space between the balconies under which lies the dancing floor, and the occupants of the balconies vied with each other in hurling into the air colored ticker-tape which, when flung from the hands of the merrymakers, shot out into the air in serpentine lines of color, to be caught up by the cords and festooned over the marchers in gay garlands of every hue.

After the grand march, dancing once more made claim on those in attendance. Some idea of the hour at which the affair broke up might be gleaned from the fact that when it was over there was not more than three inches of snow on the ground and that the snowstorm had not started until some time after midnight.

The Popularity Contest cup for male stars was annexed by Douglas Fairbanks, who won hands down, without particularly exerting himself, and assured the donors that he would never drain the trophy without pleasant memories of the enjoyable festivity at which it became his property serving as a reminiscent chaser to the cheering draught.

The boxes were held by the Pathe Company, the World Film Corporation, the Metro, the Artcraft Pictures, the Vitagraph Company (which had three of the loges), Douglas Fairbanks, Bluebird Photoplays, Universal Film Exchange, Paramount Pictures, New York Motion Picture Company, Brooklyn Eagle, Moving Picture World, Picture Theaters Equipment Company, the Brooklyn Exhibitors' Association, Christie Comedies, Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay, Screen Club, Exhibitors' Trade Review, Modern Feature Photoplays Inc., Cinema Club, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, Manhattan; Motion Picture News, Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises, H. Grossman Distributing Company, Flora Finch Comedies, General Film Company, and the Triangle Distributing Corporation.

Among the film stars who were in the boxes in addition to Douglas Fairbanks, Anita Stewart, and Lillian Walker, were Flora Finch, Bryant Washburn, Hughie Mack, Leah Baird, Richard Travers, Kate Price, and oodles and oodles of others.

Other big persons in the film world included Al Lichtman, general director of the Artcraft; Lee A. Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America; John Manheimer, president of the Brooklyn Local; A. S. Abeles, manager for the Pathe Company; Henry E. Friedman, associate Pathe manager; Sam H. Trigger, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of Manhattan, and others, from every one of the big film companies.

There were also many well known Brooklyn officials at the ball. Sheriff Ed Riegelmann not only was there, but managed for a part of the grand march, during which Miss Stewart left the head of the line for a while, to lead with Lillian Walker.

Eric Palmer, secretary to Borough President Pounds, was there as the latter's personal representative, and welcomed "Doug" Fairbanks to the ball. Others included Magistrate George H. Folwell and Mrs. Folwell, Mr. and Mrs. George M. Kirchmer, former Sheriff Lewis M. Swasey, Public Works Commissioner Edmund W. Voorhies, License Commissioner George H. Bell, Deputy License Commissioner John J. Bracken, Alderman and Mrs. Charles J. Moore, Register Edward T. O'Loughlin, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Livingston, Commodore and Mrs. Edward Watson, and many others.

Credit is due the various committees for the smooth manner in which everything was conducted. The Ball Committee was composed of William H. Hollander, chairman; Samuel Lesselbaum, secretary, and Maurice Goodman, treasurer. Other committees and their membership follows:

Arrangement Committee: Louis L. Levine, George Gerhouser, William Brandt and H. Shapiro. Printing Committee: Julius Cellor, S. Barr and M. Glynn. Tickets Committee: J. Forster, P. Fulmer, J. Schaeffer, S. Rosenthal, H. Weingarten and F. Huebner. Entertainment Committee: Rudolph Sanders, S. Lesselbaum, C. F. Martin and Gus Koenigswald. Reception Committee: H. Clark Mooney, Ben Title and A. Christian. Women's Reception Committee: Mrs. Reitmeyer and Mrs. Swirsky. Badges Committee: A. Steekhammer and S. Swartz. Floor Committee: Louis A. Christian, Charles Cranides, Jacob Goldman, Joseph Hartman, Theodore Gail and H. J. Seger. Publicity: William Brandt.

Suburban Exhibitors Organize

Multiplication of Taxes Compelled Theater Men to Get Together.

THE suburban exhibitors of New Orleans, La., have formed an organization to be known as the Suburban Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association. Nat I. Ehrlich, of the Isis theater, is president, and B. F. Brennan is secretary and treasurer. The organization of this comes as a belated endeavor to escape the state and city licenses, which the operators of the smaller houses in the city declare to be excessive. It would appear, in view of the argument which they advance, that their position is well taken and it would also appear that in view of the inexorable movement of time they are helpless in their present position.

The exhibitors heretofore have been rocking along easily and paid a tax that was commensurate with the business which their respective shows were doing. Then the legislature, while the exhibitors were still rocking, tightened up on the license clauses as relates to places of amusement. It may be that the exhibitors considered that there was very little amusement about their shows, but, at any rate, they discovered that they would be required to pay licenses this year on the basis of the federal calculation and they were non-plussed. They were also in a tight box. There is a difference between paying $100 or $200 and paying $400 to $800, to say nothing of the federal levies. Too late they discovered that they had been asleep on their rights. The time for their "day in court" had passed when nobody was "noticin'," as the saying goes in these parts. They at last realized that if they had maintained an effective organization they might have escaped the burden of the increased tax payment. Hence the formation of the organization to conserve the future interests of the men who run the suburban theaters.

Colorado's Imported Censorship

State Labor Federation Comes Out Against "Public Welfare" Bills—Mrs. Grundy Movement That Came in From Topeka, Kansas.

WITH the five moving picture censorship and so-called Public Welfare bills still reposing in the committee rooms of the Colorado Legislature, opposition to the measures continues to pile up and indications are that the proposed laws will never see the light of day.

Added to the Mothers' Congress and Parent-Teachers' Association, the two most powerful women's organizations in the state, the State Federation of Labor this week went on record as opposed to both the censorship and welfare bills.

The legislative committee of the Labor Federation passed on the bills in regular session last week and its action was entirely unsolicited. The opposition was manifested, too, before the members of the committee were aware that the literature, even the envelopes, being circulated by the National Public Welfare League, which is backing the censorship bills, was printed in a non-union shop in Topeka, Kansas. Since the facts have become known union men all over the state have taken a hand to thwart the efforts of the reformers. "It is not enough that these reformers come in from an outside state and try to tell us what we shall or shall not do, but they have their printing and other work done in another state and in a non-union shop at that" is the way one union leader put the issue.

Will P. McPhee, a big realty owner, head of the McPhee and McGinnity Lumber Company, and one of the state's biggest and most influential manufacturers, came out against the censorship bills this week. He now is going to take it before the Civic Bureau of the Denver Civic Association, formerly the Taxpayers' League, and expects to have this body take an active part in the campaign to defeat the measures.

Legislators Who Are Against Censor Bills.

A number of legislators have publicly stated their opposition to the so-called reform laws in the public press. Senators W. D. Reilly, Democrat; W. D. Bandlish, Republican, and J. C. Starkweather, Republican, and Representatives Clem Crowley, Democrat; A. P. Ardourel, Democrat, and J. C. Scott, Republican, are among those who thus expressed themselves. Not only are they not in favor of the bills, but they openly declare that they will work and vote against the passage of the laws.

The press in Denver and throughout the state is carrying on a fight against the reformers both in their editorial and news columns.

BROOKLYN EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE BALL NETS ITS TREASURY $1,200.

The total net profit from the Brooklyn, N. Y., exhibitors' ball held February 21 is $1,200, which will be deposited with the treasurer of the Brooklyn league and used to oppose unjust legislation, exclusively. No commissions or bonuses were paid to any of the league members for the work done by them to make the ball a success.

Eugenie Besserer

EUGENIE BESSERER is one of the bright and particular stars of the Selig Polyscope Company, having been with that concern for five or more years. Before her advent in the pictures she was well-known in the spoken drama, having supported many of the stars of higher class.

versatile performer should be able to play almost any role convincingly.

"I well remember the good old days," continued Miss Besserer, "when the actor or actress was compelled to play any old part given out by the director. And they made-up and 'got by' with those character roles, too! During that time there were no writers preparing stuff written around this or that star. They handed in a scenario, the stock company was assembled and the parts handed out and enacted."

Miss Besserer is known as one of the most versatile of movie stars and in one picture has convincingly enacted the part of a sixteen-year-old girl and a woman of seventy-five years.

HARRISH INGRAHAM TO COLLABORATE WITH CRANE WILBUR.

Harrish Ingraham has been engaged by David Horsley to collaborate with Crane Wilbur in the production of the three five-reel subjects yet to be made to complete the series of six Crane Wilbur features which Mr. Horsley is releasing through the Mutual Film Corporation. The production on which Mr. Wilbur and Mr. Ingraham will first collaborate is "The Eye of Envy."

GENERAL FILM APPOINTMENTS.

General Film Company has made several recent changes in its staff in order to further strengthen its service. H. H. Buxbaum, formerly manager of the New York branch office, has been appointed comptroller of the company in charge of the operations of branches. He is now in direct supervision over all General Film branches.

B. F. Lyon, formerly division manager for the International, has been made supervisor over General Film's west central territory. C. E. Shurtleff, recently Pathe's Cleveland manager, is now supervisor for General's east central territory. Charles S. Goetz, who was manager of International's Cleveland branch, has been appointed branch manager of General's office at St. Louis.

EXPORT TRADE DIRECTORY.

The fifth edition of the Export Trade Directory, 1917-18, is just to hand. As in former years, this work has been compiled under the supervision of B. Olney Hough, editor of the American Exporter. It contains very full lists of export houses and agents, foreign exchange bankers and foreign freight forwarders and steamship lines, in addition to foreign consuls and a list of offices of the American Consular Service in foreign countries. This directory will prove very necessary and helpful to our American film companies who are developing their export business, especially those who are reaching the South American and Spanish speaking field through our Spanish monthly paper, Cine-Mundial.

WILLIAM RUSSELL IN "HIGH PLAY."

William Russell, the American-Mutual star, stopped for no rest when his five-reel production, "My Fighting Gentleman," was completed, but started in work immediately on his next picture under the direction of Edward Sloman. The title of this second production is "High Play," and the story was written by Julius Grinnell Furthmann. Mr. Furthmann is also the author of "The Frame-Up," in which Mr. Russell will be starred after "High Play."

J. W. KELLETTE ILL.

J. W. Kellette, assistant to Jack Adolff, who directs June Caprice features for Fox, is ill with grippe and is confined to his home in New Rochelle. Grippe and N w Rochelle form a discouraging combination, but "Kell" is expected to be back on the job in a few days.

CHARLES URBAN CHANGES ADDRESS.

Charles Urban has acquired offices in the building at No. 52 Broadway, New York City, from where in future his various enterprises will be directed.

Sunday Shows Win

Indiana Senators Approve Them by a Vote of 27 to 19—
Lower House Favorable.

EXHIBITORS of the Hoosier state gained a big victory last week when the upper house of the Indiana General Assembly, in session at Indianapolis, passed the McCray bill to legalize the operation of motion picture shows on Sunday. The vote was 27 to 19. Since then the committee of the lower house having the bill in charge has favorably reported it.

Local exhibitors are greatly elated over the victory and predict that the bill will have easy sailing when it is brought up before the lower house, presumably some time this week. The measure has been strongly opposed by the church forces.

Most of the argument in favor of the Sunday shows for the exhibition of pictures of an educational, historical and moral nature was that such entertainment provides almost the only recreation for thousands of persons who, because of their working hours during the week, are unable to attend at any other time.

Senator McCray, author of the bill, said that he never had attended a Sunday moving picture show until last Sunday, when he went to see how they were conducted and see who was present. He described the pictures as being entertaining and entirely harmless and told of the large number of workingmen present. The popularity of the motion picture show, he said, was attested by the large crowd present.

Senator Negley spoke for the bill, saying that he believed it to be far better to permit a respectable place of entertainment on Sunday than to encourage boys, with no place to go, to spend Sunday in seeking the back doors of saloons. He intimated that he will favor the Sunday motion picture shows as long as saloons remain in the state and that after that he would be willing to vote for the repeal of the bill.

Senator Hirsch, speaking for the bill, created much laughter among the senators when he declared that "these self-constituted reformers will yet be attempting to restrict people to two meals a day."

Senator Culbertson raised a good point in favor of the bill when he said that if the ministers fail to interest the people in their sermons they should acknowledge their failure without asking the state to legislate on such matters.

The bill was opposed by Senators Robinson, Reser, White and Simmons. The latter senator said that public sentiment in his district is opposed to the operation of motion picture shows on Sunday and that he objected to having the "movies forced on such communities." He said the shows operating in communities favoring such Sunday entertainment should be willing to take their chances with public sentiment.

Senator White, of Crawfordsville, made a plea for the strict observance of Sunday. He said the greatest lawyer in all history received a divine edict on Mt. Sinai to "remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy," and that it was up to the present day law makers to adhere to that doctrine.

The bill, when first brought up for consideration last week, caused so much wrangling that the Senate was forced to adjourn in an uproar. It appeared at that time that the Senate was about equally divided on the measure.

Fred Mace Dead

Stricken With Apoplexy at Hotel Astor—Was Famous Screen Comedian.

FRED MACE, the motion picture comedian, was found dead in bed in his apartments at the Hotel Astor, New York, Wednesday, February 21st, by his secretary. Apoplexy was the cause given for his sudden end. He had been seen about the streets all the preceding day and had attended to several matters of business. He had impressed his friends that he was in the best of health, and the news of his death came as a distinct shock to Broadway and the theatrical world in general.

Mace had retired to his rooms in the Astor at 11.30 on Tuesday night, after a conversation in the lobby of the hotel with several friends. That was the last seen of him alive. When the star's secretary arrived at the hotel about six o'clock Wednesday night he went up to his employer's rooms and found him in bed clad in pajamas. Thinking Mace asleep the secretary shook him, and then it was discovered the man was dead.

Mr. Mace began his stage career as a chorus man. He was a member of the "Piff, Paff, Pouf" company several years ago when Eddie Foy was appearing in one of the leading roles.

Mr. Mace was widely known throughout the theatrical and film world for his comedy portrayals in the Keystone Company, as well as his work in the Biograph and Majestic firms.

He left the Biograph to help establish the comedy department of the Keystone. He remained with them for eight months, when he left to become associated with the Majestic company. Subsequently he created the Apollo brand for the Mutual Film Corporation.

Mace was born in Philadelphia 38 years ago. He had come here from California eight weeks ago to organize a company of his own.

"Fatty" Arbuckle on Way East

Comedian Is Being Feted and Dined at Principal Cities
Along Transcontinental Route—Reaches New York
March 7.

ROSCOE ("FATTY") ARBUCKLE is making his transcontinental tour at the present time—a tour that will include practically every large city in the West, Middle West and the East. Early in March he will begin making, in New York, two-reel comedies for Paramount Pictures Corporation, which will be accessible to all exhibitors in the industry. Mr. Arbuckle left Los Angeles, Cal., on Wednesday morning, February 21.

The beginning of his transcontinental trip, which will be a particularly memorable one from all standpoints, as he is to be dined and feted in a royal manner, was a very glorious one indeed. California's filmdom was temporarily transplanted from studios to the San Pedro Railway Station, from where the trip began, and with "the funniest fat man on the screen" standing on the rear platform of his private car, "Elysian," smiling only the way he can smile, he waved all his hundreds of friends a regretful good-bye.

A few evenings prior to Arbuckle's departure, managers, stars, exhibitors and members of the press were entertained by Paramount's Los Angeles Exchange, in honor of the funny fat man. The principal speaker at this reception was Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who has been spending a few weeks at the corporation's studios in California. His message was to exhibitors and what things were in store for them under the new plans of Paramount.

After leaving Los Angeles the next stop of the Arbuckle party was made at Salt Lake City, where a reception and banquet was tendered the party by Paramount's exchange in that city. Friday was spent in Ogden, Utah, and Saturday in Denver. In Denver Paramount had planned a wonderful time for the comedian, and from there the party continued eastward, according to the following itinerary: Feb. 25 and 26 in Kansas City; Feb. 27 in Chicago; Feb. 28 in Cincinnati; March 1 in Pittsburgh; March 2 in Washington, D. C.; March 3 in Philadelphia; March 4 and 5 in Buffalo; March 6 in Boston, and arriving in New York City on the afternoon of March 7.

Immediately upon "Fatty's" arrival in New York work will be begun on his new comedies, which will be released to all exhibitors without being influenced by the feature branch of the Paramount program.

Paramount secured the exclusive rights for the distribution of the Arbuckle comedies through Joseph M. Schenck, president and general manager of the Comique Corporation, with whom Mr. Arbuckle is under contract for a period of ten years. The contract for the future distribution of the Paramount-Arbuckle Comedies is a long term contract, the negotiations for which were conducted by Hiram Abrams, president of Paramount, and Mr. Schenck.

MARY PICKFORD REACHES COAST.

After an eventful trip across the continent, Mary Pickford has just arrived at Los Angeles, where arrangements for her next production following "A Poor Little Rich Girl," are being formulated. During her transcontinental trip Miss Pickford was greeted at every stop by a delegation of friends. At Albuquerque, N. M., a youthful squaw known as "Indian Mary" because of her great admiration for the screen star enjoyed the proudest five minutes of her life when she had a chat with her idol. Even at the smallest stations the natives, who had been advised of Miss Pickford's trip by the Santa Fe people, turned out en masse to greet the popular girl.

"INTOLERANCE" FOR LONDON.

D. W. Griffith, having completed arrangements with Arthur Collins, will open the London season of "Intolerance" at the Drury Lane Theater, Saturday, April 7th. In May, the spectacle will be shown in Buenos Aires, Argentine.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD

News REEL for FEBRUARY

France Is Triangle's General Manager

Lawyer Who Becomes Film Man Says Producing Companies Will Work on Profit-Sharing Basis.

THE reorganized Triangle Distributing Corporation has appointed R. W. France as general manager. Mr. France was a member of the firm of New York attorneys. In that capacity he handled the legal business of several of the large motion picture organizations, so that he enters the field with an intimate, practical knowledge of the industry. Mr. France had charge of the legal details connected with the transfer of Triangle interests that took place about the first of the year, and succeeded with his task so well that President W. W. Hodkinson and his associates determined to secure his active participation in carrying out the progressive policies of the new corporation. He assumed the duties of his office on February 20.

R. W. France was born July 27, 1883, at Lowville, N. Y. Joseph I. France, United States Senator-elect of Maryland, is a brother of the new Triangle executive. Mr. France received his education at Hamilton College, George Washington University, and the Albany Law School. He was admitted to the bar in 1906.

"Co-operation and mutual helpfulness will be the watchwords of Triangle service," Mr. France declared last week. "In bringing about the recent changes in this big business organization we have taken pains to perfect the co-ordination of all producing units releasing features on the Triangle program and their proper relationship with our distributing organization, so that every branch of the business will bend its energies to the work of giving the public the best pictures obtainable—and at the same time share in the profits on the squarest possible pro rata basis.

"The old plan of paying a flat rate for the production turned out by the various studios making Triangle pictures has been abandoned in favor of the fairer method of working with the producing companies on a profit-sharing basis, so that as volume of distribution increases they will receive a greater income on their releases. This will also make it highly advantageous to the producing studios to strive continually for the best results, for the better the quality of the production the higher will be the returns to the producer. The fundamental ideal to be kept in mind at all times will be public service."

"In securing R. W. France as general manager of this business," said President Hodkinson, "I am firmly convinced that the Triangle Distributing Corporation has availed itself of the services of a man who is bound to have an important influence on the upbuilding of our part of the film industry along progressive lines. Mr. France and I are in entire accord as to the necessity for developing the highest possible standard of co-operation between producer, distributor, exhibitor and theatrical patron in order that all may get the best service and the maximum of legitimate profit at the minimum of expense and friction. For years I have hoped to find a man of the caliber of Mr. France, who would be thoroughly familiar with the big principles underlying general business with a sufficient knowledge of film production and distribution to permit of his applying these principles in our particular field, besides possessing a broad point of view, making it possible for him to see where improvements can be made and ideas of progressive efficiency put into operation."

KEEPERS WITH EMPIRE ALL-STAR CORPORATION.

Harry L. Keepers, until recently with the Harry Myers-Rosemary Theby De Lux Comedies at Vim studio, Jacksonville, has signed with the Empire All-Star Corporation.

At the Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of February 25 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"The Fortunes of Fifi" at the Strand.

THE principal photodramatic attraction at the Strand for the week of February 25 was "The Fortunes of Fifi," in which Daniel Frohman presents diminutive Marguerite Clark in the stellar role. The story, which was written by Molly Elliott Seawell, concerns a little French actress in the time of Napoleon. The cast includes William Sorelle, John Sainpolis, Yvonne Chevalier, Kate Lester, Jean Gauthier and J. K. Murray. Victor Moore was seen in a new comedy, "Some Doctor." An educational study, "Whale Fishing in the Northern Pacific," the Topical Review and "Prizma," the latest invention in colored moving picture photography, were also on the program. The soloists were Nadine Legot, Knud Dalgaard, Foreom Bezazian and Arthur Depew.

"The Vicar of Wakefield" at the Rialto.

"The Vicar of Wakefield," in which Frederick Warde was featured at the Rialto, preserves all the qualities which characterize Oliver Goldsmith's classic novel. The Thanhouser studios consider this production the most satisfactory they have ever turned out, and their opinion is corroborated by the Photoplay League. Mr. Warde's ripe experience in the drama has enabled him to portray with singular realism the character of the kindly old vicar.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in a new comedy based on the funny side of domestic life, views of Oregon water falls, which Robert C. Bruce photographed on his last trip to the Northwest, and the topical digest completed the picture program. The Quartette from "Rigoletto" was sung by Mme. Maubourg, Mme. D'Espinoy, M. Du Frere and Signor Rodolfo. M. Du Frere was heard also in an aria from "The Chimes of Normandy."

"The Barrier" at the Broadway.

The Rex Beach Pictures Company's feature, "The Barrier," opened for a run at the Broadway theater Sunday. The picture was reviewed by the reviewers with unstinted praise, and there is every indication that the engagement at the Broadway will be successful.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street theater four new pictures were shown. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday William Desmond in "The Last of the Ingrams," and Claire Anderson in a romping Triangle Comedy, "Done in Oil," were the picture features. On Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday Robert Harron in "The Bad Boy," and the rapid-fire comedy, "The Nick of Time Baby," completed the quartet of screen attractions.

ARTCRAFT TO TAKE OVER NEW OFFICES.

The entire fifteenth floor of the Godfrey Building, at 729 Seventh avenue, New York, in which the present Artcraft offices are located, has been taken over and the preparation of an immense office suite is now under way under the direction of Al Lichtman, General Manager of Artcraft, and John A. Kent. The plans for the new quarters call for all modern improvements in office furnishings, tending to assist the efficiency of the employees, and it is expected that, when complete, the new suite will present a model business establishment. Private offices are at present being fitted for the executives of the company and the building of a novel projection room is already well under way.

The suite will also include the offices of the Fairbanks representatives, as well as the New York Exchange. Arthur G. Whyte, head of the local exchange, is already located in his office and it is expected that all other offices will be moved in about two weeks.

COBE AGAIN ON THE ROAD.

A. J. Cobe, president of the Ultra Pictures Corporation, is again doing a marathon around the country. It is understood that he holds the title of long distance commuter of the world. He is making a flying trip through the west, fixing up a few minor details before the initial release of the company, "The Woman Who Dared," featuring Beatrice Michelena, is presented to the public.

M'CLURE PICTURES NOT CASTING YET.

Although plans are progressing rapidly for the next series of five reel features to follow "Seven Deadly Sins," McClure Pictures is not yet doing any casting for the new series. Since the announcement was made that McClure Pictures would soon produce another series, the McClure offices have been crowded with actors and agents, who call only to be turned away.

Southerners Organize New Exchange

To Deal in Independent Makes and in Fixing Prices Will Consider Large Negro Population.

THE offices of the Pearce Amusement Syndicate have been removed from rooms above the Trianon theater, where they have been for years, to much more commodious quarters over the Tudor theater. Behind the operation are the plans for an enterprise that promises to have far-reaching effect upon the film business in that territory—and "that territory" in this instance means pretty much the entire South.

J. Eugene Pearce.

With J. Eugene Pearce at its head a company of experienced motion picture men, with ample means, is being organized for dealing in independent films of the best sort, and of promoting the higher classes of periodical releases that are not attached to the programs of the regular program producers. It is expected to make direct and advantageous connection with the best exhibitors in the South. The attempt to disguise the fact that there is widespread dissatisfaction among reputable exhibitors over the present methods of selling films is useless. This dissatisfaction has been growing until it has made the opening which such astute men as Mr. Pearce and his associates have been quick to observe.

"The fact is," said Mr. Pearce, "that the true conditions which exist in the South have never been understood by the men at the head of the film business. The Southern exhibitor has been at the mercy of an arbitrary system, based upon calculations which may be equitable in other localities, but which work a hardship here, and the worst of it is there appears to be no disposition to change the system so that the Southern exhibitor shall have an equal break with his more fortunate brethren in other sections of the country.

"New York seems incapable of analyzing the Southern situation when it comes to fixing film rentals for different sized cities. Evidently census reports are regarded as indisputable authority and the prices are arbitrarily fixed thereon. Now, the census enumerator counts noses, but he makes no distinction when it comes to race or color, all of which works a hardship on the Southern exhibitor when it comes to calculating the basis for film rentals.

"The South, as everybody should know, has a large negro population, but what a good many people fail or refuse to learn is that the Southern white race, constitution or no constitution, refuse to consider the negro when it comes to social or amusement intercourse. Very few of the motion picture theaters in the South will allow negro patrons at all. Some of them have segregated sections for the colored patrons, but when a theater adopts this expedient the character of its patronage immediately reaches a lower level. Therefore, in calculating film rentals on the basis of population, it is manifestly unjust to blindly accept the United States census reports as a criterion.

"Take New Orleans as an example. On the books the city stands as having over 350,000 population. It's more than that, but we will be conservative. There are only a few of the suburban houses that will allow a negro to enter and none of the downtown houses will tolerate them. Yet 40 per cent. of the population of the city is colored. That cuts down the average to an appreciable degree, you will admit. Then this city is peculiar in another respect. In the early days it was composed of several distinct municipalities—Magazine, Claibourne, Dryades and Algiers. Each of the municipalities had its own business centers and its own circles of social restrictions. Finally these municipalities grew together and became an integral part of New Orleans, but each retained in a large measure its early social traditions. It is possible for a citizen to live a year in this city and never once come onto Canal street, the principal downtown thoroughfare. Each one of these centers has its own motion picture theater and some of them have several. They are good theaters and enjoy good patronage. Besides this there are a lot of suburban houses in the best districts, all of which have their clientele. They divide and scatter the business and give a peculiar turn to the Canal street business. But here comes the film salesman, going by the book, and tells us we must pay so and so for films and furthermore must run them a stated period of time. We might as well close our houses as to submit to his dictates. We have no assurance that his features are what he claims them to be and if we put on a weak picture we lose money. Meanwhile the suburban exhibitor lays back and trims his sails to the Canal street breezes. If a picture fails to get over on its first run on Canal street, he keeps it out of his house. If it makes good, his safety in running it is assured, because the people read the newspapers.

"Just the other day the representative of an independent feature informed me that unless he received a certain price for his production it would be kept out of this territory, and he seemed to think that he had been abused when he was informed that he was at liberty to do as he pleased about depriving an anxious and expectant Southern populace of pleasure which might affect the entire future course of their existence.

"It is this arbitrary system that is causing the Southern exhibitor to cast about him for independent service. He is tired of paying exorbitant prices for first run films that are afterward peddled for as low as $4 or $5, with sometimes a one or two reeler on the side for good measure, to exhibitors in his immediate territory. He is tired of buying features the price of which is calculated on a false and unjust basis, and he is going to cast about until he finds a reliable manner in which to protect himself. There is no denying the fact that there are large numbers of feature films of independent manufacture seeking a stable market, and that is one of the considerations that has been taken into account by the new company.

"These men will calculate their rental charges upon the actual number of white citizens in a town and they will abstain from the bombastic manner of exploiting features that awaken distrust and quickly put all productions on the same level so far as the public is able to judge from the printed announcements. The unfortunate exchange managers who are assigned to this territory but are compelled to have their thinking done in New York know of the conditions, but they are powerless. They are a pretty likable set of fellows and would doubtless show better results were they to be given at least decent consideration. They are alert and know the Southern conditions and the Southern conditions are such that the present methods will not fit up to them, and the Southern motion picture field is of too much consequence to be ostracized simply because New York refuses to adapt its methods to a sane and just consideration of the conditions as they exist."

Walter Hampden Gives Dinner

Entertains Members of the Warren Company, Who Appeared in "The Transgressor."

WALTER HAMPDEN, who has a recognized international reputation as the great interpreter of the Good Samaritan, celebrated the close of his engagement with the Edward Warren Productions, Monday, February 26, at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, where he gave a private dinner to those who were associated with him in the cast of Mr. Warren's forthcoming state rights feature, now known as the "Transgressor."

In speaking of his association with Mr. Warren's company, Mr. Hampden said: "Not since I appeared in Charles Rann Kennedy's play, 'The Servant in the House,' have I had a role that I played with such enthusiasm as Mr. Goode in the 'Transgressor.' The part has all the spirit and exhilarating strength of Manson in 'The Servant in the House.'"

At the dinner were present Edward Warren, the producer of the forthcoming play, the "Transgressor"; Mrs. Lillian Warren, the art director; George Fitch, technical director; Henry Cronjager, cameraman, and the members of the cast as follows: Sheldon Lewis, of Iron Claw fame; Charlotte Ives, who appeared with E. H. Sothorn in "The Man of Mystery"; Marie Shotwell, featured in "Enlighten Thy Daughter" and the "Witching Hour"; Harry Benham, of the "Million Dollar Mystery," and Theodore Friebus, the well-known actor, and H. Z. Levine, business manager of the company.

ZENA KEEFE AS A GIRL REPORTER.

Zena Keefe, who plays the girl reporter in "The Meeting," the eleventh story of the Mutual series, "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters," has been on the stage from the age of three. She has had a varied experience, having played in vaudeville, in stock and toured the country at the head of her own company. Her first experience before the camera was made when she was still working in vaudeville.

Miss Keefe is especially well fitted to portray the role of a reporter because she has had actual newspaper experience and is thoroughly familiar with the newspaper editorial departments. She also frequently contributes special feature articles to the newspapers.

Kalem Signs Ham and Bud

Famous Fun-Makers Now Under the Direction of Al Santell on Long Term Contract..

THOSE funny fellers—Ham and Bud, in every day life Lloyd V. Hamilton and A. E. Duncan—have been induced to affix their signatures to long-term contracts insuring their continued appearance in the "Ham" comedies released by Kalem.

Their action sets at rest a number of rumors that this famous comedy pair were about to sever their pleasant relations of over two years duration with the Kalem Company. While it is a fact that several companies were anxious to secure their services, both Ham and Bud declare that they never contemplated a change; that they would in fact feel sadly out of place under any other banner.

Judging from the volume of letters received by the Kalem Company from exhibitors who have voluntarily praised the "Ham" comedies, this bit of news will prove most interesting to the trade at large.

There recently appeared in a popular magazine an article discussing the psychology of comedy pictures. The author of that article paid Ham one of the sincerest compliments he has ever received when he said: "No one has ever questioned the mirth-provoking ability of Ham (Lloyd V. Hamilton) ably seconded by diminutive 'Bud' Duncan. I do not know of a single comedian, past or present, stage or screen, whose very appearance is more inducive to a hearty guffaw than this same Ham whose comedies bear his abbreviated name. He is, beyond a doubt, the most talented of all the screen people and you realize it more with each succeeding picture."

Treating his subject from another angle this author went on to say that Ham need never resort to slapstick methods because with his knowledge of pantomime and make-up it was totally unnecessary. As a matter of fact there is a time and a place for slapstick business but it is used sparingly in the "Ham" comedies, which are unusually clean and free from vulgarity and therefore popular in all communities.

The Kalem organization also announces the acquisition of Al Santell as a director for its "Ham" comedies. His very first picture, "Efficiency Experts?" is a riot of fun. The action centers around a marvelously efficient lawn mower that can be turned loose on any lawn and shear to perfection. His second production is titled "Bulls or Bullets?" and deals with the trials and tribulations of Ham and Bud in the impersonation of a famous bull fighter and his faithful matador.

Kalem regards its prompt action in retaining the services of these premier comedians and the selection of Mr. Santell to direct them as acts directly calculated to benefit the exhibitors of the entire country. "We're making the best comedies in the field today, bar none," said a representative of the Kalem Company when giving out the information about re-signing Ham and Bud. "You'll see," he added significantly, as he brought forth this picture of the famous comedy stars.

Kenneth D. Harlan Joins Fine Arts

KENNETH D. HARLAN, new Triangle-Fine Arts leading man, who signed his contract in Chicago and arrived at the Triangle-Fine Arts Los Angeles studio recently, spent his first day talking over his future career with the management.

Harlan is a good looking young chap and his appearance on the lot was the signal for a hasty conference in the feminine ranks. Bessie Love, Pauline Starke, Winifred Westover, Constance Talmadge, Mildred Harris and several other actresses who are yet in their 'teens had opinions to express about the actor which, unfortunately, were not overheard.

Though Harlan has not yet been cast for his first part, it is reported that he will play opposite Constance Talmadge, under the direction of Paul Powell. A number of photographic tests of his features in various makeups and characterizations will be taken to determine the roles he is best adapted to portray.

The new leading man is a college graduate and is 22 years old. He first engaged in amateur theatricals in New York and afterward graduated to the speaking stage. He was in stock two seasons, afterward in vaudeville, and attracted wide attention when appearing with Gertrude Hoffman in Sumurun. He is said to be a skilled pantomimist and dancer as well as an actor.

SCULPTRESS MAKES PLAQUE OF ALICE BRADY.

Renee Prahar, an internationally noted sculptress, has just completed a plaque of Alice Brady, which is designed for limited private circulation as a souvenir of "Maternity," a recently completed World Picture Brady-Made.

Miss Prahar, who had been in Europe for several years specializing in portrait busts of titled Englishmen and women, returned to America at the outbreak of the war. Like many other Americans in Paris when hostilities between the nations began, Miss Prahar found herself with her ready money tied up and unable for some time to raise enough to cover the barest necessities. She finally managed to scrape together a sum sufficient to cover the price of a steerage ticket to New York, and crossed the ocean in surroundings she assures her friends she will never forget.

The "punch" of "Maternity" is the realistic burning of a hospital in which is a childless young wife who rescues the little daughter of a woman of whom she is jealous. This is but one of many tense situations.

ERNEST WILLIAMSON BACK FROM BAHAMAS.

J. Ernest Williamson returned to New York last week on the S. S. Morro Castle from the West Indies, where he has been engaged for several months in the production of another sensational under-water movie thriller. Accompanying Mr. Williamson were several of the directors, camera men, and actor folk who deserted Broadway last fall to take part in the new production.

RAVER HEADS ART DRAMAS.

At a special meeting of the Board of Directors of Art Dramas, Inc., held Monday evening, Harry R. Raver was elected president of the organization, succeeding William L. Sherrill. Harry M. Goetz of the Erbograp Co. was elected Secretary. The official roster now stands: Harry R. Raver, president; George Wiley, Vice-President; Harry M. Goetz, Secretary, and Herbert Blache, Treasurer.

General Film Company's Regular Releases Can Furnish Children's Programs the Year Round.

MR. DROWNER, in charge of Friendly House at Davenport, Ia., is doing work in that community which, like the good seed sown on good ground, will bring in a rich harvest.

In the latest issue of Friendly Chat, which is published by Mr. Drowner at Friendly House, the moving picture department is given special prominence. This matter is interesting, because it shows how Mr. Drowner has succeeded in giving weekly programs for children the year round. These programs are shown on Saturdays.

"The attendance has been admirable since the light season of the Christmas holidays," the article states. "This is due to the fine programs sent each week by our old friends of the General Film Company's office in Chicago, and the weekly wonder box from the Engineering Extension Department of the Iowa State College at Ames.

"The Friendly House people are having many smiles over the agitation in the press of the country for children's motion picture programs and children's matinees, as if something new had been discovered in the recreation field. These programs have been given nine hours daily, morning, afternoon and evening, each Saturday of the settlement year at Friendly House for over four years. It is no longer an experiment, but an established success.

"Let it not be forgotten that the General Film Company can furnish such service from its regular releases, and keep it up the year around. They know what children want and they have it.

"Friendly House children have seen 'The Coming of Columbus' recently, and have paid their pennies for Lillian and Dorothy Gish and Mary Pickford.

"A new feature of the motion picture afternoon is the chorus singing, from 1:30 to 2 o'clock, the words of the songs being thrown on the picture screen. It is something inspiring."

Perpetual Injunction Protecting "The Birth of a Nation."

In the Superior Court, this city, on Tuesday, February 20, Judge Martin M. Gridley granted a perpetual injunction restraining Mayor Thompson and the city of Chicago from preventing the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" in Chicago at any time in the future.

It may be remembered that shortly after the premier showing of the film in Chicago, Major Funkhouser, head of the censor board, had ordered cut out all scenes that presumably reflected on negroes. This order was ignored by the company controlling the film, and its continued presentation was made possible at the Illinois theater by a temporary restraining order granted by Judge Fenimore Cooper, of the Superior Court.

The city failed to perfect its appeal until after the run of the Griffith picture had closed at the Colonial in 1916, to which theater it had been transferred from the Illinois, and the appeal was dismissed.

The picture opened a second run at the Colonial in September, 1916, which lasted until November 25, during which time the city again attempted to stop its showing, but legal action was deferred until January of the present year, when the city moved to dissolve the restraining order.

Unless appeal is taken from Judge Gridley's decision all litigation in the matter is ended.

Poster Suit of Wolf and Choynski vs. Selig, Kleine and Essanay Reversed in Appellate Court.

In the case of Nathan Wolf and M. A. Choynski vs. the Selig Polyscope Co., George Kleine and the Essanay Film Manufacturing Co., in which it was sought by the defendants in the Appellate Court to reverse the judgment against them of $2,000 in the Superior Court, the judgment of the lower court was reversed with a finding of facts, and judgment of nil capiat was entered in the higher court. Mr.

Presiding Justice McSurely delivered the opinion of the court, the summing up of which reads as follows:

The gist of this action is a joint conspiracy to violate the contracts entered into severally by the defendants with the plaintiffs. It therefore was essential to plaintiffs' case that they establish the several contracts with the defendants. We are of the opinion that they have failed in this respect. Taking their own statements in the most favorable light to them, there has been shown nothing more than preliminary negotiations which might or might not ultimately have resulted in contracts. At most what was said by the defendants merely amounted to an offer that if plaintiffs should wish to purchase posters and should make a proposition which was satisfactory to the defendants they might do business together. In the case of the Essanay plaintiffs were told that this company was not engaged in the business of retailing posters and were referred to Van Ronkel, who handled all the posters made by that defendant. In not a single instance can it be said that the conversations between the plaintiffs and the defendants respectively amounted to a contract. A contract to be enforceable must be definite as to amount, the price, terms of payment and time of delivery. These elements are not determined by the loose, informal talk of the parties.

Plaintiffs having failed to prove the contracts which it is alleged defendants conspired to break, their case fails, and the judgment will be reversed with a finding of facts and judgment of nil capiat will be entered in this court.—Reversed With Finding of Facts.

Finding of Facts.—The court finds that no contracts were entered into between the plaintiffs and the defendants, respectively, which defendants conspired to break, as alleged in plaintiffs' declaration.

Messrs. Wolf and Choynski brought this suit some time ago in connection with certain claims made by them against the defendants in the matter of posters, which they desired to purchase from the defendants and then sell them to the exhibiting trade in Chicago and vicinity.

Chicago Film Brevities.

The name of M. S. Ludick, owner of the Melrose Park theater, this city, was inadvertently omitted from the list of exhibitors elected on the executive committee of the Chicago local at the recent election. The incomplete list appeared on page 994, in the issue of February 17 of this paper. Mr. Ludick is an old exhibitor of fine standing, and has been a constant reader of the Moving Picture World for many years.

Irving Mack, of the publicity department of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, states that the Rialto and McVicker's theaters, vaudeville houses owned by that firm, are doing a largely increased business since Max Linder's first comedy, "Max Comes Across," started its run at these houses.

John Francis Miller, of Buffalo, N. Y., who represents Norman E. Mack of the Buffalo Times, made a pleasant call at this office last week. Mr. Miller came on to see D. J. Sullivan, general manager of Mutual's exchanges, concerning "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters," the serial owned by Mr. Mack and distributed by Mutual. Mr. Miller reports that this production is showing everywhere to good business. Mr. Miller owns two theaters in Buffalo, and a part interest in a third, the Regent, which he pronounces the best money-getter in the Queen City of the Lakes. The last time I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Miller was in New York City during the national convention of the M. P. E. L. of America, when the big split occurred, and the National Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association was formed.

An invitation showing of "The Greater Woman" (starring Marjorie Rambeau), one of the Powell-Mutual star features, in seven reels, was given at Mutual's private projection room Monday afternoon, February 19, before a large audience, comprised of members of the trade and representatives of the Chicago press. Considerable praise was given the production by those present.

William Fox, president of the Fox Film Corporation, made a hurried visit to Chicago, Tuesday, February 20, and paid a visit to the Studebaker, where "A Daughter of the Gods," his big master-film, was in the eighth week of its prosperous run. From all indications the run has still many weeks in store for it. This is the first visit of Mr. Fox to Chicago, and he expressed himself as being delighted with the reception given his product.

Harry Leonhardt, western general manager for the Fox Film Corporation, is at present completing the sixth trip of the year between New York and Los Angeles. He is now in the latter city and is expected to return to Chicago in about a week.

"Beware of Strangers" will complete its third and last week at the La Salle Opera House Saturday, March 3. During its run this Selig special feature has shown to capacity business, and the management states that it has more than duplicated the success of "The Little Girl Next Door."

William N. Selig is now preparing to sell territorial rights to the production, and all inquiries should be addressed in care of the Selig Polyscope Co., Chicago.

William N. Selig announces that a complete line of advertising has now been prepared for his de luxe feature film, "The Garden of Allah." This includes pictorial posters of one, three, eight and twenty-sheet size, and one and three sheets in block; also beautiful and artistic lobby displays in photographs and in oils.

It is claimed that George Fawcett has achieved an artistic triumph, second only to his work in "The Crisis," in the part of John Boland, in "Little Lost Sister." The role is that of a cold-hearted, stern man who poses as a pillar of the church, but who in reality is in league with the evil element of the city in which he lives.

The management of the Piccadilly theater, Rochester, N. Y., followed the example of S. L. Rothapfel, of the Rialto theater, New York City, in shelving the regular program booked at the house to make way for a three-day showing of "Skinner's Dress Suit," Essanay's fine feature, in which Bryant Washburn takes the lead, and which is released through K. E. S. E. The Piccadilly charges a uniform admission of 50 cents. The management of this house deserves commendation for the dignified value placed on its shows.

Aaron Linick, father of Adolph Linick, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, died at his home, this city, February 19, at the ripe age of 76. The funeral ceremony was held at the Fursch Chapel, Wednesday morning, and burial was made at the Free Sons' Cemetery.

Frederick Palmer, the well known war correspondent on the French and English lines, made a return engagement to lecture at Orchestra Hall on Wednesday, February 21, and Friday, February 23. His lecture on these occasions was on "The Battles of Verdun and the Somme and American Preparedness," which was illustrated by several thousand feet of official French and English moving pictures, some of which were received by him only last week.

These pictures show aircraft in action, trench fighting, enormous guns continually firing, the Red Cross Corps at work, firing of machine guns, bayonet charges and actual illustrations of the "curtain of fire." Mr. Palmer will return to the front in France early in April.

About two weeks ago "The Garden of Knowledge" was viewed by Federal Judge Kenesaw Landis, in this city, and he immediately barred it from ever being shown in the United States, on the ground that it was unfit morally to be viewed by the public. The same picture was recently exhibited in Minneapolis and, his attention being drawn to that fact, Judge Landis said:

"Humph, if it's the same men they might find themselves in a lot of trouble."

It was learned Thursday, February 22, that the man or men who were exploiting the picture in Minneapolis had been arrested by the city authorities, and the film barred from exhibition there.

Lee Ochs, national president of the M. P. E. L. of America, has called a meeting of the National Executive Committee of the organization at the Hotel Sherman, Friday, March 2. The object is to ratify the action of the special committee held at a meeting in the Hotel Sherman on February 7, and to take up other business that may come before the committee. At this meeting the installation of the new officers of the Chicago Local elected at the late convention will be made.

Louis H. Frank states that Samuel H. Trigger, of New York, a member of the National Executive Committee of the M. P. E. L. of America, filed a bill of injunction Wednesday, February 21, against the National Executive Committee for removing him as manager of the National Exposition. Immediate action is expected. The injunction proceedings are taken against Lee Ochs, national president; William J. Sweeney, national secretary, and Ludwig Schindler, who was appointed to succeed Mr. Frank, restraining them from taking any part in the management of the coming National Exposition.

Invitations have been sent out to exhibitors and the press by the Famous Players' Film Service to meet Roscoe Arbuckle at an informal and complimentary banquet tendered the exhibitors of Illinois and Indiana at the Hotel Sherman, Tuesday, February 27. Dinner will be served in the Louis XVI. room, at seven o'clock p. m.

Mr. Arbuckle will stop over for the occasion on his way to New York from Los Angeles. Exhibitors are specially requested to be on hand to receive Mr. Arbuckle on his arrival at the La Salle street station February 27 at 1:45 p. m., where a cameraman will be present to take a moving picture of the event.

PHOTOPLAY LEAGUE DINES SCRIBES.

The Photoplay League of New York City gave a luncheon to the press and publicity men on Friday, February 23, at the Hotel Astor. The object of the luncheon was to get better acquainted and set forth the future plans of the league in the promotion of better motion pictures and awakening a general interest in the higher order of production that meet the approval and recommendation of the league.

Frank Lascelles, director of the league, was spokesman for the league and made everybody feel at home by the hospitable and informal way he received and addressed his guests.

Those present were: Miss Emma Bugbee, New York Tribune; Bide Dudley, Evening World; Paul Gulick, Universal Films; Tom North, Vicar of Wakefield; P. A. Parsons, Pathe; E. Lanning Masters, Vitagraph; T. O. Eltonhead, Trade Review; Adam Hull Shirk, Dramatic Mirror; Peter Milne, Motion Picture News; Pete J. Static Club Entertains Directors.

At the Angelus hotel on Thursday, February 16, the Static Club of America, the Pacific Coast organization of cameramen, tendered a good-fellowship dinner to the directors of the Los Angeles colony. Al Cawood, secretary of the club, headed the entertainment committee, and Charles G. Rosher, the president, acted as toastmaster. As a compliment to the Motion Picture Directors' Association Mr. Rosher turned over the toastmaster's chair to "Daddy" Otis Turner, the president of the M. P. D. A.

Telegrams regretting absence were received from Douglas Fairbanks, Thomas A. Edison and Theodore Roberts. The guests present were George E. Marshall, George W. Stout, H. G. Stafford, Wallace D. Coburn, George Cochrane, William Beaudine, L. F. Kelly, Lynn Reynolds, Fred A. Kelsey, H. L. Solter, Rupert Julian, William V. Mong, Horace Davey, Frank Beal, Joseph De Grasse, Thomas W. Los Angeles Brevities.

Mary Pickford arrived in Los Angeles the first part of this week. It is said she will be starred in a ten or twelve-reel feature-de-luxe, shortly to be put in production by Cecil De Mille at the Lasky studio.

Tom Moore, the former Kalem and Arrow Film Company star, is another new arrival at Los Angeles. The three Moore brothers, Tom, Matt and Joe, are celebrating their reunion.

Murdock McQuarrie has come from his recent affiliation with the Selznick company in New York to direct for Gilbert P. Hamilton's Problem Film Company.

Warner Oland has joined the rapidly growing roster of Fox players on the West Coast.

William Fox arrived in Los Angeles on Saturday, February 17, on business connected with his West Coast studios. Mr. Fox had never seen his Los Angeles plant until this visit.

Miss Blanche Sweet, the former Lasky star, has signed up with the Frohman Amusement Corporation and will depart east within a few days.

Frank Darien, the Morosco character actor, is now with the Keystone, playing comedy leads under direction of Ferris Hartman.

Frank Reicher is directing Margaret Illington, the latest Lasky star, in her first production, "The Inner Shrine," from a story by Basil King.

Adele Belgrade and Florence Dagmar have joined the Ince forces this week and will appear in forthcoming Kay Bee productions. Miss Belgrade comes from the legitimate stage and Miss Dagmar is well remembered as a screen actress.

Lloyd V. Hamilton and Bud Duncan have renewed their contract with Kalem and will appear in many rollicking comedies under direction of Al Santell. Frank M. Clark, noted character actor, for many years with Selig, is now under the Kalem banner and appears in the latest episode of the "Stingaree" series, featuring True Boardman.

Recommendation that an ordinance be drafted as suggested by the Friday morning club to require children under fourteen years of age to be accompanied by a parent or guardian when attending motion picture shows was adopted this week by the city council. The city attorney was instructed to draft the ordinance.

Dorothy Gish is back at the Fine Arts studios after a short vacation in New York and has started this week rehearsals on a new picture, in which Frank Bennett plays the leading masculine part. The temporary title of the production is "Her Official Father," and the cast includes F. A. Turner, Ben Schumann, Sam De Grasse, Hal Wilson, Jennie Lee, Bessie Buskirk and Richard Cummings. "Her Official Father" is jointly directed by Elmer Clifton and Joseph Henabery.

"A Daughter of the Gods," the Fox production, opened at Clune's Auditorium theater Monday, February 26.

Webster Campbell in "Truth Triumphant"

MARY CHARLESON, the little actress whose work as Henry B. Walthall's leading woman in "The Truant Soul" and "Little Shoes" won her nation-wide praise, is soon to be seen in an Essanay feature production of her own. "Truth Triumphant" is to be the title of this photo-drama, and it will be released some time in April. Filming of preliminary scenes already are under way.

Supporting Miss Charleson in "Truth Triumphant" is Webster Campbell, the latest addition to Essanay's staff of stars. Mr. Campbell is a graduate of the University of Michigan. After three years in dramatic stock he entered motion pictures, and within a short time scored hits which have won him a permanent stellar position on the screen.

Miss Charleson portrays a tensely emotional role in "Truth Triumphant." The story is that of a girl who finds herself forced to combat the weaknesses of others. Designing persons, who are seeking to profit by the weaknesses, fear their plans will be foiled by the girl's presence. They turn their evil geniuses to the concocting of plans whereby she may be removed from their "field of operations." How the girl frustrates these schemes and brings about the triumph of truth and justice affords a photo-drama replete with thrilling situations, and good emotional acting.

The possibilities offered in this scenario provide Miss Charleson with an unlimited field for the exercise of her dramatic art, on which she has received such unanimously favorable comment. An excellent supporting cast is working on the production. J. Charles Haydon is directing it.

"Truth Triumphant" will be released through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service. Its screen time will be approximately 1 hour 15 minutes.

E. E. HAYES NOT WITH KLINE COMPANY.

The Kline Poster Company, Inc., of 1307 Vine street, Philadelphia, has asked The Moving Picture World to announce, particularly to exhibitors in Florida, that they have no representative by the name of E. E. Hayes. They state that a man using that name has been representing himself as being connected with the firm. They would appreciate any information that might tend to help them locate any person who, without authorization, purports to represent them, and who obtains any money through such false representations.

PICKFORD AND FAIRBANKS MOST POPULAR.

The supreme popularity of two Artcraft stars has just been confirmed in a contest held by the Brooklyn Daily Eagle in connection with the Exhibitors' Ball held at Coney Island Wednesday night. The contest registered Mary Pickford as the winner, with 30,300 votes, while Douglas Fairbanks came out at the top of the list of male stars with 17,210 votes. The winners of the contest were named King and Queen of the ball and were honored with silver loving cups by the Brooklyn Daily Eagle.

Gertrude Dallas With Thanouser

GERTRUDE DALLAS has been engaged by Edwin Thanouser for the principal supporting role in a multiple reel Thanouser feature, in which Miss Florence La Badie is to be starred. The name of this play, the work of Lloyd Lonergan, has not yet been announced.

Miss Dallas has had a notable career upon the stage. She is the great granddaughter of Stonewall Jackson, and at the age of eighteen held a good position in the St. Louis Public Library. A chance came to play a small part with James K. Hackett, and she left the library, never to return—as an employee.

It is interesting to note that the first role of this young girl was that of the negro mammy in "The Crisis." This engagement lasted two weeks, at the end of which time Miss Dallas was minus a position, but with a big ambition to become an actress. She went to New York, was fortunate enough to secure an interview with Charles Frohman, and signed to play the leading role in one of the road companies of "The Thief." Her next engagement was with "The Commanding Officer," while other plays in which she has appeared include "The Great Name," "Gamblers All," "Nearly Married" and "Sinners." She has also appeared in stock in Milwaukee, St. Paul and Philadelphia. Three summers ago Miss Dallas went to Paris and through an influential man in the Government received special permission to attend classes at the National Conservatory as auditrice, a privilege granted to few foreigners.

FILM SALESMEN'S ASSOCIATION GIVES BEEF-STEAK.

Recognition of the newly-formed Film Salesmen's Association was accorded with a will on Saturday night, February 18, when exhibitors, exchange managers, executive heads and almost every film salesman working in New York attended the first annual beefsteak at Keen's Chop House, New York, where two floors were reserved for the exclusive entertainment of the guests.

The film salesmen were seated around a horseshoe arrangement of reel cases on which the meals were served, when a number of prominent exhibitors, as though by pre-arrangement, entered the room. Here instinct temporarily overcame the restraint under which the salesmen had been laboring and each exhibitor became the center of a vortex of men trying to dispose of everything from carbons to $100 features.

A number of impromptu speeches were made. Lee Ochs, national exhibitors' head, Eddie Saunders, for the exchange-men, and John Manheimer, representing the local exhibitors, were among those who expressed their appreciation of the spirit which moved the formation of the salesmen into a co-operative, fraternal body.

The affair lasted until late and was a severe test on the endurance and courage of the exhibitors present. For instance, at 4.45 A. M. one of the exhibitors present was heard to sigh contentedly and remark: "I am now booked solid for the next 47 years. For further dates I must refer you to my son."

NO EXCHANGES FOR WHARTONS.

The statement published in last week's issue of the Moving Picture World to the effect that the Whartons were going to establish exchanges is denied by them. "We only intend to release our productions on a State right basis and will have no exchanges of our own," the Whartons say.

NEW STRAND THEATER AT NEW ORLEANS.

The Saenger Amusement Company, which operates houses at Shreveport, Texarkana, Monroe and Alexandria, will open a new theater at New Orleans, to be called the Strand. The new house is located on Baronne and Gravier streets. The opening date will be about March 15.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Newspaper Advertising.

LATELY we have run considerable newspaper work done by Ralph Ruffner, of the Liberty, Spokane, and some from Ray Bagley, his former associate, now of the Liberty, Long Beach, Cal. With this we reproduce a letter from Mr. Bagley, together with some of his work, and a letter that, without planning to do so, justifies his position. Mr. Bagley sends in a lot of samples, from which we take three for reproduction. The first of these is a half page, with one of the smaller Bagley ads. This is a five sevens, or thirty-five inches in all. The palace uses much the same layout, but is three fours, lit-day, with an hour and twenty-five minute show, and Fairbanks in "American Aristocracy" on the boards.

Here's what convinces us that the ad was largely responsible: Exhibitors around Los Angeles can usually forecast their business on a film from the way the picture was received at its initial showing up town (L. A.) "The Weaker Sex" played to just an average business at Clune's Broadway. I saw the picture while in the city one day and was convinced that we could go the limit on it without disappointing anyone; I consider it a remarkable picture.

We beat any previous Sunday by nearly a hundred dollars! the picture held up nicely for the entire four days, which is a long run for a town of this size, and a competitive house was running Marguerite Clark in "Snow White" a half a block away. The Arbuckle comedy, of course, pulled some of the business, but we had previously run it three days to big business.

The Sunday Afternoon Concert has been a wonderful business getter for us. The idea originated with Mr. Hoyt and has been a regular feature of the Liberty for over four months. On account of the beach attractions all the year around, Sunday matinees proved a "bloomer" until Mr. Hoyt hit upon the concert idea. For the past three Sundays we have been unable to accommodate the crowds.

When Mr. Bagley says something he does not have to hold up his right hand and solemnly swear to make us believe him, but it happens that an earlier comment led Jimquin, of L. A., to write of the Bagley methods. Jimquin is trailing a state rights proposition over California just now, but he is an old time Los Angeles exhibitor, and he knows what is what. He writes:

I was interested in the newspaper copy from that fellow Bagley at Long Beach in your last issue. Particularly interested because I almost ran foul of the aforesaid gentleman a short time ago when I had occasion to play that town with a picture. As I absolutely refuse to let anyone outgame me or outshine me in the dailies when I strike a town with anything worth while, imagine my feelings when I drifted into said town of Long Beach and find the aforesaid party of the second part burning up newspaper space as a regular thing like an intoxicated gentleman from the navy (There's a shorter way of saying that).

"Ho, ho, I sez, sez I, here's a case for investigation." So I immediately donned my armor and went forth to battle. I got into consultation with the local manager at once and pointed out the necessity to him of going the limit on space, but he happened to be one of the kind who doesn't do much newspaper advertising, and couldn't figure out at all at all how publicity at the enormous rate of 30 cents an inch could ever bring justifiable returns. So I swore beneath my beard and biting a chunk out of a railroad spike, I retired discomfited. And so the city of Long Beach possibly missed one of the greatest battles the world has ever seen.

While I am at it I want to say that Mr. Bagley is making the nicest newspaper flash down there that I have seen in a long long time. They told me when I was there that the Liberty (Bagley's house) management was wasting a lot of money on the papers, but the business wasn't materializing. I told them, and I'll tell the world, that if they keep up the pace they were hitting when I was there, they'll eventually make even those old Jasboes, who sit along the Pike watching the tide come in, go out and get their hair cut and become regulars. You'll know what I mean when I tell you that while I was there there was a big cloth sign stretched right opposite the Liberty, the text of which was directed at a newly opened nearby beach town that was "wet" (Long Branch is "dry") and where they allow dancing, etc., on Sunday. It isn't anything on the order of a wide open town or anything like that—just a good live beach town that a lot of prominent Los Angeles people are boosting and that is "coming" fast.

Apropos of the matter under discussion there is a sign and a very prominent one on the outskirts of this town that reads "There's only one place that you can make money without advertising—that's the mint." That may have whiskers, but it is the first time I have run across it, and it struck me as a pretty pointed remark.

You will note that it was told Mr. Quinn that Bagley was spending money and not getting a return, but he is getting it now and more. Most of those who say that newspaper advertising does not pay either do not do enough of it or keep it up long enough. An occasional flash will not do. It must be persistent to win real results. The thirty cents an inch that Mr. Quinn quotes is not a prohibitive price, and hundred inch advertisement came close to breaking the record for the house. He says:

Here's the flash that blew out the fuse in the ticket machine. If there was ever any doubt in our minds as to the real value of newspaper advertising, properly placed, this little old "B" fulls in red" has banished the thought. In the history of the Liberty, the only attraction that topped this was Thanksgiving

If a $30 advertisement will build big business, it is the cheapest thing about the house.

In Clark Irvine's Screamer Bagley has one of those "Town Gossip" imitations telling how the Keystone bunch swiped his cabler with a pathetic picture of the ticket window now covered with cobwebs. It is good work, but there are no cobwebs around Bagley's place, at the ticket window or elsewhere.

More Spreads.

Gordon M. (100 per cent.) Fullerton, of Seattle, sends in displays used for "The Island of Desire," presented at the Liberty, and "The Darling of Paris," at the Coliseum. The latter is given in full (four fifteens); the other is cut to match, though this took the same width the entire depth of the front page of the amusement section. The clipped portion merely showed the musical program and prices in an additional five inches, mostly white space for contrast. The special drawing was made for "The Island of Desire" to emphasize the South Sea Island atmosphere. Both are good examples of what can be done to get away from solid type and produce a display that will compel attention. Both of these will serve as models. The Pacific Coast seems to be walking away from points further east in matters of display. Nothing like the same space is used on the Atlantic seaboard that we know of.

Now and then someone pokes fun at the rural picture theaters advertising that their houses are well warmed, but during the cold snap in New York City at the end of January hundreds of Harlem families went to the picture shows, not to keep warm, but to get warm. It is not only in British Columbia that a well-warmed house is a business maker.

New?

It may not be new, but it's new to us. The Mayer Exchange, Boston, sells its patrons coupon books, representing multiples of five dollars in ten cent coupons which may be sent instead of cash for publicity matter as wanted. It's a nuisance having to buy post office orders or write checks for small sums, and this scheme obviates this nuisance as well as minor bookkeeping.

Drew Strong.

L. W. Carroll, of the Lyric, Lancaster, N. H., "just across the bridge," worked a good stunt for "Wanted—a Home." We think this is one of the stunts suggested by the Bluebird sheet, but at any rate here is its practical outworking. Mr. Carroll writes:

"Our stunt in advertising the Bluebird 'Wanted—A Home,' certainly gave us more publicity than anything we have tried for a long time. First, we inserted the following copy in the classified columns of our local paper:

"WANTED—A HOME. A girl of 16 years of age, blonde, blue eyes, sweet disposition, desires a good home. Parents are both dead, and no living relative. MINA ROGERS.

"P. S.—I can be interviewed at the Lyric theater, Saturday, December 16."

"The next day inquiries began to pour in by telephone and by people in person. Then from several of the surrounding towns we received letters asking about Miss Rogers and wanting to adopt her. Capacity business was the result and many were disappointed to find that there was no girl that really wanted a home. I am enclosing one letter that was especially interesting.

"New Year's day we ran the following slide, which could be used at any season for that matter. The copy is original:

"Christmas Day we had 'The Shooting of Dan McGrew,' and had our stage decorated with a snow scene including an electric star and a sign LYRIC. Back of our picture curtain we set up a barroom scene with the bar and tables and cards laid out for game of solitaire. Then our reader stepped into this setting and read the poem with all lights in the hall off except the star and a border set in the bar. At the place in the poem when it says: 'And the lights, Etc,' the border was put out and only the star shone out. Much favorable comment was given this picture and the way we handled it. The paper the following week said:

"It is doubtful if 'The Shooting of Dan McGrew' ever received a better presentation than at the Opera House, Christmas Day, at which the children were admitted free by the management. Messrs. Carroll & Donnell had put the equal of four days' labor in decorating the front of the stage to resemble the Arctic setting for the picture, and it was an attractive one, indeed. Mrs. Eva L. White, previous to the picture, read Service's poem classic of the Yukon. The management also gave a Drew comedy as an unadvertised attraction."

Unfortunately, the photographs will not reproduce well, but the idea is simply and yet effectively carried out. Eorder exterior wings are used to mask in the interior setting, which last does not fill much more than half the opening in the arch. We are sorry that we cannot reproduce the letter sent to the suppositious Miss Rogers, for it tells better than anything else the seriousness with which the advertisement was taken. Carroll & Donnell are putting their house on the live wire map because they are doing things well.

Telling It All.

The Strand, Council Bluffs, Ia., sends in a four-page by 6-inch folder that covers a lot in a small space. The cover has the house imprint top and bottom to the right and three panels to the left, reading:

A Timely Topic.
Look me over.
I may interest even YOU.

The second and third pages are headed "Did you know?" and goes on with eighteen points about the house on this order:

That—this theater presents matinees every afternoon, to which ladies and children are especially invited?
That—the splendid orchestra furnishes delightful music at the matinees the same as evening performances?

The back page gives a list of players to be seen, the matinee and evening hours and "The Strand Shortens the Longest Hours." This last is a capital slogan. Make a note of it. Now and then it pays even the weekly program houses to slip some such enclosure as this into their envelopes as they mail out. The patrons know all about it, perhaps, but telling them again drives the lesson home. It is this fact which makes house talk so valuable in any program. Though you may tell the reader what he already knows, you help by refreshing his memory. You may know that there is a hole in a certain part of your sidewalk. You are constantly aware of this fact, for each day you instinctively avoid it, but the day you trip over it is the day you become most acutely aware of the fact. It is the same way with house talk. Your patrons know that you have a good orchestra, that you run the best pictures and all that, but each time you tell them strikingly they will sit up with a "that's so" because you present it in a new and effective manner.

Better.

The Lehigh Orpheum, South Bethlehem, Pa., has changed its program form and now runs the show at the Lorenz under the daily program for the Orpheum. This is a better scheme than giving half the program to the Lorenz and still calling it the house program for the other theater. Running the underline of a sister house never hurts, and often helps not a little. The new program gives a page to a title and after cleaning up the week starts the opening days of the following week, a lap-over that keeps the interest up.

New Again.

We are always on the lookout for the program of the Elmwood, Buffalo, to see what they are going to do next with their program enclosure. We have mentioned a number of these, but the latest is the best yet, though a bit of a bother to handle. The program is a six-page folder, card stock, pages 2½x4 inches. The newest enclosure is a strip 1¼x6½, white card. On the outside is printed in two lines:

"From the sublime to the ridiculous." The ends are bent over and tucked into the top and bottom of the program, the strip facing the loose side. This holds it all together and the strip must be removed before the program can be examined. It is only human nature to see what it is, and so the announcement is certain to be read. Where time permits this folding, this is bound to come close to 100 per cent. of efficiency. It is simple, once you have thought of it, but they keep on thinking at the Elmwood, apparently.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Wright Quits Mirror.

WILLIAM Lord Wright has discontinued his department on photoplay writing in the Dramatic Mirror. For nearly six years Mr. Wright has had a similar department in some publication, but his work with the Sell company and pressure on the columns of the Mirror have combined to lead him to discontinue the work for the present. The Mirror could not spare him the proper space, and it was not worth while to try and fill his small allotment with more important duties demanding his time. He has done great good in his department writing and it is to be hoped that he will presently be induced to accept another connection.

Assuredly.

Writing for information, a recent correspondent asks "Don't you think that authors of note have a better chance of selling their plays than the beginner, though the beginner's work is better, in some instances?" We most assuredly think that this is the case, though we disagree with the ending of the question. Authors of note gained such fame as is theirs through good work. A man in an editorial position would rather deal with a writer competent to give him ten good stories than ten men who can each give him one story, perhaps better, but which entails the reading of perhaps a hundred of his scripts. But by "authors of note" we understand writers of known merit rather than literary stars. Lawrence S. McCloskey, for example, is not known as a fiction writer, but he is an author of note in photoplay, known for uniformly good work. Such men sell more quickly than the novice, who has one play out of fifty that is above the average. But beginners do not write better stories than the known men. We think that the inquirer has confused something we said not long ago. What we did say was that the rank and file of photoplay writers did better photoplay material than the noted fiction author, and this is something very different from the beginner. The beginner does not write good stories save by accident, because he is a beginner. He does not yet know his business, and so he cannot do a workmanlike job. He must pass his novitiate before he can properly hope to sell. He cannot even write good synopses until he has a knowledge of the fundamentals. This is something that the synopsis only chasers overlook. You must know what is and is not photoplay before you can hope to sell manv, even in the abridged form of synopsis. Every writer must cut his literary teeth before he can chew into checks. One trouble is that too many start to study check-getting before they begin to study writing and never get to the proper study before they are discouraged.

Bible Film Co.

Phil H. Le Noir, of the Bible Film Co., Las Vegas, asks that authors be advised that the company is not in the market. He writes:

The Bible Film Co., of Las Vegas, New Mexico, is not in the market for manuscripts. However, this company invites correspondence with worth while writers who lean toward religious subjects.

A very important policy which the Bible Film Co. will pursue, and which we would have writers bear in mind, is that all our scripts and productions will be passed upon, particularly regarding their historical and chronological correctness, by an inter-denominational board of censors composed of nationally known clergymen. This information will serve as a guide to writers who wish to forward sample scripts, as many have, to ascertain as to whether they understand our peculiar needs.

And note that because you are willing to write on religious subjects you are not qualified. Your correspondence is not desired unless you are able to do so. Unless you can prove your fitness you will not make a connection, so keep off.

At Half Past One.

Talk about eleventh hour reorganizations. Lately a company shut down to reorganize. The backers had money, but it was going too rapidly, so they wanted to stop and look things over and take a fresh start. They saw many things they should have discovered earlier.

They found that they had the wrong players and the wrong idea of production, but most of all they found that letting the stars write their own stories was the most expensive thing of all. In making plans for the new productions they have set apart a certain sum to be spent for stories. They have demonstrated to their own satisfaction that, first of all, the story must be good, else there is no use wasting money on the production. It is rather late in the day to be making this discovery, but better late than never. It assuredly does seem foolish to take a $1,500 star and a supporting cast that may cost another three or four hundred, go under a heavy production expense, and then try to save money by using a homegrown story not worth wasting ten dollars on, but it is being done right along and lots of the studios have not found out yet that it is a costly idea.

Keep Them Going.

Lately we wrote a script on special order, but subject to approval. It did not seem likely that another company would want it if it failed with the first, but it looked too much like hard work for the man who thought he wanted it, and so we found another buyer for it. We expect to dispose, some time, of every good script we have ever written, and probably some of the poor ones as well. If a story seems to have no chance, put it away, but do not forget it. A year from now it may be just what is wanted. Make certain that nobody wants your story before you retire it, and then keep an eye on conditions as they change against the time somebody might want it.

Mailing Script.

If you send out manuscript, be sure to follow the rules. It would seem that a person should know enough to do this simple thing properly, but not all do. Lately a woman wrote that she had been "writing for the press" for several years. She had not. If she had, she would not have called it by that term. She would not have sent a manuscript to a newspaper instead of a studio, she would not have sent it to a branch office instead of the editorial rooms, she would have sent a return envelope instead of loose stamps, and she would not have asked for a criticism. Just make note of these simple rules:

Provide an envelope large enough to contain the script and a return cover.

Typewrite the return address yourself.

Stick the stamps on yourself.

Fold the manuscript yourself, that you may be certain it will be folded properly.

Fully pay the going package.

Make certain you address it to a company reasonably certain to be in the market.

The New York office of this publication gets one or two scripts a week from people who do not think. We are not buying scripts because we are not making film. Send it to someone who is engaged in that business.

Time Yet.

Any time you get discouraged look up some of the prices paid for the works of genius of a past generation. Think what Poe used to get for his stories. He received prices that would be scorned by the writers for the fifteen-cent magazines of today. They were good stories, but the time was not yet ripe for proper payments. He suffered through being too early in the game. Probably he earned less, in the aggregate, than the men who set the type for his stuff. It is the same thing in pictures today. The cameraman, the director, the laboratory man, all are better paid than the average author, because these are things the employer can realize and understand. We still have far too few men who really appreciate literature for the stories to find their proper place in the scheme of things. Lately in a group of film men the fact was commented upon that the grafters and the four-flushers were more steadily employed than the men who could do things, and the consensus of opinion was that it was because they could lie more profusely and more plausibly. It is much the same in the story end, but it is only a question of time when real values will become known and the proper men will be given their chance. It's worth waiting for, so stick around.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Roll of Honor on Question No. 169.

There were but three replies to question 169, and I am going to publish all of them, because they show three different viewpoints, each of which is worthy of consideration.

Very evidently most of our correspondents were afraid to touch this particular proposition, or else it was something to which they had given very little thought.

Reply to Question No. 169.

By C. E. Linstruth, Carthage, N. Y.

The Question:

What, in your opinion, should be the attitude of local unions with regard to the admission of competent operators located in small towns, away from the immediate vicinity of the local, but within its jurisdiction?

The Answer:

I believe the attitude of local unions with regard to "outsiders" should be as follows: If said outsider is competent, he should be permitted to tote a card just the same as the small town machinist, the molder, plumber and a dozen other craftsmen who hold cards in locals of their respective craft in the cities, but are employed in smaller towns. Naturally the local wants the competent operator who is working in a small town to stay there, which is precisely what the average small town man wants to do, but would like to hold a card of some description that represents organized labor, I believe. Personally, and for example, my wife, who is a pianist, and I work at the Hippodrome theater here—population 5,000. We have been employed here since June, 1911. Our salary, while not large enough to make us dodge the income tax collector, has always been fair, considering the amount of business transacted at this particular "show shop." We can easily maintain a six-room modern flat, which is less than two minutes' walk from the theater. We spend five hours a day, six days only, at the theater, and the balance of the time is dedicated to the joys of home life. Now what do I want with a road card? though I would like to pay dues; it might help some poor devil who is less fortunate by assisting in maintaining proper conditions.

While very likely this is not the best answer to this question, it is the opinion of one of the boys in a town with only two theaters and as many operators.

I am a member of the Carthage Lodge No. 158, F. & A. M., local camp of Woodmen of the World (Belong to that myself.—Ed.), and am a member of the local Rod and Gun Club. I mention these things as I believe they are typical of the competent small town operator, whereas the big town operator has not the time, and perhaps not the opportunity, to enjoy these things.

When trout season opens I can get on a good stream in twenty minutes, and can fish all forenoon. I could not do that in a big city. Here in the foothills of the Adirondacks I am in the game country, and can hunt every Sunday, in season, if I so desire. All these pleasures I can enjoy, and still draw salary as an operator. The city operator can't flush a marsh chicken. I wouldn't care to eat the kind he would—whea! Guess I nearly blew a fuse that time.

Much of this letter is written in the first person, but I only wished to show that I, like many, many other small town operators, would still remain in the "country," even though accepted as members of city locals. The money we would pay in dues and assessments would be a big factor, and perhaps we would be benefited in some way; at least we could show the emblem of organized labor.

Reply to Question No. 169.

By G. A. Yager, Vernon, Texas.

In my opinion there is no legitimate objection to a competent small town operator joining a union, provided he is in the territory of said union. On the other hand if the small town operator does not intend to migrate to the city there is very little use in his joining, as he could not expect union wages in the average small town. Also owing to the fact that he would be working at night, there would be no chance for him to attend union meetings.

It is my opinion, however, that in the future, when the business has settled down, and there are fewer theaters, the small town man will get as much money as his city brother. Then it will be to his advantage to join a local union.

Reply to Question No. 169.

By W. Dorey, Victoria, B. C.

Local unions should have no objections as regards the admitting of competent operators, unless the one applying for admission has committed something injurious to the local.

I firmly believe in being thoroughly organized, and having all competent operators located in small towns admitted to the local in the immediate vicinity. It should be the constant aim of all locals to thoroughly organize their immediate vicinity.

The Coming Trip.

Well, at least I have got the whole thing practically mapped out, and believe me it was some job of mapping; also by the time I get back to New York City I guess there won't be anything left of Richardson but a vest button and piece of shoe string. I have not figured it all out, but estimate the mileage will be about 18,000, with approximately eighty stops.

The approximate dates at different portions of the trip are as follows: Leave New York at midnight of March 1. Tampa, Fla., Tuesday, March 13. Chattanooga, Tenn., Sunday, March 18. Evansville, Ind., Friday, March 23. Birmingham, Ala., Sunday, March 25. New Orleans, La., Wednesday, March 28. Little Rock, Ark., Monday, April 2. Springfield, Mo., Saturday, April 7. Wichita, Kan., Wednesday, April 11. Fort Worth, Texas, Monday, April 16. San Antonio, Texas, Tuesday, April 24. San Diego, Cal., Monday, April 30. Sacramento, Cal., Monday, May 7—and at this point I am going to make a little side trip over to Placerville to visit my old friends, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Travelle. San Francisco, Cal., Wednesday, May 9. Portland, Ore., Sunday, May 13. Seattle, Wash., Wednesday, May 16. Vancouver, B. C., Saturday, May 19. Edmonton, Alberta, Wednesday, May 23. Butte, Mont., Monday, May 28. Spokane, Wash., Thursday, May 31. Salt Lake City, Uta, Tuesday, June 5. Cripple Creek, Colo., Saturday, June 9. Denver, Colo., Monday, June 11.

And from here on the time is not yet quite made up, but the route will run as follows: Topeka, Kan. St. Joseph, Omaha, Mason City, Fort Dodge, Des Moines, Ottumwa and Burlington, Iowa. Galesburg, Ill., and thence north to the Tri-Cities, Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth, beyond which the route is not yet fully determined, but I expect to take in Milwaukee, Chicago, Gary, Ind., and possibly Fort Wayne, Grand Rapids, and Sheboygan, Mich.

NOTICE. PLEASE UNDERSTAND I HAVE BY NO MANNER OF MEANS NAMED ALL THE CITIES WHERE I WILL STOP. I have simply selected points on the route to give you an idea as to what time I will arrive in that particular section. For instance: I have named Fort Worth and San Antonio, Texas. As a matter of fact I will lecture in the following cities in that state: Sherman (Including Dennison), Dallas, Fort Worth, Waco, Palestine, Houston, Galveston, Austin and El Paso, in addition to which I will stop one day in San Antonio, though up to date the San Antonio union has not had the courtesy to reply to a letter, although Mike Signs, secretary, receipted for a registered letter I sent.

These two, however, are the only cities in all the great state of Texas which did not respond promptly, either to the published notice or to a communication by mail.

You will please notice that the dates given beyond Memphis are not official. They are subject to one or two days' variation either way, though I think there will be but little if any change as far as Denver.

And now with regard to the arrangements for the lecture. As I have repeatedly said this is not a handbook selling or subscription soliciting trip. The expense of this trip is being paid by the Moving Picture World, which is sending me out purely for the purpose of awakening an interest among theater managers and operators in better projection and projection with a less enormous waste than we have at present. The lecture consists essentially in pointing out to operators, theater managers and film exchange men errors which are being committed, and which are tremendously costly to exchanges, theater managers and to the industry, both from the point of view of an enormous waste in electrical energy and in films and projection machinery, as well as the lessening of the value of the result on the screen. But bear in mind I shall come among you with no statements which I am not prepared to prove. The lecture will be illustrated, and although it has already been given before some of the largest operators' and exhibitors' organizations in the country, I have yet to find one single man who could or did question the correctness of my position on any matter dealt with.

As to how the arrangements for the lecture are made, why it is immaterial to me, but I would in all earnestness suggest to theater managers, exchange men and operators that they use whatever means may be necessary to get out a full attendance in the various cities and surrounding territory. Please get the idea out of your head, if any of you have that kind of idea (I suspect some few have because letters come in asking: "What will we have to pay you?"), that you have to pay me anything; that you can pay me anything, or that I am going to take any money from you for any purpose of any kind whatever. This is one instance where it is desired to do you good without asking anything of any kind in return, except possibly your good will.

EXCEPTION. THE ONLY EXCEPTION TO THIS IS WHERE IT IS NECESSARY TO MAKE A SIDE TRIP OFF THE MAIN ROUTE IN ORDER TO REACH AN ORGANIZATION.

In that case, as I have explained, the organization must pay the railway expense to and from the nearest point, but I have been able to so arrange the route that there are only two or three instances of that kind. I really wish there were none at all, but in the case of southern Florida, and Calgary and Edmonton, it could not be avoided.

And now, gentlemen, it is going to be a fearfully hard grind for me. I am very, very glad I am going to meet all you men to whom I have talked for so many years, but don't expect me to look over all the theaters in your various cities, because I simply can't possibly manage to do it. Physical strength will not permit. Also every day for four months I will travel from fifty to five hundred miles, and deliver a two hour lecture at the end. I will be glad to examine some representative theaters in each city, but I ask you to select representative houses, so located that they can be reached without too much physical exertion. You see, gentlemen, I cannot afford to take too great a risk of breaking down, and that is exactly what would happen if I did not limit the scope of my activities in the various cities.

A Ghost.

G. H. Meyers, Champaign, Ill., writes:

Have been having trouble with a ghost. When I clear up the center of the picture the edges become brown. Have tried different condensers, different angles for my carbons, and still the ghost haunts me. Am using $\frac{5}{8}$ inch cored carbons on top with $\frac{1}{2}$ inch solid below. Use 60 amperes of 220 volt D. C. through a rectifier. Have a 95 foot throw with a 15 foot 6 inch picture. The lens is a $5\frac{1}{2}$ E.F., and am using a $7\frac{1}{2}$ inch and an $8\frac{1}{2}$ inch condenser. My screen is a decidedly poor one. It is against a north wall and is coated with a special screen paint. We have city heat, which is below the stage under the curtain, and the escaping steam condenses on the screen, forming a mist on its surface. In the summer I can get a clear picture, but in winter it is not nearly so good. Should we have a screen which sets away from the wall with the steam escaping through a pipe to the outside?

The steam ought not to be allowed to come out around the screen, though just what steps should be taken to remedy the condition I could not say without more explicit information. With regard to the lens, you have omitted two important equations, namely, the diameter of your objective and the back focus at which it works. I would suggest that you procure a copy of the third edition of the Handbook (see advertisement at the end of the department) and study "Matching the Lens System," pages 113 to 146, inclusive. I think you will find that alone would be well worth the price of the book. I do not believe you want any such condenser combination as that. It is wasting a large amount of your light, I think. I see you are using 60 amperes D.C. through a rectifier. I wonder if that is right. I do not know of any rectifier (mercury arc rectifier) tube for protection purposes having a capacity greater than 50 amperes. I would suggest that you try out the following. I cannot guarantee that the result will be perfect, but I think that at least it will be better than what you are using now. Not knowing the diameter and back focus of your objective, I am hampered in giving the correct data, and will assume the medium distance from condenser to film, which I will take at 16 inches from the face of the front condenser to the aperture; also I will assume your amperage to be 60, though I am afraid that is high. Under this condition I would suggest that you use a $6\frac{1}{2}$ inch condenser next the arc with a $7\frac{1}{2}$ inch in front, the lenses placed so that their apex will not be more than 1-16 of an inch apart. If this does not work to suit you, give me exact diameter of your objective lens, the exact distance from the aperture to the back surface of the objective lens when the picture is in sharp focus on the screen, and the maximum distance you can get between the face of the condenser and the aperture, and I will go a little further into the matter. Meanwhile, I would advise your manager to remedy the condition that is causing vapor to arise and congeal on the surface of your screen.

Where Was It?

On page 72, January 6th issue, appeared an article under the heading "Foolish Statement," to which Easton, Pa., takes exception, believing that that city was referred to. Attention is called to the fact that Easton, N. J., is so small that it has not even a post office.

Now this particular thing was taken from two or three newspaper clippings sent in by a correspondent. Clippings are very seldom used in the department, and when they are, they are not retained, but are destroyed, therefore I cannot speak with positiveness, but I am quite sure Easton, Pa., was not the town referred to, though it also may not have been Easton, N. J. This item is merely printed to clear up the "fair name" of Easton of the Keystone State.

Very Puzzling.

M. N. Copelman, Philadelphia, Pa., writes:

Now, Richie, old scout, I am going to shoot a couple of questions at you which, to me, seem very puzzling. I have the third edition of the "bible." Got it hot from the press, and believe me, it certainly is some book. I am operating two 1915, Six A projectors, drawing current through a 30 ampere Westinghouse rectifier, and I admit that I am delivering the goods, in which opinion the boss concurs. And, now here comes the questions: First of all, the rectifier won't start itself. I always have to shake the bulb. Second: What are those numbers, "2, 3, 5, 6" on top of the rectifier for? There are four terminals and each has a number on it. Two wires are connected to 3 and 5, but I am not able to understand their purpose. My rectifier is the old style, and the new "bible" does not explain that particular thing concerning the old style rectifier.

I am using two 4-inch Gundlach lenses, of $1\frac{1}{2}$ -inch diameter, at $3\frac{3}{4}$ -inch back focus. According to the Handbook, page 141, I should use two $7\frac{1}{2}$ -inch condensers, with 21 inches from aperture to condenser, but all I can get out of the 1911 Six A is 16 inches. I know you will say get larger diameter lenses, but $1\frac{1}{2}$ inch is the biggest you can get in 4 inch E. F., and even if I could get them larger I would have to stop them down again to get a real sharp picture, as my throw is 85 feet with an 18 foot picture. I know I am losing light, because the "bible" opened my eyes to that fact. My operating room is painted dead black inside, and the only kick coming is that the Philadelphia law won't allow me to put motors on my machines without two licensed operators in the operating room, therefore under the conditions I am compelled to twist the crank. On the machine I use to run slides with which I have one 10 inch and one $6\frac{1}{2}$ inch condenser, the 10 inch in front, of course. With a $6\frac{1}{2}$ and a $7\frac{1}{2}$ I could not cover my slide without having a blue ghost in the center. What else could I do under condition of equipment I am working with?

Why, it would be possible to put a third lens in a stationary bracket, so that when the $6\frac{1}{2}$ - $7\frac{1}{2}$ combination was shoved over to the stereo it would come behind the stationary, and thus form a three lens combination for the stereo. Just what would be needed I don't know. You would have to have that doped out by a lens manufacturer. The Bausch & Lomb, Crown Optical, or Gundlach-Manhattan Companies, Rochester, N. Y., ought to be able to tell you. It is rather a tough proposition to have to work under conditions of that kind. The simplest thing to do would be to install a small, cheap stereopticon with which to project the slides.

You have a Westinghouse rectifier. With regard to its failure to start, you will find something wrong in magnet P, Plate 2, Figure 222, page 449 of the third edition of the Handbook. Possibly the upright rod has become slightly bent and sticks. I would suggest that you secure a magneto and, with the current off the rectifier, and the leads of magnet P disconnected, test the magnet circuit, first, however, removing the tube, and making sure that rod and spring B, Plate 2, work freely. If you cannot find anything wrong after careful examination and test with the magneto, or bell and battery, then you will have to consult the Westinghouse Company. Address Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, Rectifier Department, East Pittsburgh, Pa.

With regard to the figures 2, 3, 5, 6, if you will refer to the lower drawings in Plate 5, page 455, I think you will find your question answered. These diagrams represent the three types of rectifiers made by the Westinghouse people. I think you must have a 40 ampere machine, in which case, taking the center drawing, the transformer would connect from 3 to 2 and 6 to 5, which alters the strength of the auto transformer, so that you can use the machine either for 110 or 220 volts. Inasmuch, however, as you say your machine is an old style one, I am not taking any chances, but will have the Westinghouse Company explain the matter to you fully.

With regard to your inability to get a sufficient distance between the condenser and lamphouse, why I believe if you address the Nicholas Power Company, 90 Gold street, New York City, they will supply you with two extra length rods which will enable you to get the lamphouse further back. I am not sure of that, however. Write and find out.

Coal Camp Shows.

Down in West Virginia the European war has developed a situation as applied to motion pictures which is unique. The coal companies have been faced with the proposition of losing their men, who have deserted literally in squads, companies and regiments, to accept the higher wage offered by munition and other manufacturers. So acute did the labor problem become to the coal producers that they adopted extraordinary measures to render life in the coal camps more agreeable, one of which is the installing of motion picture shows. In one West Virginia valley there have been almost a dozen Motographs sold to coal companies which have their works strung along the valley in small towns from two to four miles apart. One coal and coke company in Raleigh, W. Va., has actually erected a theater seating 1,000, in the tower of which it has placed an eight foot bell, cast in its own machine shops.

Speer Carbons.

For more than a year this particular editor has been promising both himself and the Speer Carbon Company that he would visit St. Marys, in the wilds of the mountains of Pennsylvania, where is located the factory which turns out the now famous Speer Carbon. The trip to the Indianapolis Exhibitors' Convention provided the opportunity, and the morning of January 20 found us seated in the office of Mr. J. S. Speer, the president of the Speer Carbon Company, who bears the new reputation of being the manufacturer of excellent projector carbon, and the old reputation of being "one of the boys," and a darned good fellow to boot.

Mr. Speer located in St. Marys principally on account of the supposed inexhaustible supply of natural gas, which provides cheap heat for the baking of carbons. He began the manufacture of projector carbons seventeen months ago; the first shipment going to O. K. Wilson, manager, Reliance theater, Orangeburg, S. C., on August 31, 1915. The capacity of the plant today is fifteen thousand (15,000) carbons, with the possibility of doubling that output by working double shifts. The process of manufacturing carbons is an interesting thing to look at, and under the guidance of Mr. J. C. Lion, superintendent of the plant, and Mr. G. F. Benkelman, testing engineer, I poked my nose into about everything around the plant that was pokable.

One thing I like about J. S. Speer—that is to say, one thing in particular—there are several—that is, he does not claim perfection. He is willing to admit that there are always improvements to be made, and that, due to the impossibility of at all times securing uniformly excellent materials, there will from time to time flaws creep into the finished product. I am, however, thoroughly satisfied from what I saw in St. Marys that every possible effort is used to avoid the shipment of anything but as nearly as possible perfect carbons. Also, the carbons are very carefully inspected and tested before leaving the factory. On the behalf of something like thirty thousand moving picture machine operators, I sought to impress Messrs. Speer, Lion and Benkelman, the huge importance of sending out no carbon containing anything even fairly suggestive of an imperfect core. The securing of perfect cores is a very difficult proposition, due, in part, to the liability of air bubbles. The mixture from which the cores of soft-cored carbons are made is a composition of lamp black and silicate, which is forced into the baked carbon under a pressure of approximately 100 pounds to the square inch. By a very clever arrangement the operators who core carbons can see at a glance whether or not the core has been forced clear through the carbon, so that the only chance there is for any deficiency of core lies in the possibility of an air bubble, and this it seems cannot always be avoided. This defect, however, is no more present with Speer Carbons than with any other make of carbons, since the coring of all carbons is done by essentially the same process.

It is hardly necessary to go into detail with regard to the general process of manufacture, because that has more than once been described in the department.

In the testing room of the Speer laboratories one or two very important points were brought out. In the first place, it was found that the actual voltage drop of 12 inches of $\frac{3}{16}$ carbon under a 40 ampere load is 2.57 volts. This point will be of considerable interest to operators who have long speculated as to the voltage drop due to the resistance of a carbon. While it is true that this resistance becomes less when it is hot, this decrease is proportional to the original resistance of the carbon, so that when the cold resistance is known, the behavior when hot may be forecasted. Another point which was brought out in the discussion is that penciling of carbons is due to high resistance thereof. In other words, if you get a carbon which pencils, it means one of two things, viz.: Either the carbon is working above its capacity, or else it is a carbon which has excessively high resistance. If the former, it is of course up to you to use a larger carbon. If the latter, then the carbons should be promptly sent back to the manufacturer, because it is not good carbons. The fault may, and probably does, lie in the fact that the carbon has not been sufficiently baked, as high resistance is usually due to this cause.

The Speer Carbon Company has evolved a new carbon designed to be used as the negative on D. C. This carbon, which has been given the trade name "Hold-Ark," has a very high amperage capacity for a given diameter as follows:

40-50 Amps.	{ $\frac{5}{16}$ Speer Cored Positive.
	{ $\frac{7}{16}$ Speer "Hold-Ark" Negative.
50-60 Amps.	{ $\frac{3}{4}$ Speer Cored Positive.
	{ $\frac{7}{16}$ Speer "Hold-Ark" Negative.
60-80 Amps.	{ $\frac{7}{8}$ Speer Cored Positive.
	{ $\frac{1}{2}$ Speer "Hold-Ark" Negative.
80-100 Amps.	{ $1\frac{1}{2}$ Speer Cored Positive.
	{ $\frac{9}{16}$ Speer "Hold-Ark" Negative.

The "Hold-Ark" Carbon has a very hard core of small diameter, and here is a point which looks extremely good to your Uncle Hiram, the Editor. This core is made and baked separately. It is then forced into the carbon, surrounded by a thin mixture of heat insulating, electric-conducting material. You will readily see that by this process an absolutely perfect, continuous core is not only assured, but insured, and that it is a mighty big point in favor of the carbon.

In the testing laboratories I watched the "Hold-Ark" carbon burn at varying voltage and amperage, and, as far as I was able to determine by the test, it is a carbon which should be used with a reasonably short arc. With a long arc there is considerable flame, although not as much as there is when the ordinary soft-cored negative is used. When the arc was brought down to 50 amperes and 50 volts with $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch positive and $\frac{7}{16}$ -inch "Hold-Ark" negative, however, the light was very pure and white and there was very little gas, and, due to the smallness of the negative tip, very little, if any, light interference. I am having samples of these carbons sent out to operators in various parts of the country to be tested. I have every reason to believe that the report will be good, but of that we will speak later, after the reports come in.

The "Hold-Ark" Carbon is coated with copper alloy, and the smaller diameter will require that an adapter be used in the regular carbon jaw, since it will be too small for the jaw to grip. The Speer Company have developed a suitable adapter, which may be obtained through their various distributors, or upon application to the main office in St. Marys, Pennsylvania.

To sum this whole matter up, I know that the Speer Carbon Company is progressing. It is working hard to put out the best possible product, and I am quite sure that it will continue permanently in the projection field. The company had, for a time, considerable trouble with impure materials, but that matter has been very largely overcome, and the company having purchased some pretty expensive experience and paid the bill therefor in the loss of nearly one-half million carbons, I think in the future there will be no just grounds for complaint. I will give you the report on the "Hold-Ark" Carbons within a few weeks. Meanwhile, I would recommend to the favorable consideration of theater managers the product of the Speer Carbon Company, St. Marys, Pennsylvania.

Oh, yes, and by the way, the Speer Carbon Company is not only exploiting the carbon manufacturing field, but is, in effect, in the exhibiting business, because J. S. Speer, president of the Speer Carbon Company, owns the controlling interest in and is manager of the Temple theater, St. Marys, Pennsylvania. This house uses one Simplex and one Power's machine, and takes current through a Martin rotary converter of 140 amperes capacity. This theater, besides furnishing amusement for the inhabitants of St. Marys (the population of which is 7,000), also poses as the goat, because it is here the Speer Carbon Company "tries it on the dog" first; tests of the Speer carbons at varying amperes being conducted daily. This, of course, is an excellent proposition, because of the fact that it gives the company the opportunity of observing the effect of the various mixtures, baking, etc., on the screen of a theater where pictures are actually being projected for the amusement of the public.

The accompanying photographs were made at the direction of the editor, especially for the projection department. So far as I know they are the first photographs of the kind ever published.

Illustration A shows the carbon leaving the press, whence the stiff "dough" is forced under enormous pressure. The carbons run out on a grooved board, each board holding about a dozen carbons. These carbons are approximately six feet long. At the arrow point you see the end of the carbon which is leaving the die immediately under the coiled-up affair which looks like the tail of a healthy pig. Just under the aforesaid coil is a round thing which looks like, and in fact is, a wheel, upon the diameter of which are the letters which make the imprint on the carbon. To the right of the big wrench hanging on the side of the hench are the various dies, or spouts, which are screwed in to the end of the press and regulates the size of the carbon. The slot at the end of these is where the little wheel runs which makes the letters. In the hand of the operator is a big knife with which he cuts off the carbon, and slips the board over one groove to the left. The gauge shows the pressure.

Illustration B shows the method of pointing the carbons by means of emery wheels. When the desired point is attained the process automatically stops. The operator must roll the carbon with his hands. The dust is sucked up through the pipes shown.

These operatives, illustration C, who bear the mark of their calling on face and clothing, are cleaning carbons. The carbon, after pointing, is set upright between points A and B, and revolve at high speed while the operator polishes them with emery cloth, or at least I suppose it is emery cloth. This also serves as a rough test for straightness.

Illustration D shows the carbons being packed in the oven for baking. You will observe they are laid in and carefully packed in sand. Observe how the second and third row of carbons from the farther end have been prepared for sanding. It is necessary that no two carbons be in contact. Before covering with sand, as shown in the foreground of the photograph, the carbons are carefully spaced, but the space between need be only very slight. This oven will be filled full of carbons, and then covered over with a massive heat retaining top, whereupon the heat will be gradually raised by means of natural gas. As I remember it, the baking process continues for about forty-eight hours, though on this point I am not certain. It may be longer.

Moistening Films.

J. P. McArthur, Gordon, Ga., writes:

Am on the road playing week or two week stands. Carry fifty reels, and would appreciate any information you could give me as to how I can best keep the films pliable, and prevent their becoming too brittle.

Well, Brother McArthur, if you have a copy of the third edition of the Handbook turn to page 204 and you will there find your question fully answered. Should a reel become very dry it may be remoistened and rendered pliable by unwinding into a large metal can, in the bottom of which water has been placed, with a wire screen over it to keep the film from direct contact therewith. Cover the can tightly and set in a moderately warm place until the film is soft and pliable. Watch closely, however, since if it is made too moist the emulsion will stick to the back of the film when it is rewound.

I would, however, suggest that you so arrange your film storage tank that there will be a compartment in which you can place a large sponge, which same should be kept filled with water. If this is done, and the sponge is kept moist and the film receptacle closed, the film ought to remain in very good condition almost indefinitely.

Union or Non-Union.

Down in New Orleans Local Union 293 I. A. is having difficulty in convincing several of the big Canal street theaters that it would be right and proper to employ union operators. This is unfortunate, because such things ought not to be. The houses in question are among New Orleans' best, and their managers are men of brains and ability—the kind of men I like to talk to, because the man of ability and brains, while he may be prejudiced, is amenable to reason. Come, then, Messrs. Fichtenberg, Pearce and Boerhinger, let us reason together.

As theater managers you will, I think, admit that it is not exactly the right thing to place from $500 to $800 of highly fragile and very easily damageable property (films), belonging to another man, and from $600 to $1,000 of your own machinery, parts of which are also easily damaged, in any other than competent hands, since incompetency can and DOES do more damage each week than the entire operating room salary list amounts to, and several times over more than the extra sum which would secure for you the best operating talent in that section of the country.

I understand, however, you claim, or one of you does, that local union 293 does not contain men of sufficient ability to meet your demands. I am more than pleased to know you seek high class men, but, gentlemen, surely you would not claim that the mere fact that men joined together in organization tends in any way to lower their ability! If that is true do you account for that fact that the best attorneys, judges, architects, yes and THEATER MANAGERS belong to their respective UNIONS? The history of the past is that organization, as applied to labor, invariably and WITHOUT EXCEPTION raises the morale of the men to a higher level, and their ability as workmen to a higher standard.

Then, too, gentlemen, when it becomes necessary to employ an attorney, you don't inquire as to whether he does or does not belong to the lawyers' union, do you? And this notwithstanding the fact that the lawyers' union (Bar Association) has very much to do with keeping out incompetents, and thus compelling you to pay higher lawyers' fees.

And after all, gentlemen, why should you oppose the operators' union? Do you really think the organization is going to ask for anything which is not right? They ask for an operating room of at least decent size, for plenty of ventilation and running water therein, which is simply another way of saying they want a chance to do their work right, for men are not apt to do high class work in crowded ill-ventilated quarters, where they cannot even wash their hands, although handling valuable films which carbon dust injures seriously. They ask for parts necessary to keep the machinery in good repair, and, possibly, one day off per week. Well, surely, no man would condemn either of those requests as unreasonable. They ask for a supper hour—which you should have given them without the asking, and they ask for perhaps as much as $30 per week, though mostly it is $18 to $28. Well, gentlemen, do you honestly believe you can get a man capable of doing justice to the productions of today for less money? Isn't it just a little bit incongruous to place the work of a $1,000 a week artist in the hands of an eighteen dollar a week man FOR REPRODUCTION? You complain that the New Orleans Local cannot supply you with competent men. I doubt this, but even if true does it not occur to you that perhaps the low wage New Orleans operators receive has something to do with it? Really, my brother manager, in these days of high cost of living, do you think New Orleans operators' salaries are likely to attract very high class talent?

Now, gentlemen, please understand that the foregoing is written in the kindest spirit. I really think the reason back of the trouble in New Orleans is not one of wages, or hours, or conditions, but just plain pride, mixed somewhat, if you will pardon plain speaking, with stubbornness. The manager does not want to admit that the operator has any rights except such as he, the manager, sees fit to grant. He objects to being placed in a position where he must grant requests made by the operators, or to having his operator in position to dictate to him what his (the operator) conditions of labor shall be. Piffle! Forget it! It amounts to nothing. We are, all of us, "dictated to" on every hand. Why even the humble house fly dictates to us and compels us to put in screens. Yes, he (and she) even tell us when we shall put them in, and raise merry shoel with us if we don't get busy. Well, surely you wouldn't place the operator beneath the house fly in the scale of things?

The men are entitled to organize. They OUGHT to organize, and SO HAD YOU, Mr. New Orleans Manager. Then the two organizations can and should meet together once a year, talk things over in the light of reason and fix up a working agreement for the year. Think it over, Messrs. Pearce, Boerhinger and Fichtenberg, and other New Orleans managers.

It is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

The Universal Camera (Continued).

LENS HOOD: A small hood which screws into the focusing mount is furnished, or an outside hood to be attached to the front board may be secured at a small additional price.

Attachments and Mattes: As so many different attachments are used by various cameramen that are not used by others, attachments are listed extra. An automatic dissolving attachment is listed. Mask plates of every conceivable description may be used and can be inserted from the outside of the camera without exposing any film. Each mask is grooved to prevent wrong insertion. This feature, together with a quick interchange of lenses, will enable the skillful operator to produce remarkable effects.

Mechanism: Every moving part is directly connected to one main casting, which insures perfect operating mechanism and protection against disarrangement through rough handling or climatic change.

Threading: Reloading and threading is simple. The light traps in the magazines are slotted so that the film can be slipped into place from the side with one hand. It then passes over the sprocket wheel, the idlers having been thrown back, then through the film channel, which opens like a gate, then back under the sprocket wheel into the lower magazine, where it is inserted in the slot of an ordinary film spool. The magazine is then closed, the idlers put into place, and the camera is ready for action. It can all be done in less than one minute. An experienced person can do it with one hand. It requires only 16 inches of film to load the machine for action.

Cameramen's Correspondence Club.

The following names have been sent in for publication as members of the Cameramen's Correspondence Club. There is no charge or other obligation connected with the club except that persons who register their names for membership are expected to acknowledge the receipt of letters from readers who write to them in response to their published requests for letter chums. Any of the readers of these columns who are interested in any of the subjects listed after the names given are thus invited to discuss their favorite hobby with another kindred hobby rider. If you have not tried corresponding with some one who is interested along the same lines as you are working you will be surprised to learn how much you can broaden your knowledge of a subject. If you have some slant for a subject not listed, get in line and send in your S. O. S. for some brother to help you out with your problems.

Pathe Wants Topical Negatives.

The following notice has been received by this department from the Pathe News Weekly:

Pathe News is glad to have submitted on approval any undeveloped negatives of news interest.

For such parts as are selected payment will be made at the rate of $1.00 per foot.

The class and length of subjects acceptable can best be learned from a study of the successive issues of the Pathe News.

All negative should be shipped immediately by express in light-proof cans to The Director of Pathe News, 1 Congress Street, Jersey City, N. J.

Recent Motion Picture Patents.

The following are condensed descriptions of patents recently granted relating to motion picture photography. A number of correspondents have written asking information about various patents relating to inventions and processes on which they were working and there are doubtless many others who like to follow the trend of progress in the art.

Lists of other recent patents have been given with short descriptions in previous issues. The following are patents which have been granted since then. As there are such a large number of patents granted for instruments and processes relating to cinematography, it is not possible to give them all; only those of direct bearing and interest to the motion picture photographer being included in the list.

These abstracts are made by the staff of the Research Laboratory of the Eastman Kodak Company and contain only the meat of the patent claims minus the legal phraseology. If you are particularly interested in any U. S. patent you can obtain a complete description with explanatory diagrams by sending five cents for each copy wanted, giving the number of the patent, to the Patent Office, Washington, D. C. English patents may be obtained from the English patent office for six pence (12 cents) each by writing to the Patent Office, 25 Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, W. C., England.

U. S. Patents.

- 1196718. A. N. Pierman.
A film for use in color photography comprising a woven color screen of regular design, made up of spun glass or silk threads of red, green and blue.
- 1196080. J. G. Capstaff, as. to E. K. Co.
A method of making transparencies in color by taking two negatives of the object to be photographed through red and green screens.
- 1193879. F. Donisthrope.
A process of color photography especially adapted to motion picture film. A pair of negatives are taken through complementary color filters and a positive is produced from one of them, e.g., the green color value image. This positive is combined with the red color value negative and a print made therefrom. The silver image is toned green and rendered impermeable to dyes. The untuned gelatine is then dyed the complementary color red. This colored print is finally combined with a black and white positive of a negative made by both green and red filters.
- 1193175. Lee Miller.
A motion picture film in which each picture is separated from its neighbor by a narrow space occupied by descriptive matter, the descriptive matter on successive spaces being so located that the wording will appear to move across the screen in a direction contrary to the order in which such matter is customarily read.
- 1193851. G. E. Watts.
A lens specially adapted for motion picture taking. It consists of a large barrel, at one end of which is a large lens. At the opposite end are two smaller lenses, through one of which the main picture is taken, while the other lens introduces at the desired time a visionary image for special effects.
- 1192894. W. B. Hausman.
An apparatus for the realistic reproduction of aerial motion pictures.
- 1193998. C. de Proszynski.
An incandescent lamp especially adapted for motion picture projection outfits.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN and NORMAN STUCKEY

THE design of this department is to diffuse among musicians and exhibitors correct information on all important subjects pertaining to music for the film, to improve the quality of playing and to raise the standard of music in motion picture theaters.

Any question concerning music; suitable instrumentation; questions relating to the organ and mechanical players; in fact, any queries, criticisms or suggestions dealing with the musical interpretation for moving pictures will be answered through this department.

High Class Music a Feature.

By S. L. Rothappel.

UP TO two or three years ago the average man paid little attention to the better kind of music. He could whistle the popular song of the moment, he was familiar with fragments of the current light opera successes, and there were certain grand opera strains which had been impressed on his memory because he had been hearing them all his life. These and a few national airs and folk songs of various countries represented practically all he knew about music.

The reason for this is obvious. Grand opera was expensive. Symphony concerts were regarded as too "high-brow" for the average taste. Other concerts of various sorts were given at regular intervals in scattered locations and only during a limited season. To attend them meant definite planning ahead; and to the average man the amount of pleasure to be derived from them was not worth the bother. They were supported by musicians and genuine lovers of music, to whom each concert was an important occasion.

The combining of a motion picture entertainment with a high class musical programme has changed this condition in a way that is amazing. Today the average man can and does go to hear music of the most artistic quality any afternoon or evening that he feels like it, any day in the week, any week in the year. More than a quarter of a million persons come to the Rialto every month—an increasing large percentage of whom "repeat," because they were attracted by the music we give them. The educational effect of this cannot be estimated. The enjoyment our patrons have experienced from the playing of our orchestra and the singing of our soloists has done more, perhaps, to instill in them a love of good music than any other one factor whose influence has been brought to bear.

The phonograph has had a tremendous and widespread influence in the same direction; but hearing an orchestral number on the phonograph and hearing it—as one does at the Rialto—with all the embellishment of color and scenery that we can give it, and the life and motion lent to the effect by the presence of the musicians themselves, are two experiences not to be compared in the same breath.

It has been extremely interesting to watch the gradual broadening of appreciation developed in our audiences. The grade of music we give our patrons would have been wasted on them—on most of them—two years ago. We had to lead them up to it gradually by a prolonged series of experiments. Our earlier musical offerings in the theaters with which I have been connected in New York were on the border line between the sort of thing which has a general appeal to the masses and the better sort, which demands of its hearers a little more refinement of perception, a little more cultivation of taste. They never were lowered below a certain standard merely for the applause which would have resulted from cheaper selections. Far better "over their heads" than "down to their taste." There was plenty of ragtime and popular stuff of the sort in the incidental music to the comedies, scenic pictures and topical reviews.

We managed to reach all preferences in that manner, just as we do today. Our orchestra can play an operatic overture in a way to satisfy the most critical of musicians, but also can play lighter numbers in a way that sets the toes of the audience tapping all over the house.

Occasionally we introduced selections of too classical a nature, to "get over" with our audiences. We did it deliberately, and we kept the selection on all week, whether it was liberally applauded or not. We knew that the next time our patrons heard it they were bound to like it better. We do the same thing today; but so rapidly have our audiences kept pace with us that the numbers which do not "go big" are now practically negligible.

It is a remarkable fact that not once since the Rialto was opened have we had to take a musical number off our programme because its reception did not warrant its retention. When the idea of better music with motion pictures was young, we sometimes took off a selection which obviously was not appreciated by the majority of those who heard it—or even by a sufficiently large minority. That never happens now. Our audiences today contain so many persons who have always liked good music, and so many whom we have taught to like it, that within certain natural limitations we can give them almost anything we choose, with the assurance beforehand that it will be thoroughly appreciated.

The result of all this is that not only in New York, but in all parts of the country, motion picture audiences have begun to demand better music. In every new theater that is built, provision is made for an orchestra of from a dozen to twenty-five pieces. People have come to know good music when they hear it. They are not satisfied with the inferior quality formerly accepted without comment. Not only in motion picture houses, but everywhere else, better music meets with keener appreciation.

Where are the cheap ballads and popular ragtime hits which used to sweep the country from end to end so that one couldn't escape hearing them day and night? They are not being taken up as they used to be. There hasn't been an "Alexander's Ragtime Band" in the last two years. Why not? Because operatic airs, high class ballads, and standard compositions of all sorts are being whistled and hummed to an extent never before heard in this country.

The whole standard of taste in music has risen rapidly of late, and for this gratifying condition we believe the musical programme at the Rialto and other houses which pattern after us may fairly claim a large share of the credit.

Saint-Saens on Improvising.

The art of improvising has of late engaged the attention of theater organists. It is now included in the course of instruction in many colleges of music, and some excellent modern works have appeared on the subject. What is known as "commonplace" improvisation has perhaps been too severely frowned upon by many organists. That even an uninspired and extemporaneous performance sounds better than a set piece which may not suit the occasion is the opinion of at least one notable authority. We read in a contemporary:

"Saint-Saens has a rather curious plea for improvisation on the organ. The organist," he says, "must improvise if he is to use freely the tone colors of his instrument. In recent years young organists have been deterred from practicing the art. They have been told that an improvisation has not the worth of a piece by Bach or Mendelssohn. I should say not, judging from the vapid, formless things one has heard in that way. But Saint-Saens experiences have evidently been fortunate. Lefebure-Wely, who was a marvellous improvisator—I can say this, for I have heard him—left behind him only insignificant compositions for the organ; and I could cite among contemporaries those who wholly reveal themselves only by improvisation. The organ is an evocator; in contact with it the imagination awakes. That there are poor improvisers, Saint-Saens holds to be immaterial.

"A mediocre improvisation is always endurable when the organist is imbued with the idea that music should be in accordance with the office.

"Saint-Saens adds that during the twenty years or more he was organist at the Madeleine, he almost always improvised, and this was one of the joys of his existence. But there was a legend. He was a severe, austere musician and the public had been led to believe that he constantly played fugues. Thus it happened that a young girl came to him and begged him not to play a fugue at her wedding. It is true that another asked him to play funeral marches. She wished to weep at her wedding; and, as she would not feel tearful, she depended on the organ for the waterworks. A vicar of the parish said to Saint-Saens one day: 'The congregation of the Madeleine is composed for the most part of rich persons who often go to the Opera Comique. They have acquired musical tastes that should be respected.' To which Saint-Saens made answer: 'Monsieur l'Abbe, when I shall hear in the pulpit the dialogue of the Opera Comique, I shall play appropriate music, but not until then.'"

Music Every Musician Should Know.

"Zampa" Overture—Harold.

Zampa was a notorious pirate, whose exploits made him the dread of all Italy. The French composer, Joseph Ferdinand Herold (1791-1833) based his opera "Zampa, or the Marble Bride," upon incidents in the life of this brigand.

The overture is one of the most tuneful and popular compositions. It is a splendid example of the use not only of the different orchestral "choirs" as such, but the use of individual instruments for solo work and particularly clarinet.

It opens with an impetuous introduction for full orchestra, during which the flute has a short solo, followed again by all. After this comes a short episode for strings, flutes and brass, which leads into the proper motive.

Further along we have a melodious solo for clarinet alone, accompanied by the strings. This is a favorite with clarinet players.

This is followed by a dainty flute solo, working up to a crescendo, introducing all of the orchestra. Finally comes the blare of the trumpets, which leads into the spirited finale.

"Los Angeles, Cal." (Mutual-Gaumont).

THE metropolis of southern California, Los Angeles, is given prominence in "See America First No. 75." We are shown views of Broadway, her principal thoroughfare; Central Park, Hollenbeck Park, Angel's Flight, the ascent to the highest point of the city, the County Court-house, the Plaza Church, the Museum of Art, Science and History, the Trinity Auditorium, which is the largest institutional church in the United States, the beautiful Palm Drive, and the National Soldier's Home, as well as many beautiful mansions and bungalows.

"The Government Weather Bureau" (Universal).

The "Universal Screen Magazine No. 10" has recorded interesting details with regard to the Government Weather Bureau. In it we learn how every change or impending change in atmospheric conditions is recorded by delicate instruments. We are shown the observer reading the dial in the wind tower, and learn at the same time how the electrical recording vane gives the wind direction, and how the velocity of the wind is registered by the anemometer and cups. We are also shown the instrument shelter containing thermometers, the machine for recording each change in the rainfall, and the standard barometers. We see the hoisting of weather flags which warn of rain or snow, and the gauging the rainfall.

"Water" (Mutual-Gaumont).

This interesting subject will be found in "Reel Life No. 42." It explains the properties of water and shows it under crystallization, as the snow tree and the ice flower. We are shown the living animalculae in stagnant water under the microscope, and the destruction of these organisms and the purification of water by the use of the violet ray. Water in solidified form introduces, in addition to the pictures of ice and snow, the sports that these forms make possible and beautiful snow-covered mountains. A sea of clouds serves well to illustrate water in vaporized form.

"Putting Rivers to Work" (Paramount-Bray).

In the "Paramount-Bray Pictograph No. 55" appeared an instructive illustration edited by Waldmar Kaempffert, of the Popular Science Monthly. It shows some of the work of the U. S. Geological Survey Department, who are constantly on the lookout for streams and rivers of sufficient power to turn the wheels of the industries of the country. In carrying out this work we learn that they are frequently called upon to wade rivers often where there is a terrific current. We are also shown the construction of dams, ways and channels which have been laid out and put into commercial use.

"Testing Torpedoes" (Universal).

The "Universal Screen Magazine No. 10" shows us how the United States Government conducts the testing of torpedoes before they are handed over to the Navy Department. This is done at the proving range at Sag Harbor, L. I. We are shown the barge from which they are tested, the missile in the tube, the aim and the firing of the torpedo. An expert follows the shots through a telescope and records the hits and misses or any defects which may appear. We see the net that serves as a bull's eye, and learn that the spent torpedo costs approximately $10,000.

"The Armadillo" (Universal).

A short study of the armadillo appears in the Universal Screen Magazine No. 10, pointing out a number of interesting qualities belonging to this little creature. It tells us that it is attractive as a pet, that it is comical, good-natured and friendly. We are introduced to him in his native haunts as well as in domestic surroundings.

"How Cathedral Windows Are Made" (Paramount-Bray).

The "Paramount-Bray Pictograph No. 55" gives a comprehensive illustration of where the glass of which cathedral windows are made comes from, and of how it is treated previous to its enthronement in the gorgeous colored windows of the various cathedrals. We learn that these are made partially from waste glass that is carted from our ash bins and back-yards and sold by the city to the glass manufacturers, who melt it and use it to increase the bulk of "pot-metal," which is the base for all glass stock. After the glass is melted it is colored with metallic oxides of varying intensity and prepared for the art-glass worker, by whom it is transformed. In the picture we see the master artist at work sketching his miniature drawings in color, after which we are shown the finished window in place.

"Oysters on the Mississippi Coast" (Mutual-Gaumont).

"Reel Life No. 42" contains an instructive illustration of all details connected with the oyster industry on the sea coast of the State of Mississippi. We see the oysters being unloaded from the boats and taken to the canning factory, where they are "shucked" by hand after having been steamed. They are then washed in four changes of water and drained before placing in cans. Finally the cans are sealed and boiled and packed 24 in a box for shipping.

"Making a Dress Form" (Mutual-Gaumont).

We learn in "Reel Life No. 42" how the dress forms which do faithful service to the home dressmaker are made. A young woman model is used in the illustration who stands patiently while a light covering of tightly fitted jersey cloth is placed on her body and treated to two coatings of plaster of paris. It is then divided into two sections by means of strings and taken from the body is lined with stiff papier mache, after which the plaster of paris is removed and the form is mounted and ready for use.

"Training Man Hunters" (Mutual-Gaumont).

"Reel Life No. 42" gives a clear illustration of how a Southern detective who has captured more than 1,000 criminals trains his bloodhounds. It shows us how a fake burglar starts out from some house with his booty, and of how the hounds are kept in leash. We also learn that these dogs (English bloodhounds) can scent a trail that is forty-eight hours old, and, in fact, have been known to follow accurately one considerably older.

"How to Make Your Own Chocolate Creams" (Universal).

In the "Universal Screen Magazine No. 10" Mrs. A. Louise Andrea gives an expose of how to make chocolate creams. First we see her making the fondant or cream body, which she makes by boiling together one cup of sugar, one cup of water and a tablespoonful of lemon juice. While doing so she shows us how to tell when the syrup is thoroughly cooked, after which she whips it until it is white. Later the fondant is re-melted and poured into cornstarch mold, and when thoroughly cooled it is taken from the mold and dipped in melted chocolate. This will prove a popular subject with lovers of sweets.

THE MOTION PICTURE IN THE LABORATORY.

Rev. W. H. Jackson. University of Illinois, Urbana, Ill., January 23, 1917.

Dear Sir:

My department has recently been equipped with the best apparatus obtainable for the production of motion pictures. Tests with various testing machines will be photographed such as breaking of steel in various forms, cement specimens and testing of a large locomotive which is going on at present. It will be useful in demonstrating machine operations and methods, operations in horticulture and agriculture such as the process of hybridizing, and in the study of animals. I expect to make many uses of it in the field of natural sciences through the microscope and otherwise. I believe cinematography has a wide application and invaluable use in the field of science for teaching purposes as well as for investigational work and look forward to the day when its value shall be more fully appreciated in those fields.

Very truly,

ARTHUR G. ELDREDGE,

Prof. of Photography. Director of Photographic Laboratories.

Ditmar's Animal Pictures

E. W. Hammons Enthusiastic Over Reception Given His New Catch Throughout the Country.

A SHORT time ago E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation of America, made a tour through a large portion of the country in behalf of the Ditmar animal pictures which have recently been added as a weekly adjunct to the program of this company. Mr. Hammons discovered that the fame of the Ditmar pictures had preceded him, and that the name, Raymond L. Ditmar, with his happy faculty of instilling humor into his moving pictures of even the most unattractive animals, was already well known to those whom he wished to interest.

Our readers are no doubt familiar with the work of Prof. Ditmar, whose pictures are now being released weekly by the Educational Films Corporation of America. This new series of pictures has been individualized by the title, "The Living Book of Nature," and has not been previously shown outside of New York, where they appeared exclusively at the Strand theater. While these pictures are thoroughly instructive, they might at the same time be termed animal comedies, so full are they of genuine humor discovered in the animal kingdom by their able producer.

We may safely say that few animal pictures that have yet been marketed have shown the attractive qualities exhibited by the Ditmar series, which are now procurable at various exchanges throughout the country with which the Educational Films Corporation of America has contracted.

Cleveland's Special Effort

Civic Committee of the Cleveland Federation of Women's Clubs Conducting City-wide Study of "Motion Pictures as a Fine Art."

AS AN added proof of Ohio's interest in the better film movement we find that Cleveland's women are actively engaged in waging a campaign for the improvement of moving picture programs. The Civic Committee of the Cleveland Federation of Women's Clubs, represented by Mrs. Elmar G. Derr and Miss Bertelle M. Lyttle, have taken up the matter and have organized a plan for the city-wide study of "Motion Pictures as a Fine Art." They are conducting a series of "Film-Lecture Recitals" on Saturdays, which began on February 24 and will continue until March 31. These "recitals" will be held in the auditorium of the Y. M. C. A.; and there are also being given special programs for young people at motion picture theaters which are co-operating with the committee. These programs will be considered by the managers as a test of whether many people in their neighborhoods are interested in this study or desire the finer ideals of pictures to prevail.

In the leaflet regarding this matter it is stated that a permanent "Cinema Club" may be organized to continue the study of "Motion Pictures as a Fine Art."

Pictures in Ohio Schools

Their Value as an Educational Aid Now Appreciated by Progressive School Boards.

MOVING pictures are becoming more and more an educational factor in the state of Ohio. Only recently three or four towns have arranged to have them in the schools, and more interest seems to be taken in the various weeklies than ever before.

Recently in Cleveland pictures were taken of the different departments at West Technical School. Closeups of children at work making tools and clothes; girls at work in the kitchen department and in the sewing rooms, were made for exhibition throughout the city, with the object of stimulating the interest of children in the study of vocational work. It is anticipated that the result will be eminently satisfactory and the more enthusiastic go so far as to believe that it will bring about the necessity for the erection of another technical school. The East Technical School is adopting the same plan. And of even greater interest is the fact that the new superintendent of schools, F. E. Spaulding, has in mind the introduction of films in those schools that are not already using them as a complement of classroom work.

Toledo is also working on the progressive end of things, and it has recently been announced by the school superintendent that projection machines will shortly be an adjunct of the class room in Toledo and that moving pictures will be used in the study of geography. The Board of Education having recently indorsed this idea and provided the money.

Lorain is another Ohio city which is adopting the moving picture idea in the schools. Thus far, however, it is being applied only in the high schools, but it is expected, however, that within the next three or four years that at least every high school in the larger cities of the state will have machines.

Literature and War on the Screen

Hall Caine's Novel and the Conflict in Macedonia as Viewed by The Educator.
"The Deemster."

THIS notable work by Hall Caine and filmed by the Arrow Film Co. is another of those pictures entitled to a special notice on this page. Again we have a film which drives the beholder to the reading of a book which the majority will not have read, again thereby attesting the educational value and power of this class of picture, besides adding to the prestige of the writer of "The Christian" and increasing the knowledge of the reader of both picture and book.

Without doubt this is the first time that an old, yet somewhat obscure, part of the world has been brought before the world at large. The Isle of Man is not widely known; indeed, this beautiful little country owes its present publicity to no other than Mr. Hall Caine, who has made his home there and has founded this present subject of "The Deemster" on the times and customs of this island in the eighteenth century. It has always been a strange sort of governmental freakishness that of all the British possessions the Isle of Man, lying but a few hours' sail of the west coast of England, has alone been allowed its own form of government, a sort of local self-government that has always been successful, quiet and dignified.

The "Deemster" is the governor of the island, with the bishop as his only immediate superior. The story surrounds the children of these two men, as will be read in detail in the review as given in its proper place in the Moving Picture World and therefore should not be dealt with at length here. The Educator likes to draw attention to those points in these pictures which give them a value above those not especially educational and because of their source and their objective.

In addition to the value of the story there are revealed the laws and customs, with the local surroundings of a land and a people of whom nothing is known that is not eminently worthy. For strength of character there are some commendable incidents in the good old bishop as in his son Dan, who is represented by Derwent Caine, the son of the author of this work, and who, as a resident of the Isle of Man, is able to do double justice to his father's ideas as to the island home and people whose portrayal is in his care; this he does with singular satisfaction.

Place "The Deemster" with those kindred works which enjoy a high place in the library as in the gallery of famous pictures; whoever has read the book will want to see the picture; who sees the picture will be drawn to read the book and again another doubly educational value will result.

Western Macedonia.

The latest war pictures seen at the Strand were of the battlefields of Western Macedonia and revealed another feature of the conflict of which the present war seems to be so full and varied. A battle above the clouds gives occasion for some unusual pictures, were it not that the primary cause of pictures is that they are of a part in the war they would alone as cloud pictures be very interesting; evidently taken from an aeroplane above the clouds, some splendid effects are produced, and with pictures of enemy planes with their gun power and varied effectiveness. As a result of the flyers' tactics some additional light is given upon the aeroplane as a fighting machine. The address by War Correspondent Powell is very interesting, but it is only due to exhibitors to know that he does not describe the pictures, but speaks independently of them; they need not fear therefore that the pictures are incomplete without his remarks. The pictures and subtitles are sufficiently complete in themselves and are of much value and interest.

Popular Picture Personalities

COMPILED BY THE STATISTICAL DEPARTMENT

WESTOVER, Winifred. Born in San Francisco. Her father is of Scotch-English ancestry and her mother of Swedish-French descent. Both are American born. She is five feet, three inches tall, weighs 128 pounds, has very blond hair and deep blue eyes. After her graduation from the Dominican convent in San Rafael in 1916, through the influence of friends she was brought to the attention of D. W. Griffith, and her first appearance was as the favorite of Egibi in Intolerance. She took the ingenue lead opposite De Wolf Hopper in Poor Papa and was Hulda, the hired girl, in The Microscope Mystery and played Kate, opposite Wildred Lucas, in Jim Bludsoe. She is fond of swimming, riding, drawing and vocal music, but shows no disposition to follow her father into the mysteries of literature. He is a well-known novelist and president of the San Francisco Press Club.

Winifred Westover

LINGHAM, Thomas G. Born in Indianapolis, Ind. Parents American born of English descent. His father, M. V. Lingham, was a well-known stage director and a member of the famous Union Square Stock Company under Shook and Palmer. His mother was professionally known as Kate Fletcher. His grandparents, two uncles and an aunt were also players. Is just six feet tall and weighs 190 pounds. Dark brown hair. Hazel-green eyes. Made his stage debut in 1895, with James O'Neil and remained with him until 1899. Later was under engagement to the Lieblers and has played stock engagements. Made his debut before the camera on November 7, 1913, in Kalem's The Boer War, and remained with that company until April, 1916, changing to the Signal. Is now doing Dollar Holmes in The Lass o' the Lumberlands. Did Deering in The Pitfall and the Maharajah in Shannon of the Sixth.

Thos. G. Lingham

KINGSTON, Winifred. Born in London. English parentage. Is just five feet tall and weighs 107 pounds. Has a fair complexion, chestnut hair and gray eyes. She made her stage debut in England in 1906 and has played with many of the leading English managers. Was leading woman at the Scala, London, for a time under the management of Charles Frohman. In America she was under the management of Joseph Gaites, Henry Miller and others. Her present studio connection is with the Fox western company, but she has also played engagements with Lasky, All Star, Morosco and Famous Players. She made her screen debut in October, 1914, supporting Dustin Farnum in Soldiers of Fortune. Other notable plays in which she has been seen (always in Mr. Farnum's support) have been The Call of the Cum- berland, Cameo Kirby, A Son of Erin, David Crockett and David Garrick. She is an enthusiastic pedestrian.

Winifred Kingston

HICKMAN, Howard C. Born in Columbia, Mo. American parentage. Lacks but a quarter inch of being six feet tall and weighs 155 pounds. Has brown hair and eyes and a dark complexion. Mr. Hickman made his stage debut in 1901 and for twelve years has played on Broadway and with leading dramatic combinations. In July, 1913, he turned to pictures at the close of the theatrical season and made his debut as a Universal player in Under the Black Flag. Later he changed his studio connection to Lasky and is at present one of the Ince players at Culver City. His first play with Lasky was The Circus Man. Other notable parts were the leads in The Man from Oregon, The Moral Fabric, Matrimony, The Purple Cross and in Civilization. He is a great lover of sports, but his chief hobby is dogs, and he has a large kennel of blooded stock with pedigrees.

Howard C. Hickman

VAN BUREN, Mabel. Born in Chicago. Her father was English and her mother Holland-Dutch. Is five feet three and one-half inches tall, and weighs 136 pounds. Dark brown hair and brown eyes.

Miss Van Buren made her stage debut in 1902 and in addition to stock work has played the leads in Monsieur Beaucaire, Pretty Peggy, Bradford's Hope, The Man of the Hour, The Virginian, The Squaw Man, etc. She made her picture debut in 1912 in a Biograph, the title of which she does not now recall. Her present studio connection is with the Lasky organization. In between are engagements with Kinemacolor, Selig, Fox, Pathe and the Clune, in the latter playing the name part in the notable production of Ramona. She was The Woman in the play of that title, the girl in The Girl of the Golden West. Her aviation altitude is 3,500 feet.

Mabel Van Buren

HARDIN, Neil Cameron, Jr. Born in Louisiana, Pike Co., Missouri. American parentage. Is five feet ten and one-half inches and weighs 160 pounds. Light complexion, dark brown hair and dark blue eyes. Mr. Hardin made his stage debut in 1910 and did not come into pictures until May, 1915, first appearing in the Universal serial, The Broken Coin, playing the Spy of Greyhoffer. He is now a leading man with Balboa. Among his well remembered plays are For the Governor's Chair and Temptation and the Girl and is at present doing Edgar Doyle in the Neglected Wife series. Mr. Hardin is fond of dancing and enjoys all out-door sports. He is a graduate of the Law Department of the University of Michigan, held the college championship as boxer and took second prize in Bernarr McFadden's contest for the most perfectly proportioned man. Likes athletics.

The Ascher Bros.' Chicago Circuit

One of the Largest, Most Modern and Costly Chain of Moving Picture Theaters in America—Thirteen Houses in All

IN THE city of Chicago you can see today some of the finest moving picture theaters in the world. There are in all about 550 houses actually open and doing business each day in that city. Foremost among these are the Ascher theaters, numbering thirteen and representing an investment of close to $1,500,000.

Nathan, Max and Harry Ascher, the three names which form the concern known as the Ascher Bros., first entered the business as exhibitors in 1909, and having achieved an unusual success in their ventures, the conduct of their theaters will prove interesting to all exhibitors.

In the month of August, 1909, the three brothers acquired a lease to a small theater of about 300 seats, located at Twenty-sixth street and Homan avenue, called the "Homan." This house was really the first of the Ascher circuit, although it has been disposed of long since. It was not long after the leasing of this theater that the Ascher Bros. started to branch out and secure theaters with larger seating capacities. They took over a few "run down" locations and succeeded in building them up. In those days vaudeville was used in connection with most picture programs, as there were no feature productions. With the advent of the more lengthy subjects came the elimination of vaudeville in the larger theaters, and on September 30, 1912, the Ascher Bros. opened the President theater as an exclusive moving picture theater, at an admission price of 10 cents. Subsequently leases to other large houses were secured. The Cosmopolitan, Lakeside, Frolic, Calo and others followed, until now the Ascher chain is recognized as the largest and one of the most substantial in this country.

In addition to their Chicago circuit of thirteen houses, the Aschers operate three small houses in Marinette, Wis.

Brief descriptions of the most prominent theaters in Chicago follow:

The President Theater.

The President theater, Garfield Boulevard and Calumet avenue, was the first of the larger houses operated under the Ascher system. It was taken over by the Ascher Bros. and opened to the public under their management on September 30, 1912. Previous to this time it was used exclusively for vaudeville. The President is located on one of Chicago's finest boulevards, within a short distance of Jackson Park. It has a seating capacity of 800, and pictures are shown every afternoon and evening, at an admission price of 10 cents. There are six exits from the large auditorium which is decorated in white and blue. The music is furnished by a Kimball organ and a five-piece orchestra. Harry F. Beaumont is the resident manager.

Cosmopolitan Theater.

A good deal of credit is due Bruce Goshaw for the success of the Cosmopolitan theater, Halsted and Seventy-ninth streets, which was the first thousand-seat house to be erected for the Ascher Bros. Manager Godshaw enjoys the distinction of having managed this house since its opening on Saturday, September 6, 1913. This fine modern structure is situated in the suburb of Auburn Park far out in the southwest end of town and is strictly a neighborhood theater. Although in its fifth season, some of the "opening night" patrons can still be seen in the audiences. The foyer of the house is finished in marble and the general color scheme is old rose and blue. The equipment is modern in every detail from the box-office to the operating room. Feature subjects are exhibited both afternoon and evening, at an admission price of 10 cents.

Lakeside Theater.

The opening of the Lakeside theater, Sheridan road and Lakeside place, marked the entrance of the Ascher Bros. to the North side section of Chicago. This beautiful house was formally opened to the public on Saturday, September 4, 1915, and it has been doing a large and profitable business ever since. It is situated in the busiest neighborhood on the North Side, known as the "Wilson Avenue" district, where more business is done each day than is transacted in an ordinary small town. There are close to thirty hotels in this neighborhood alone to draw from.

Matinees are held daily in this theater and three shows are given in the evening. An orchestra of select musicians accompanied by a large pipe organ furnishes the music at all presentations. The seating capacity is 1,000, and the admission price is 10 cents for matinees and 15 cents at night. The theater is under the management of William C. Lamereaux.

The Terminal Theater.

The Terminal theater, Lawrence and Spaulding avenues, is designed architecturally along the same lines as the Frolic. It has the same reverse seating arrangement with the screen hung in front of the auditorium. The exterior of the building is of rough cast tapestry brick. The foyer and ticket booth are of grain white marble. There are 1,000 seats all on one floor, and a feature picture, a comedy and occasionally a scenic completes the program each day. A pipe organ furnishes the music. Edward Nikodeon is the manager.

Calo Theater.

Conspicuous in the construction of the Calo theater, on Clark street and Balmoral avenue, is the large foyer directly off the lobby. Oil paintings of various actors and actresses adorn the walls, and the fixtures are very unusual in design. Particular attention has been given to the seating arrangement in this theater. There are 1,000 comfortable seats on the main floor, and the spacious seating plan is noticeable. The Calo is managed by Joseph Koppel, who had had considerable experience as an exhibitor. His program selections continue to meet with the approval of his patrons, most of whom are "regulars." The house is open afternoon and evening, and the music is furnished by a large two-manual pipe organ. The cost of the complete building was close to $125,000. It fronts on Clark street and there are seven stories besides the theater proper.

Frolic Theater.

The "Frolic," Fifty-fifth street and Ellis avenue, is a favorite place for the students of the University of Chicago. Located within a block of the campus, it is quite handy and one can usually see a number of students at every show. This theater represents an investment of about $150,000, and it is rather unique in design. The auditorium is arranged so that on entering, the patron faces the audience instead of the screen. Few theaters in Chicago have been planned in this way. One thousand seats, upholstered in leather, are on the main floor. The interior color scheme is banana, offset in blue and gold. The lobby is finished in Italian vein marble and mosaic work. The Frolic is equipped with a large pipe organ, and two Simplex motor-driven machines are used to project the pictures. Joseph A. Schaeffer is the manager.

Columbus Theater.

The Columbus, Ashland avenue and Sixty-third street, seats 1,500 people, and was annexed to the Ascher chain on Christmas Day, 1915. This theater has the distinction of being the first "cornerways" house ever built, the auditorium being practically square, with the screen across one corner. An immense dome with hundreds of concealed lights produce a beautiful effect. The entire side walls are covered with life-size mural paintings. With its wonderful acoustics the fine tones of a huge pipe organ are heard to fine advantage, and organ selections are given at each performance. The exterior of the building is lighted with powerful pylon beacon lights with a terra cotta border lighting, giving a flaming fire effect which can be seen for a mile around. A feature program is shown twice daily. D. E. Rice recently succeeded Harry Ascher as the manager.

Oakland Square Theater.

The Oakland Square theater, on Oakwood and Drexel boulevards, was erected under the personal supervision of the architect, Henry L. Newhouse, and is recognized as one of the finest in the country. Until the erection of the Metropolitan, a description of which will follow, this house was unequalled for beauty and modernity by any moving picture theater in Chicago. On the opening night, March 4, 1916, nearly every section of the city was represented in a crowd of nearly 5,000 people who sought to gain admission, and many hundreds were turned away. This beautiful house is located in the heart of an exclusive residence district on the South Side. The interior decorations are carried out in a modified French Renaissance style. The exterior is of the Italian type, and in the copings are quaint grotesque figures. In the auditorium are 1,525 seats all so arranged as to afford a perfect view of the screen, no matter where one may sit. The Oakland Square has been doing a capacity business ever since its successful opening. This can be attributed somewhat to the capable management of Max E. Ascher, whose personal attention is given to the details of every exhibition. The Ascher policy of operating for the convenience of patrons rather than for employees is always in evidence here.

The Lane Court Theater.

The Lane Court theater, on Lane Court and Center street, was opened to the public on Saturday, November 25, 1916. This is one of the most recent acquisitions to the Ascher chain. Henry W. Peters was chosen to manage this house, and the Ascher policy is being maintained in the selection of the programs. Only the latest feature releases are shown with a daily change in the entire program. The musical accompaniment is furnished by a five-piece orchestra and a pipe organ. An unusual ventilating system has been installed in this building, the air being introduced and exhausted from the side walls, thus eliminating any possibility of draft and dust. There are 1,000 seats in the auditorium, upholstered in leather. The house has no gallery.

Metropolitan Theater.

The Metropolitan theater, Forty-seventh street and Grand boulevard, is the thirteenth link in the chain of houses in Chicago operated by the Ascher Bros. On Saturday night, January 20, 1917, the doors of this theater were opened to the public for the first time. Three overflowing performances were given that evening, and many were turned away. Automobiles were lined up for more than a block on either side of Grand boulevard, which is one of Chicago's most fashionable thoroughfares. The photoplay program consisted of Metro's production, "The White Raven," starring Ethel Barrymore, a two-reel Sidney Drew comedy, a Pathe weekly and a scenic, in addition to which were five musical numbers by an orchestra of six pieces, and a large pipe organ, directed by Lynne A. Hazzard. In the way of decorative appointments and general construction the Metropolitan is without a rival in the city of Chicago. With the beautiful arrangement of the interior and the visual advantages of the large auditorium, it might well be said that this theater is nearly perfect in modern moving picture theater design. The lobby walls are finished in Italian Verdi marble, while the floor is covered with black and white mosaic. The auditorium is decorated with a harmonious blend of colors, and is lighted by a large dome placed in the center of the ceiling which contains hundreds of colored bulbs blending into rays of softness and beauty. There are 20 exits from the Auditorium, and 1,600 finely-upholstered seats on the main floor. There is no gallery. The entire building, in which the theater is included, is of fireproof construction and cost about $250,000. The management of the house has been given to Harry E. Ascher.

To Whom Credit Is Due.

Interior Decorating.—All the artistic decorating including the plastique ornaments and the beautiful frieze work in these theaters are the creations of the Decorators' Supply Company.

Projection.—The projection in all Ascher theaters have been equipped by and are maintained by the service department of the E. E. Fulton Company.

Electric Signs.—The Federal Sign System is responsible for the large signs built especially for each theater. The designs of those on the Lakeside and Oakland Square theaters are particularly novel and attractive.

Ticket-Selling Machines.—The box-office of each of these houses are equipped with Ticket-Selling Machines, as manufactured by the Automatic Ticket Selling Machine Company of New York. When speed means money an automatic ticket dispenser is a good thing to have.

Music.—There is no denying the importance of music when it comes to a moving picture exhibition. The organ is an instrument which you will find in nearly every large picture theater. Those used in the Ascher theaters are Kimball organs, the product of the Kimball Organ Company.

Seating.—The matter of seating is one that has had every consideration in these theaters. Comfortable leather seats were installed in each house, contracts for which were placed with two of the largest manufacturers of opera chairs in the world—the A. H. Andrews Company and the Heywood Bros. and Wakefield Company.

Lobby Displays.—To the Menger Ring & Hamburg Company belongs the credit for the fine brass and mahogany lobby displays and wall decorations in all these theaters.

Old Cooper-Hewitt Light

Has Been in Use by Dr. Elmendorf for Nearly Twelve Years—Still In Service.

AFTER having been in constant use for eleven years, eight months and seven days, the oldest type of Cooper-Hewitt lamp in existence, while still fit for further service, has been returned to the manufacturer by Dr. E. L. Elmendorf, the celebrated traveler and lecturer. This "oldest living graduate" is shown in the accompanying illustration.

It was returned with the original tubes, both of which are still in good working order, the vacuum being intact, though the glass was slightly discolored from use.

The work of the lamp has been in connection with the making of lantern slides from photographic negatives, enlarging and reducing negatives, making small and large positives on glass or on paper, and for illuminating flowers, copies, maps, machinery; in fact, everything that Dr. Elmendorf wanted to photograph indoors. Since the lamp was installed, he has given up entirely the use of sunlight for indoor photography. Moreover, whenever there was any very close work to be done in his machine shop, like milling sprockets and spiral gears for a motion picture camera or projector, it was found that better work could be done for longer periods of time without eye-fatigue when the Cooper-Hewitt lamp was used; and by diffusing the light through the finest gauze, the micrometer scales on the instruments of precision employed were very distinct and easily read without the use of a magnifying glass.

Oldest Cooper-Hewitt Lamp.

ments of precision employed were very distinct and easily read without the use of a magnifying glass.

This outfit was in constant use during the entire period above stated except during the summer months when the Doctor was traveling. In the fall it was used on the average of fourteen hours a day; during the winter and spring from six to twelve hours a day, irregularly, depending upon the amount of time Dr. Elmendorf could spare from his lecture work.

Only once during its period of use has the lamp gone out, and that was during a storm when the studio was struck by lightning. However, as the lamp was protected by 5-ampere fuses, it was not injured, and after new fuses were put in and the current turned on it worked as well as before.

CHARLES GOURLEY BUYS UNIONTOWN, PA., LYRIC.

The Lyric theater, East Main street, Uniontown, Pa., has been sold by Louis Sitnek and George Weil, of the Lyric Amusement Company, to Charles Gourley, of the Penn Theater Company. The house has a seating capacity of 700 and has been successfully operated under the management of Mr. Sitnek for the past ten years. Mr. Gourley conducts in a very up-to-date manner the Penn theater on Main street, and will personally look after the management of the Lyric. A program of high class feature pictures will be presented in both houses.

Vachel Lindsay on the Photoplay By Epes W. Sargent

Author of "The Art of Photoplay" Lectures the Cinema Composers of Columbia University

VACHEL LINDSAY, poet, philosopher and author of "The Art of the Photoplay," who came to New York for a successful public reading at Chickering Hall, was the guest of the Cinema Composers of Columbia University, Friday, February 9. The Cinema Composers comprise present pupils and graduates of Dr. Victor O. Freeburg's class in photoplay construction, and Mr. Lindsay's visit was his second annual appearance at Columbia.

Evidently Mr. Lindsay has studied still more deeply the art of photoplay since the production of his book, for his talk to the composers was lacking in the fantastic features of some of the chapters of his book. He presented a new definition of the photoplay, declaring it to be a conversation between two places, using for his illustration the balcony scene from the Bushman-Bayne production of Romeo and Juliet in which the flashes alternate between Romeo and the balcony where Juliet is sitting. Perhaps the idea may be better suggested by saying that photoplay demands a story that is never held long in a single location as opposed to the limitation of the stage settings of the spoken drama.

One fault of present conditions, he found, was that the leaders in the business of producing plays have, to use his words, "too long an experience in the drama and too short an experience in photoplay." They produce dramas in motion with the dramatic technique and with the drama climaxes and fail in their efforts. Photoplay, Mr. Lindsay holds, is not only not drama, but is opposed to drama, which makes its appeal chiefly to the ear where photoplay directs its appeal to the passions of the eye. "If drama can appeal in photoplay," he declared, "then we should see with our ears and hear with our eyes, for what appeals to the passions of the ear cannot make the same appeal to the passions of the eye." The result may be practically the same, but the approach must be wholly different, and herein most producers fail in that they seek to apply to the photoplay merely a modification of the technique of the stage play. It is because this is done, Mr. Lindsay contends, that so few productions really score successes. He instanced the scene in Ia Tosca where the death of Scarpia forms one of the great scenes. This, on the stage, requires twenty minutes. On the screen it would be impossible to hold interest to one phase of action for that length of time, even with cut-backs to Tosca's lover being tortured in an adjoining chamber. On the stage the scene compels attention. On the screen it must not only be briefed, but it must be handled in an entirely different manner.

Another serious handicap he finds in the efforts of the manufacturers to turn out a product that shall be a universal seller. The same film, he points out, is expected to please widely diversified audiences in widely separated parts of the world, and it is impossible to obtain a sufficient number of stories possessing this universal appeal. As a result there are few good stories of any type because of the efforts of the producers to suit the entire world with a single offering. He feels that good stories, the best development of the art, will not be possible until such a time as a story is produced upon its merits as a story and left to find its clientele. The present condition does not admit of choice of selection. On the dramatic stage the amusement seeker selects the type of house catering to his immediate demand. In photoplay the same theater ranges from crude burlesque to tragedy without plan or reason.

Departing from his printed opinions, he now believes that music should not be permitted to become obtrusive. As Joan the Woman, for example, the playing of the Marsellaise detracted from the attention given the drama. Instead of heightening the effect, as intended, it creates an entirely different effect, foreign to the nature of the play and an emotion that is, at this moment, stronger than the story of Joan. Music should be used to stir the emotion faintly, producing, as it were, a vibration upon which the sentiment of the play can build. The orchestra, preferably of strings, should scarcely be sensed, if the story on the screen is to be given its proper and full opportunity.

Perhaps Mr. Lindsay's most striking remark was his explanation of the greater favor the pictures find with the younger generation. No person over thirty-five, he asserts, can take the same interest in photoplay as the younger generation because photoplay is a new language. He has some small relatives in China—tots of six and eight—who speak Chinese as fluently as English because they were born in that country and absorbed the language. In precisely the same way photoplay is a new language of art expression, and like all innovations is more readily accepted by those whose minds have not become too firmly committed to old ideals. The younger generation, educated instinctively to photoplay, more readily accept it as the art it is than those to whom it is merely a radical departure from sound, established ideas, in which, because of its newness, there can be no great good. The argument is sound and well founded.

Photoplay, Mr. Lindsay feels, is a sentence of which the scenes are words, and the placement and handling of the scenes; in other terms, the choice of words and their arrangement of these words determine the clarity and fluency of the sentence. Each scene should be a complete entity, a perfect character, though composed perhaps of many parts, as the Chinese character, though composed of many lines, represents a single word or thought. But the language spoken must be the language of the picture and not the language of the spoken drama. Photoplay, to gain its fullest expression, must be considered an art of itself and not as a graft upon an older plant. It is not a hybrid, but a new entity, and until photoplay is recognized as an art distinct from the drama of the stage and treated as such photoplay will be no more than badly done drama. Just what the outworking will be he does not presume to say, but he feels, as do all other students of photoplay, that photoplay at present is seriously handicapped by being too much in the hands of those who gained their experience in the drama rather than in the studio and who seek to make photoplay with the drama technique.

Nine Year's Service from One Exchange

That's the Record Held by Sam Harding of Omaha, About to Build Big House in Kansas City.

SAM HARDING, of the Princess theater, of Omaha, Neb., was a caller at the World office last week. Mr. Harding, who is planning to erect a 1,500-seat house in Kansas City, uncovered in the course of his conversation a fact which would seem to give him claim to a record. The Princess has been doing business nine years. In all that time its service has come out of one exchange, the Laemmle Film Service. This fine example of continuity in close business relations ought to furnish matter for mutual congratulation. It has the ring of a square deal all around.

The Princess is a 500-seat house in the downtown district of the Nebraskan city. The doors are opened at 9:30 in the morning. The program is Universal, and averages five first-run reels daily. Asked as to whether he used features, Mr. Harding said on Fridays he runs Red Feathers.

"I don't use outside features," Mr. Harding continued, "because my people do not want long subjects. Do I have my every-day standbys? Well, I think there must be three or four hundred persons who come to the Princess every day. I am acquainted with practically all of these, and I keep in touch with them and know what they like. Around noon-time there are many employ an hour and a quarter of their hour and a half lunch time to look over the show. Afternoons I have many women shoppers. Situated as I am you can see a daily change is necessary. Of course, the kind of program and the length of subject is a problem for the individual exhibitor. My people are strong for the two and three reels."

"Why can't the manufacturers give us more of the singles, doubles and triples such as we used to have? I mean the subjects now being expanded into five reels. Naturally I judge from my own experience. I know if my people didn't like short subjects I would not be doing the big business I am doing."

Mr. Harding said his Kansas City house will be at Eleventh and Main streets, and that the new structure will be first-class in every respect. Architects already are at work on the plans and operations will be begun in the spring, on the expiration of the lease on a building now on the plot. He expects to show his first picture late in the fall.

Abrams Pays Respects to Open Booking

Paramount President Declares He Knows Both Ends of Controversy and Says the Program's the Thing.

THIS is a story it has taken five years to write. The question I am going to present is the most important one that has ever arisen in the motion picture industry. It is more important than censorship, more important than tax legislation, more important than all the other film problems of the day combined. The question of the relative values of the open booking and program system is going to be the last question answered in the film business. And upon the answer to this question depends whether or not you, the exhibitor, remain in business!

The exhibitor must make his own answer to the question. The producer and the distributor cannot solve the problem for him. It is up to the exhibitor to decide whether or not he wishes to preserve his business, and the decision rests upon him alone.

As a matter of fact, the producer, the big producer, doesn't care which way he decides. The big distributor doesn't care which way he decides. For it is not only as easy, but even easier, for a well organized and well equipped producing force to create features on the open booking policy as it is to do so on the regular program policy, and it is just as easy for the well-managed exchange to distribute features on the open-booking policy as on the "program" policy. But the difference to the exhibitor is the difference between remaining in business and being driven out of it.

I know it is one thing to make a statement and another thing to prove it. But I am going to prove it. I am going to give you a series of illustrations, based not upon imagination, not upon belief, but upon fact and actuality, to indicate that the open booking policy, if advanced to its logical conclusion, will drive all but the strongest exhibitors into some other business. It is more than the handwriting on the wall—it is the handwriting in the bank book.

I am going to be very frank in my expression of the fallacies and undependability of the open booking policy. Personally, I have been on both sides of the fence. I have maintained an open-booking exchange in Boston, and from the inception of Paramount Pictures I have had the New England exchanges of the program. I was anxious to see, by direct contrast, how the open-booking policy worked out, and therefore opened an office to distribute films on this basis in Boston. I was compelled to compete in the very first place with every other unaffiliated exchange for the releases of the open-booking producers, who cared nothing about the service to the exhibitor or the lasting value of his business, but whose first and last thought was to get the biggest prices possible for each individual subject.

Having secured a particular film on this competitive basis, paying the producer not what the subject was worth, but what my competitors compelled me to pay for it, I naturally got everything I could from the exhibitor, regardless of its value to him. He had to pay me an exaggerated price based upon the original inflated price that I had paid to the producer. My only concern in the transaction was to get the biggest possible price, with no thought of continuing relations with that exhibitor.

Contrast this with the attitude I have taken in the Paramount Boston office. In each case I would not only not ask for but actually would not accept a price for service which negated the possibility of the exhibitor's making money for himself and so continuing to book the entire program. It is not a philanthropic inclination that prompted this course. It was merely good business. Unless the exhibitor makes money with them, I cannot sell him 104 pictures a year. In the other case, I have to sell the second open-booking subject all over again, and so don't care how much more I get for the first one above its actual value. I have seen both plans in operation. I know!

"THE BARRIER" OPENS AT BROADWAY.

The Rex Beach Pictures Company's sensational picture, "The Barrier," from Rex Beach's famous novel of the same name, opened an engagement at the Broadway Theater, Sunday, February 25th, following the run of "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea." "The Barrier" was given an enthusiastic reception, as was also Mr. Beach, who was present at the first showing. The instant popularity of this drama with the audience bore out the assertions of the critics who attended the private showing in the Broadway Theater a month ago.

Special music for "The Barrier" was composed by Fred O. Hanks and Sol Levy and was played by an augmented orchestra. The music, following throughout the action of the drama, is, in effect, an opera.

King Goes to South America

Will Locate in Buenos Aires and Will Exploit Williamson's Submarine Productions.

BRAVING the dangers of German U-boat and commerce raiders, which have been so active in Southern Atlantic waters recently, Stephen T. King, well-known in motion picture and theatrical circles, sailed for South America last week on the S. S. Vassari, where he will act as special representative for the Williamson Brothers and the Submarine Film Corporation in connection with the recently announced plans of this progressive concern.

Stephen T. King.

Unusual interest was attached to the departure of Mr. King, due to the fact that the big Lamport & Holt liner was the first passenger ship to steam from an American port after the announcement of this country's break with Germany. News of the termination of diplomatic relations reached the Vassari's officials and passengers just about an hour before that boat was scheduled to sail. Upon receiving the news many of those who had booked passage promptly canceled their reservations, but the boat left its dock promptly on time and news of its safe arrival is being anxiously awaited by Mr. King's many friends in the trade.

Mr. King is a well-known club man and has gained prominence through his social activities. These qualifications combined with his unusual diplomatic ability and a splendid reputation for honesty of purpose and square dealing caused the Williamson Brothers to select Mr. King as their representative in the important Latin-American field when they arrived at their decision to establish personal representatives throughout the principal foreign countries.

Mr. King will locate in Buenos Aires at the Hotel Cecil. Later he expects to make an extended tour of all the Latin-American countries.

DORIS PAWN RETURNS TO FOX.

William Fox announces this week the return of Doris Pawn to his photoplay forces on the Pacific Coast. Miss Pawn co-starred with Mr. Walsh in "Blue Blood and Red," his first important film production. She will appear opposite the athletic Fox luminary in his forthcoming pictures. She is already at work under the direction of Otis Turner, who is making the Walsh subject—the latter's ninth feature. Miss Pawn got into filmdom by chance some time ago. She simply proved to Wilfred Lucas, director of Universal's "The Trey o' Hearts," that she could act as well as she could look.

The other members of Mr. Walsh's supporting cast are players of unusual excellence. The last is one of the strongest which has graced any program screen drama of the year. It includes Charles Clary, Herschel Mayall, Rosita Marstini and Willard Louis. These four have just finished work with Frank Lloyd, director of "A Tale of Two Cities," the stupendous production with William Farnum in a dual role.

HUGO BALLIN JOINS GOLDWYN.

Hugo Ballin, one of the world's greatest mural decorators and whose murals in the executive chamber of the Wisconsin Capitol rank as one of America's notable art achievements, is the latest celebrity to be called into service by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Ballin already is actively at work in the Goldwyn studios in Fort Lee with Arthur Hopkins and the Goldwyn directors designing the sets for the two productions now under way. This is the first time in the history of the motion picture industry that a man of his artistic achievements has become a regular factor in production.

"The Empress," Five-reel Gold Rooster Screendrama Featuring Holbrook Blinn and Doris Kenyon, and "Red Night," Eighth Installment of "Patria," Starring Mrs. Vernon Castle.

"The Empress."

THE title of "The Empress" is given this five-reel Pathe Gold Rooster photoplay, produced by Popular Plays and Players, because the leading female role, an artist's model, is painted as the wife of Napoleon. The model's name is Nedra and she is in love with the artist until he attempts to take advantage of her when she goes on a vacation with him and stops at a country inn. Later on, she meets a wealthy young chap, who falls in love with her and makes her his wife. They are living happily together when the landlord of the country inn turns up and proceeds to blackmail Nedra. He has a snap shot of the artist and the former model, which, apparently, is compromising. In place of telling her husband the truth, Nedra allows herself to be drawn into a series of compromising positions, and narrowly escapes losing her husband's confidence in her.

"The Empress" is not remarkable from any point of view. None of the characters are out of the ordinary and their actions do not awaken that deep interest which is the result of strong and well-balanced situations. To offset this, the picture is acted by an excellent cast. Holbrook Blinn uses his mastery of his profession to the advantage of the picture, and Doris Kenyon is attractive and dramatically effective as the model. William Morse and Lyne Donaldson are next in importance and worth.

"Red Night."

The eighth episode of "Patria" sees the end of the strike at the Channing munition plant when Patria confronts the men and agrees to their terms, after making a plea to their patriotism. The rest of the number shows a successful attempt on the part of Huroki to destroy a large amount of ammunition awaiting shipment on the docks at Black Tom. The great fire which actually took place at this point in the harbor of New York, is worked into the picture in a skillful manner, and there is a thrill for nearly every foot of film. Donald Parr and Patria are trapped on a vessel while trying to prevent the explosion and are forced to climb one of the masts. As it takes fire and falls over into the water, they are rescued by a police boat.

Mrs. Vernon Castle, Milton Sills and Warner Oland are kept on the jump during this last reel of the eighth instalment.

"The Web of Desire"

Fairly Interesting Five-reel Peerless Photoplay on Familiar Subject Starring Ethel Clayton—Released by World Film Corporation.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE husband that becomes absorbed in money making and leaves his wife to her own pursuits, is the leading male character in "The Web of Desire," a five-reel Peerless photoplay released by the World Film Corporation. This familiar situation is handled with a fair show of dramatic skill, the usual false friend appearing at the opportune moment and doing his best to have the young wife elope with him. In this case, the woman retracts before it is too late, but not before her husband's suspicions are aroused, and a tragedy is barely averted.

While most of the material employed by the author is without novelty, it has the advantage of being told in dramatic form, and there is sufficient variety of incident to prevent the scenes from dragging. The story is credited to E. Lloyd Sheldon and was directed by Emile Chautard.

Ethel Clayton appears as the wife of the young millionaire. As Grace Miller she is not called upon to exhibit any great depths of emotion. The character belongs to the type of shallow trusting women that are easily influenced either for good or evil, and the drifting apart of the husband and wife is the fault of both. Miss Clayton indicates all this with little apparent efforts and gives her usual conscientious performance before the screen.

Rockcliffe Fellowes is earnest and capable as John Miller, the millionaire, and Richard Turner makes Stuart Mordant an unconventional villain. Edward M. Kimball, William Williams, Doris Field and Madge Evans meet the requirements of their several roles. Lucien Tainguy was the photographer. The production, which runs largely to interiors, is of good quality.

"The Tiger Woman"

Theda Bara in Five-Reel Fox Production Which Contains the Champion Vampire of the Season.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A LIST of the crimes committed by the Princess Petrovitch in "The Tiger Woman," the five-reel Fox production in which Theda Bara assumes the role of the champion vampire of the season, reads like the entries for a day on a particularly busy police station blotter. The delightful heroine of this carnival of crime is convicted, on the testimony of the playwright who reveals the story of her life, of treachery, greed, thievery, murder, and adultery on several counts. The extent of the lady's unrevealed moral fractures stagger the imagination, and the recital of her known crimes is as uplifting as the pamphlets describing the career of the guilty wretch about to be hung, and hawked among the crowd that made holiday in Merry England when an execution took place on Tyburn Hill.

In one respect, the picture calls for high commendation; it makes no compromise with vice. The Russian siren is given no touch of softness or womanly feeling, but is shown in all her sordidness and avid love of crime. Not one extenuating circumstance is put forth in her behalf, and she dies as she has lived—utterly devoid of human instincts.

The contemplation of such a mental monstrosity has been known to afford much entertainment to many rational beings that patronize the regular theaters and the moving picture houses. The acting of Miss Theda Bara and her supporting company and the production of the picture, under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards, bring out every point of "The Tiger Woman" at its real value. The atmosphere and surroundings of the different locations in Russia, Monte Carlo and New York are accurately reproduced, and the star's performance of the Princess Petrovitch never departs from the course laid out for her by James W. Adams, the author of the story. The actress, whose embodiment of the street singer in Hugo's "Hunchback of Notre Dame" reveals such excellent ability to depict the highest promptings of a woman's nature, has also earned wide repute for her vampire roles. The Princess Petrovitch is her most consistent achievement in this particular line.

The long list of characters is skillfully cast. Following Miss Bara, Glenn White, Mary Martin, John Dillon, Louis Dean, Emil De Varney, Herbert Keys, Edwin Holt, Florence Martin, Kate Blanke and "Kittens" Reichert have the more important parts. Adrian Johnson has put the scenario together with clear understanding of its needs.

"Intrigue"

Five-Reel Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Centers Around Little Grand Duke Played by Master Bobby Connelly.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE is no denying the fact that the most entertaining feature to "Intrigue," a five-reel Blue Ribbon Vitagraph, is the acting of Master Bobby Connelly as the boy Grand Duke of the Duchy of Bonaluria. A second cousin to the mythical rulers that are central figures in so many of the George Barr McCutcheon romances, this young gentleman is befriended by a pretty American girl, when the bad men of his country are plotting to cut short his reign. There is the usual love story in which nobility and American brain, brawn and beauty are concerned, but the Princess is forced to behold the daughter of Uncle Sam walk off with the George M. Cohan hero.

Political intrigue abounds throughout the story, and there is a lively fight in the last reel between the young American and several followers of the traitor Prince Henri. The scenes that will leave the pleasantest memories, however, are those in which Bobby Connelly, in the person of the little Duke, shows the human side of a boy ruler. One particularly striking incident is when the American girl walks the length of the throne room and receives the decoration bestowed upon her by the little Duke for saving his life. The ceremony is performed according to court etiquette; then both upset propriety by hugging and kissing each other as Peggy Dare responds to her pity for the lonely little boy. This scene and all the others that fall to him are played with a naturalness and charm that puts Bobby into the stellar class.

The picture is well screened, and Peggy Hyland, Marc MacDermott, Templer Saxe and Brinsley Shaw are prominent in a cast that is without any weak spots.

"On Record"

Mae Murray's Acting Makes Strong Appeal to the Heart as the Piteous Heroine of a Melodrama With a Telling Situation.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

AS a reviewer I can heartily commend this five-reel McKay-Paramount picture, "On Record," to any exhibitor looking for a film with emotional effectiveness above the ordinary. Mae Murray gets the situation over the spectator's feelings with a sincerity and an intelligence pleasing to witness. A particularly good situation is here presented and has been written by John B. Climer and Paul West and prepared for the screen by George Proctor with the kind of continuity that makes you forget the time but remember the number of reels due to your anxiety for the piteous heroine's fate with due thanks to the leading woman's playing. The direction is able, but has one or two blemishes—the costume decidedly out of character worn by the heroine at the dance given by her fiancé's mother is one, and the spectator will also notice with a touch of irritation an imitation of Griffith mannerism—not effective even in his work—of making quick, twinkle-like gestures. The last act is the best of all and is a mighty fine piece of work on the part of all concerned. The picture is markedly better than the average. Robert Leonard is the director.

"On Record," refers to the heroine's having got her name and finger prints on the books of the night court. The incident was necessary to construct the big situation and was accomplished in a sufficiently probable way, though it did, for a time, lessen the heroine as a heroine, a dangerous thing to do, say what you will, in a heroic melodrama. In the opening scenes she aided an aviator (Tom Forman) who, trying out a new invention, comes tumbling down out of the sky almost at her feet. She comes to the city for a job as stenographer and is starving when an advertisement brings her to apply for a position as private secretary at the home of the aviator's mother and is taken. The aviator sends her to the library to get some notes—she is starving. There she consents to let a strange man take her to dinner and it is in trying to get the dinner that she is "taken up" and gets a conviction and is Bertillonized, but let off. Later the man becomes the villain and tries to defraud the aviator who is now engaged to Mae. This situation is freshly developed.

"Passion"

In Third of "The Seven Deadly Sins" McClure Pictures Presents Shirley Mason as Girl of Unfortunate Attachment.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN THE earlier stages of the third number of "The Seven Deadly Sins," there are evidences of skill in the presentation of the various scenes. It opens with rapid and interesting action. Later on, however, as the story develops we are conscious that the third deadly sin "Passion" is not as strongly presented as it might have been. The story is merely that of a young woman who through indiscriminate actions gets her name in the papers, and is taken advantage of in a financial way by the executors of her father's will, who on the strength of stipulations of said will discontinue her income. The girl forced to go out in the world to earn a livelihood falls in with a champion wrestler for whom she forms a strong attachment, finding out later after having close associations with the man that he is married. Her former lover in an attempt to rescue her from him is almost killed in a fight, but not until her landlady takes pity on her and tells her of the despicable character of the wrestler does she decide to return to her old home, and finally to the arms of her lover.

Shirley Mason is pleasing in the role of the girl; her work is natural and the opportunities given her are made the most of. In the supporting cast are George Le Guere, Clifford Bruce, Bigelow Cooper, Ruby Hoffman, Mabel Strickland, Edith Wright, Edmund Dalby and Harry Gripp.

What is evidently intended to be one of the features of the picture is a barefoot dance by seven or eight lightly clad maidens. This dance is not strictly professional in style, but is of better quality than some others that we have seen exhibited on the screen. The surf scenes that serve as a background are effective.

"The Moral Code"

Five-Reel Problem Photoplay Produced by Erboggraph for Art Dramas—Anna Q. Nilsson and Walter Hitchcock Featured.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

THE latest Art Dramas release, "The Moral Code," a five-reel drama produced by the Erboggraph Company, is a problem photoplay and, as such, is limited in its appeal. There are touches in the film, too, that, while handled with the utmost delicacy, make it suitable for the consumption of only adult minds. This must not be taken to mean that there is anything offensive in the picture. It is simply that some of the ideas that are "gotten over" with a deft hand are not ideas that can be harmlessly assimilated by immature minds. The production neither attacks nor champions the accepted moral code as that code relates to the marriage bond; but rather "discusses" the moral code relating to the bonds of a particular marriage for honor that becomes irksome when love enters the controversy.

The story was written by Ashley Miller, who also directed the production, and "The Moral Code" is proof that Mr. Miller is a better director than he is an author; for Mr. Miller, the author, has conceived a story that could easily have been told in three reels, while Mr. Miller, the director, has prolonged the footage to five reels. The story, while having several commendable points and embracing several dramatic situations, relies too much on plausibility-stretching coincidence.

The cast is a capable one. Anna Q. Nilsson and Walter Hitchcock carry the leading roles in a manner that leaves little to be desired. Florence Hamilton and Richard Barthelmess furnish adequate support.

The story tells on the screen of a man of high ideals who, to save the family name, marries the girl his scapegrace young brother has ruined. Later he meets a girl with whom he falls in love. His wife goes back to her old ways and companions. The scapegrace brother returns and is about to go away with his brother's wife when confronted by the brother and the girl. The brother sends the young man and the wife away, informing them that "everything will be taken care of legally."

Triangle Program

"Betsy's Burglar," Five-reel Fine Arts with Constance Talmadge as "Betsy," and "Back of the Man," Five-reel Ince-Kay Bee with Dorothy Dalton.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

BETSY'S BURGLAR" is in some respect one of the best of the comedy melodramas written by Frank E. Woods.

The "melo" part is not so much of a concession to a supposed demand for that sort of stuff, and the comedy fits in nicely, a better adjustment than has hitherto been shown with no loss of the delightful Woods sense of humor. The author opens up with a most realistic view of country town boarding house life—Mr. Woods is nothing if not realistic in his unvarnished vein of humor, in which the intimate life of an entire household is most amusingly and convincingly portrayed. There is no strained attempt to be funny—the honest truth serves that purpose. As we come to know the people of the household we begin to feel an air of mystery in what is going on, and we are convinced the conventional thing is going to be done when a handsome young man secures a room next to an old couple who have a strong box and jewels in their trunk. We are sure of his villainy when he conspires with the enamoured Betsy, daughter of the landlady, to get wax impressions of the strong box keys.

Woods completely disregards that worn-out theatrical tradition that the audience must not be deceived, for he deceives us woefully. We are all wrong. He deliberately lures us into the expected and loses us there. We flounder about until a sudden tragedy, like a bolt from the blue, jars us into realization that we have been on the wrong track. The romantic villain is not one, but a romantic hero, more interesting that we have been given the false view usually taken in real life. Miss Talmadge is improving in her work, acquiring a deeper conception of character, and her support is uniformly good throughout. The story is original, entertaining and will afford variety to any program.

"Back of the Man."

"Back of the Man," though perfectly typed and handled with a skill far above the average, with a beauty and charm of treatment that is enough to cause heartache among writers whose stories fall to mediocre producers, drops from a most promising start to a development so unsatisfactory that the author must be called to account. With a splendid theme, one which is almost sure to win friends in a mixed audience, there is carefully depicted the character of a noble and intelligent woman, a role finely interpreted by Dorothy Dalton. She is the only serious worker among a large number employed by a great insurance company, and she not only performs her own duties with patient courage, but she inspires one of the clerks, impersonated in flawless style by Charles Ray. She is his superior in every respect, but she throws all opportunity to him, suggests his advancement to the President and aids him at every turn of his advancing career. He announces that he loves her and asks her to marry him. She refuses for no convincing reason and the sympathy that has been won for her is badly strained.

It is possible for this young man to marry a girl lacking in every fine quality a wife should have, the President's daughter, so weak and immoral that a union with her means a life of misery for her husband. There is not the slightest reason why the rising young business man should be tied to such a misfit—his rise is not based upon pull—but it is actually urged by the girl whose devotion has made his advancement possible to the extent that she pretends to be already engaged. This highly intelligent girl, who is brainy enough to impress an entire board of directors through the man she loves, is now depicted as lacking in ordinary common sense. All interest in her, and in the story, fades at once. The author lacks the right perspective, that of mature experience, or he would not destroy that jewel of characterization, consistency. The structure of the story is thus far below its brilliant treatment.

tainment of the same character as did the series that preceded "The American Girl." The Western backgrounds were selected with a fine eye to atmosphere.

Marin Sais, Frank Jonasson and Edward Hearn are the leading players. The story tells of a villainous character's efforts to dupe the Kings into buying a mine. King's young superintendent is trapped in the mine by the villain. Madge King and her father give battle to the villain and his two followers. The superintendent is rescued by Madge just a moment before the powder which was to kill him blows up the mine. The villain is made prisoner. The picture was directed by James W. Horne, who has given it many realistic touches.

"The Mirror of Fear."

It is the story by Robert Welles Ritchie more than the stunts of George Larkin that make this reel one of the best of the "Grant, Police Reporter," series. The reporter this time unearths a scheme whereby a butler and cook hope to make a wealthy old soldier will his money to them. Their scheme is to project on a door the scenes that took place many years ago when the soldier killed a comrade. This is done by means of a concealed projection machine. The story is original and could have been done in greater length than one reel with good result. As a consequence this reel is one of fast-moving story. George Larkin's stunt this time is to pursue the butler, who is fleeing in an automobile, on a bicycle. The reporter leaps into the automobile. The two fight. The auto stops in the path of a train. The reporter leaps just in time. The car is wrecked, killing the butler. Ollie Kirkby and Director Robert Ellis are also in the cast.

"America Is Ready"

M-C Film Company Presents Five Reels of Film Showing All Branches of Uncle Sam's Defenders.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THIS picture, "America Is Ready," was obtained from the Government authorities at Washington and in it are pictured all the branches of the military and naval service. The scenes are, of course, full of stir and action, such as mines hurling the earth high in the air or sea mines making their tremendous fountains over the waters.

It shows how rookies are trained and among these scenes are a few glimpses of Plattsburgh, the target range and drill ground. It shows many intimate things about the soldier's life, like the making of his bread. There are pictures of the cavalry, field artillery, the charging and firing of the great coast defense guns and mortars, rapid fire guns in action, making the dust fly far off across the prairie where the shots are hitting, and many other things of much interest at this time.

Supplementing the military picture there are some excellent views of our splendid ships and the jackies who man them. We see, for instance, a party of white-clad sailors leaving the ships in small boats with portable guns to effect a landing under fire while the battle cruisers stand off shore and make black clouds of smoke roll out from their sides, while we see flash after flash of the guns. There are also intimate glimpses of life afloat such as the diversions of the sailors and the coal-ing and provisioning of ships. There is also a section devoted to the marine corps, a magnificent body of men, the elite of the National forces. Portrait views of Admiral Mayo, of General Funston, of President Wilson are included with pictures of Lincoln and Washington, introduced with a stanza of "The Star Spangled Banner" in a way that can be worked up by an orchestra to much effect. The M-C Film Company of 729 Seventh avenue, New York City, are exploiting it.

"The Price She Paid"

Clara Kimball Young in Selznick Production of Seven-reel Photoplay Made from the Novel by David Graham Phillips—Screen Version Finely Mounted, but Lacks Action.

Reviewed by Edward Weltzel.

IT IS extremely doubtful that when David Graham Phillips wrote "The Price She Paid," a seven-reel version of which has been produced by Louis J. Selznick with Clara Kimball Young as the heroine, the novelist had any thought of its being turned into a moving picture. Mr. Phillips was not a dramatist, and cared a great deal more for character development than for dramatic situations. The merely theatrical did not appeal to him at all. His plots were always strong in motive, but told in such fashion that there was always ample time for the moral lesson to penetrate the dullest brain. "The Price She Paid" is a striking example of this fact. Although the experiences of Mildred Gower before she finds happiness with Donald Keith involve her with two other men, one of whom she marries and deserts, the incidents in this formative period of her life have little dramatic worth, as the term is understood by the playwright. Complications are not lacking; but a determination on the part of all concerned not "to make scenes" when they can possibly be avoided, prevents those outbursts of feeling that are so entertaining to the onlooker. Whatever may be said in favor of self-control in real life, it is not the thing that brings people to the playhouse; like the man at the prize fight, they want plenty of action and at least one "knockout."

In its present form "The Price She Paid" is excellent narrative fiction—not screen drama. As a production it takes high rank. The settings could hardly be improved upon, and the acting of Clara Kimball Young and her supporting company is quite as commendable. As Mildred Gower the star fits the character in every way, and displays numberless triumphs of the newest fashion in gowns. Louise Beaudet, Cecil Fletcher, Charles Bowser, Snitz Edwards, Alan Hale and David Powell have congenial roles and play them with their customary finished method. Charles Giblyn was the director.

There is the murder of a negro by a young Southern aristocrat because of an assault on his sister; there is his cowardly denial and shifting of the blame on another, and the final cleaning up of the matter in genuine moving picture style, with pretense of having administered poisoned wine to extract a confession from the murderer. This last point we might add, while perfectly possible, does not appeal in a convincing way.

"The Promise," Five-reel Drama Featuring Harold Lockwood and May Allison, and "The Secret of Eve," Five-Reel Drama Starring Mme. Petrova.

"The Promise."

THE GENUS "fan" ought to be well-pleased with "The Promise," a five-reel drama of the outdoors, in which Harold Lockwood and May Allison are the featured players, and which was produced by the Yorke Film Corporation for release by Metro. While the production comes under the general classification of drama, it may perhaps be better described as a visualized novel of the same general description as those stories that are commonly considered light reading. In that same sense "The Promise" is light entertainment—there are no deep problems to solve, and the viewer is held interested without having to use his mind overmuch. The story unfolds itself smoothly on the screen despite a tendency toward over-titling. While there is no great originality to the story by James B. Hendryx, the screen treatment given it has lent an added interest. The story appeared in the All-Story Weekly, and was scenarioized by Richard V. Spencer.

The exteriors in the production are worthy of special note. All of them are good and many are excellent. Especially commendable are those scenes showing the lumber camps, log drives, the dynamiting of a log-jam, and the scenes following a train wreck at night. All through the production the backgrounds are consistently true to the story.

Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison are pleasing in their portrayals of the leading parts—the former as a wealthy youth who makes good in a lumber camp in the West, and the latter as the society girl he leaves behind him. Lester Cuneo is a capable villain. Others in the cast are Paul Willis, Lillian Hayward, George Fisher, W. H. Bainbridge, Leota Lorraine, John Stepping and T. H. Gibson-Gowland.

Fred J. Balshofer directed the production. Photography, which is uniformly excellent, was done by Tony Gaudio.

"The Secret of Eve."

Metro's ordinarily high average will drop a few degrees through the release of "The Secret of Eve," a five-reel drama in which Mme. Petrova is starred, and which was produced by Popular Plays and Players. Capable as are the shoulders of Mme. Petrova, they cannot lift this picture out of the ordinary class, and the only thing that will get it by is the fact that it is a Petrova picture. The production as a whole is unconvincing. Incidents that are supposed to make a strong bid for the sympathies of the viewer are wishy-washy, and a gen-on the nerves of both officers and soldiers. The threat of revolution is constantly in the air, and a good measure of suspense has been transferred to the screen, though similarity to former productions interferes to an extent with this.

Claire McDowell plays the double role of Indore, a native woman, who secretly marries an English officer, and her daughter, Agatha. The handling of each of these parts is appealing, and some good double-exposure scenes are shown. There is some confusion in trying to keep mother and daughter separate in the mind of the observer, but this clears up satisfactorily.

The mother, after the birth of her daughter, is thrown into the Prince's harem. The daughter is reared in England, and returns to India later. Here she is abducted by the Prince and thrust into the harem where her mother still remains. The latter saves the daughter by stabbing her persecutor, and both escape in a caravan. Later the hero saves Agatha from death on a funeral pyre.

The oriental sets employed in this production have been used in former offerings, but there is a pleasing effect obtained upon the whole. The native uprising, the caravans crossing the desert, the views of the walled city, and the funeral pyre are among the larger scenic features. The action is smooth and satisfactory.

In the cast, in addition to Miss McDowell, are L. C. Shumway, Jack Conolly, Mark Fenton, Tommie Dale, Alfred Allen, Francis MacDonald and Lena Baskette.

"My Fighting Gentleman"

Pleasant Story of Colonial Days Presented in Six-Part Production for the Mutual Program.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE story of "My Fighting Gentleman" is attributed to Nell Shipman, while the scenario was constructed by Doris Schroeder. In the picture William Russell plays the heroic role of the son of a house divided, his mother being a Northerner and his father a Southerner; and pretty Francella Billington, as his sweetheart, arrayed in dainty colonial gowns and pantalettes, is all that the production would require as a charming Southern maid.

"My Fighting Gentleman" is one of the best releases that the Mutual Film Corporation has released in some time. It was made by Frank Powell; and while we are conscious at times of a little staginess on the part of certain of the players who seem to have clung to the older traditions of dramatic action, it is felt that Director Powell has shown considerable artistic skill in producing one of the nicest, cleanest stories that the screen has presented.

The story, which has more to do with the romantic side of life in colonial days than with any military spectacle, centers about the career of the son of a Southern colonel, whose sympathies leaned toward the North. The war over, and his father killed in battle, he is in time ostracized by neighbors, friends and sweethearts. The carpet-bagger from the north is introduced into the story with good effect, and with the hero of the story nominated for senator, the action of the play is kept going at a lively pace. The incidents of the story in eral poverty of real interest is accentuated by none too good editing of the film. Mme. Petrova is not seen at her best in this picture. Even the photography is not up to Metro standard.

The picture opens with allegorical scenes in the Garden of Eden, and illustrates the manner of the fall of Adam and Eve. Then the picture shifts to a gypsy camp. A gypsy mother leaves her girl-baby on a doorstep. The baby is brought up by Quakers. Her name is Eve. When Eve grows to womanhood she seeks life. She marries a wealthy man, but is soon disillusioned. Later she is accused by her husband of carrying on a love affair with a young philanthropist, whose chief efforts are directed against child-labor. Eve leaves her husband. She becomes poverty-stricken, and is about to commit suicide when she saves a blind girl from falling into a lake. The girl is one who has been blinded while working in Eve's husband's factory. Eve goes to the blind children's institute. While there her husband is murdered by the father of the little blind girl. Eve is found at the institute by the young philanthropist. She learns that the secret of true happiness lies in serving the blind children.

Supporting Mme. Petrova are Arthur Hoops, William Hinkley, Edward Roseman, Laurie Mackin, Florence Moore and George Morrell.

The story was written by Aaron Hoffman and scenarioized by Wallace C. Clifton. Perry Vekroff directed.

"Pride and the Devil"

Dramatic But Unpleasant Theme in Rive-Reel Art Dramas Photoplay Starring Alma Hanlon.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

FORTUNATELY for the good of humanity, one poor little woman is seldom surrounded by such a collection of out and out "rotters" as the heroine of "Pride and the Devil," the five-reel Art Dramas photoplay starring Alma Hanlon. Even the man she marries is but slightly better than the rest. He is supposed to love his wife devotedly, but he turns against her on purely circumstantial evidence, and does his best to blacken her name in open court. There is a reconciliation when he learns his mistake, but he is a mighty poor specimen of a man.

Engrossed in his profession, John Allen leaves his young wife to her own devices. She drifts into the lowest moral grade of New York's Bohemia and a divorce follows. Marrying again, she is attacked by an elderly blackguard who is killed by husband No. 2 when that gentleman rushes to his wife's defense. Husband No. 1 becomes the lawyer for husband No. 2 and clears him of the murder charge; he also does his best to brand his former wife with infamy. Husband No. 2 is removed and a happy ending follows.

As an exhibition of human weakness and folly, "Pride and the Devil" more than fills every requirement. From a technical point of view it is full of crude, but at times, effective melodrama. There is a preponderance of "fast life" scenes, and also an absence of worth-while characters and incidents, that are artistic errors. Lawrence McCloskey, the author, has gone out after the punch and has secured it by trying to typify human experience through the employment of practically individual cases. To the spectator that demands there shall be "something doing" all through a picture, and is without the inclination or ability to analyze the subject before him, "Pride and the Devil" will prove an entertaining photoplay. It is excellently played, by Alma Hanlon, Leo Delaney, Bigelow Cooper and Pamela Vale as the principals.

"Hell Morgan's Girl"

Five-part Bluebird Production Presenting Dorothy Phillips in Story of the "Barbary Coast."

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

TO THE adult seeking for entertainment in reviewing the most vicious type of life, that which was common to San Francisco's "Barbary Coast" in the years gone by, the Bluebird production, "Hell Morgan's Daughter," will exactly "fill the bill." We could not recommend it, however, for exhibition before refined audiences or before children; for while it may be a perfect typification of that hole of vice, the realism of its staging makes it the more unwholesome. Those looking for maudlin types will be attracted to the picture, for it abounds in them.

Dorothy Phillips plays the role of Lola, "Hell" Morgan's beautiful daughter. She is attractive in the part and plays with abandonment the character of a girl reared in the slums and once in a while revealing an inclination toward better things. This quality is not strongly developed, however. Lilyan Rosine, in the role of Olga, a former prostitute, also does good work. "T" by Joseph Girard, William Stowell, Alfred Allen and Lon Chaney.

The story centers about the career of a young artist who in the course of the story is carried in a drunken state into "Hell" Morgan's, is attacked by "Hell" Morgan because he throws a glass of whiskey at a painting of a nude female which Morgan has just purchased and hung above the bar. He is protected by Lola, who afterward falls in love with him, their romance culminating at the time of the San Francisco earthquake, which is presented in quite a spectacular style.

The production will be released March 5.

"The Fortunes of Fifi"

Five-Reel Screen Version of the Molly Elliot Seawell Story, With Marguerite Clark as a French Actress of Napoleon's Time—Produced by Famous Players.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE Molly Elliot Seawell story, "The Fortunes of Fifi," may consider itself fortunate when the Famous Players decided to have it turned into a photoplay for Marguerite Clark, and, to even up matters, Little Miss Clark is equally lucky in having secured so good a vehicle for the display of her talents as a star of the screen. The adventures of the little French actress of the time of Napoleon have the romantic charm which adds to the zest of life, even when we know things never turn out so beautifully—except in the imagination of some gifted author. As Miss Clark plays the part, we are willing to believe in it all: Fifi's meeting with Cartouche, the journey to Paris, her engagement at the Imperial theater, the unselfish love of the actor for Fifi, his presenting her with the lottery ticket that wins the capital prize, the use she makes of the money, and the method she employs to force Cartouche to understand that she can never be happy except as his wife.

"The Fortunes of Fifi" was written for entertaining purposes only, and fulfills its mission. The production by the Famous Players Company preserves the quaint air of eighteenth century Paris with praiseworthy fidelity. The change of scene is frequent, exteriors and interiors in different parts of the city being reproduced with extreme care. Fifi's lodgings, the garret of Cartouche, the stage of the Imperial theater, the throne room of the Emperor—all are shown with the same faithfulness, and through every scene flits Fifi. The charm given the character by Marguerite Clark is that of perfect innocence and the frankness of a child. To an actress with her complete command of the tricks of her trade the varying moods of the volatile little French comedienne are not difficult of expression; and, as most of Fifi's moods are joyous ones, the spectator is assured more than a fair share of smiles and laughs.

William Sorelle is always well within the picture as the soldier-actor Cartouche, and John Sainpolis, Yvonne Chevalier, Kate Lester, Jean Gauthier and J. K. Murray do their full share in making the production a success. The little white poodle that has an important part in the action of the story is a most knowing dog.

Much Publicity for Selig Picture

"Beware of Strangers" Is to Be Elaborately Exploited—Said to Be Fine Production.

THE Selig Company is planning to soon institute an elaborate selling and exploitation campaign for the latest of the Selig films, "Beware of Strangers." The drama, which is said to be an expose of the machinations of blackmailers, known as the International Syndicate, has been appearing to standing room only at the La Salle theater, Chicago, and the critics have universally praised the production.

It is asserted by the Selig company that the cast for "Beware of Strangers" is one of the most versatile, and the names certainly bear out that assertion, for they include such stars as Thomas Santschi, Bessie Eyton, Jack Richardson, Vivian Rich, Ed Coxen, Eugenie Besserer, Al. W. Filson and Fritz Brunette.

Gilson Willets, the well known author, wrote the plot, which is said to abound in thrilling situations and episodes. The story, in brief, has to do with the operations of a band of confidence men, wire tappers, lures, etc., who prey upon the unwary and mulct them out of millions of dollars.

A complete line of publicity matter is being prepared, including ones, threes, eights and twenty-sheet pictorial posters, lobby display photographs, window cards, slides, etc.

It is claimed by some students of the motion picture industry that "Beware of Strangers" promises to be not only among the most artistic of recent productions, but among the best commercially. It is said to carry a good story, good photography, an exceptional cast of players, and elaborate sets.

"PEARL OF THE ARMY" CLOSING SUCCESSFULLY.

With submarines and threatened war the chief topic of the day, Pathe's military-mystery serial, "Pearl of the Army," is drawing to a successful and especially interesting close, among the final scenes being the destruction of a submarine by a United States cutter and the explosion of mines in the Panama Canal. The fourteenth chapter is released March 4, and the fifteenth, March 11.

"Pearl of the Army" is Pearl White's greatest success to date, and the news that she is now at work on a new production of adventure entitled, "New York Nights," will be doubly welcome to exhibitors and public because of the "hit" her current serial is making throughout the country.

"Pearl of the Army" is, in the opinion of exhibitors and the trade in general, the best title ever given to a serial, combining as it does the main interest of the time and the name of the most popular serial star. This title has a direct box office value, as is proven by the way in which big theaters have played it up in "stunt" advertising and by the opinion of leading exhibitors.

SHIRLEY MASON IN EDISON FEATURE.

Shirley Mason, the young star of the McClure's "Seven Deadly Sins," has a leading part in "The Law of the North," a five-reel Edison production that will be released through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service on April 2. Miss Mason has become a favorite through her appearances in the series, and her many admirers will welcome the opportunity to see her in this Edison release. In a comparatively small cast, "The Law of the North" presents a number of players who are unusually well known. Besides Miss Mason, there are Sally Crute, Pat O'Malley, Richard Tucker and Charles Sutton, all of whom are familiar to motion picture patrons and all of whom are favorites wherever they are known.

"The Law of the North" is a story of the land that lies to the north of "fifty-three"—the land where the past is forgotten and where a man is judged by his present and his prospects for the future.

Universal Has New Series

Announces First Chapter for Release During Week of March 5th.

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company presents an interesting and well-balanced program for the week of March 5. Of particular interest is the first release of the new series, "The Perils of the Secret Service," founded upon the famous Yorke Norroy stories of George Bronson Howard. "The Peril of the Secret Service" will be released weekly for eight consecutive weeks. It is in no way a serial film production but a series of exciting adventure stories each separate but with the same cast. The title of the first of the series is "The Last Cigarette," a thrilling two-part drama showing the methods of the international spies and how their plans are frustrated by the vigilant members of our Secret Service. The entire series was written and directed by George Bronson Howard and the cast is headed by Kingsley Benedict, who is supported by Viola Smith, Jay Belasco, Clyde Benson and Malcolm Blevins. The scenarios are by Luther Reed. "The Last Cigarette" will appear on Friday, March 9.

The Red Feather five act feature, "The Gates of Doom," with Claire McDowell in the stellar role, is the strongest drama ever released under this brand. It is a vivid picturization of life in the British army in India, the land of intrigue. The story by J. Grubb Alexander is tense with dramatic situations and intermingled in the plot is a delightful love story. The direction is by Charles Swickard, noted for his fidelity to detail and the production is without a single flaw. In the cast supporting Miss McDowell are L. C. Shumway, Jack Connolly, Mark Fenton, Lena Baskette and other well known screen artists.

"The Gates of Doom" will appear Monday, March 5. On the same day the Nestor comedy "A Bundle of Trouble," with Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts will appear. This is a somewhat different type of film comedy replete with funny situations. It was written by Karl R. Coolidge and produced by Louis Chaudet.

The leading release on Tuesday, March 6, is the three part Gold Seal society drama, "Desperation." This is an exceptional picture adapted from the novel by E. Temple Thurston and was played at the Empire Theater as spoken drama by Ethel Barrymore a couple of seasons ago. It is seldom that such a tensely dramatic picture is offered on a regular program. The other release of this date is the Victor comedy "Good Morning, Nurse," produced by Allen Curtis from the scenario by Maie B. Harvey and the story by Capt. Leslie T. Peacocke with Eileen Sedgwick in the principal role.

For Wednesday, March 7, the L-Ko two part comedy "Fatty's Feature Fillum," starring Fatty Voss is the chief offering. This is a side splitting burlesque on the movie hero and is sure to provoke the coldest audience to outbursts of hearty laughter. It was directed by Fatty Voss under the direction of J. G. Blystone. The Big U Western drama, "A Soldier's Dream," and the regular issue of the Universal Animated Weekly are the other Wednesday releases.

Four reels will be offered Thursday, March 8. The Rex two act drama "The Amazing Adventure," a film version of the story by Eleanor M. Ingram in the Red Book put in scenario form by Harvey Gates and produced by Burton George with Charles Perley and Roberta Wilson in the leading roles is the chief offering of this date. Other releases are the Laemmle drama of the sea, "The Human Flame," with Robert Leonard and Margarita Fischer and the Big U drama "Good For Nothing Gallagher," featuring William V. Mong.

Besides the first of the Perils of the Secret Service the Victor comedy "The Beauty Doctor," with Billy Mason and the ninth issue of the Universal Screen Magazine full of bright and scintillating pictorial articles will appear on Friday, March 9.

That popular screen star Harry Carey is the lead in the two act Western drama, "The Drifter," released under the Bison brand on Saturday, March 10. The story was written by Edna Schley and the picture was produced by Fred Kelsey, Mr. Carey is supported by Claire Du Bray. The Joker comedy, "Wanta Make A Dollar?" with Gale Henry and William Franey will also appear on this date.

Sunday, March 11, three subjects will be offered, the Imp two act drama "The Man of Mystery," featuring King Baggot; the Powers split reel, "Mr. Fuller Pep—His Day of Rest," a comedy cartoon and the Dorsey educational The Mysterious City, and the Rex drama "It Makes A Difference," in which Dorothy Davenport and Irene Hunt have important roles.

"The Garden of Surprise," the eleventh episode of the Universal Super Serial, "The Purple Mask," starring Grace Cunard and Francis Ford will be released during the week.

SPECIAL MUSIC FOR "THE VICAR."

The incidental music will be a special feature of the Pathe-Thanhouser presentation of Frederick Warde in "The Vicar of Wakefield," at the Rialto the week of February 25. Mr. S. L. Rothapel, director of the Rialto, is giving the music his personal attention. There are so many colorful, atmospheric situations in "The Vicar" of Oliver Goldsmith—with its several little romances, its bits of comedy and its Primrose family disasters—that the incidental music becomes an important consideration.

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

General Film Company.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 15, 1917 (Selig).—Henry C. Fletcher, new Ambassador to Mexico, leaves Washington; French Liner Espagne arrives in New York carrying soldiers; U. S. destroyer Henly stands guard off Stapleton, Staten Island; Fred Fulton, prize fighter, in training, Goshen, N. Y.; Native troops leave Hoi Phong, French Indo China, for Northern France; Alligator pets at Palm Beach; U. S. Army recruiting station uses gasoline "horse"; Chicago; Count and Countess Von Bernstorff leave Washington for Berlin; Preparedness scenes, including cannon practice.

CANIMATED NOOZ PICTORIAL, NO. 25 (Essanay).—A split reel, embracing animated cartoon-comedy and scenic. In humorous cartoon-animation we see the latest shipment of treasure—a dozen eggs—is seen under heavy guard. Burlesques on the pets in vogue at Palm Beach are seen, as are also a baseball game in China and the safest way to find the keyhole. The scenic is made up of beautiful views photographed in the lake region of Western Canada.

THE MIRROR OF FEAR (Kalem).—An episode of the "Grant, Police Reporter" series. It is the story more that George Larkin's stunts that make this one of the best releases of the series. It tells of the efforts of two servants to get their master to sign a will in their favor. They try to weaken his mind by flashing on a door, in motion pictures, from a hidden projection machine, scenes representing those in which the old man, many years ago, shot and killed a man. The thrill comes when the reporter leaps from a bicycle into a speeding auto. The auto is wrecked by a train and one of the plotters is killed. Ollie Kirkby and Director Robert Ellis are also seen on the screen.

IN THE PATH OF PERIL (Kalem).—An episode of the "A Daughter of Daring" series. This series is the "Hazards of Helen" railroad series with a new title. Helen Gibson gets over an especial thrill when she chases a "wild" train on her motorcycle. She rides up on a flat car, whose rear truck has been torn off and stops the train in time to avert a collision. The train has been set running wild by a band of gypsies, who wanted revenge on the engineer. With Miss Gibson in the cast are L. T. Whitlock, George Routh, Lillian Clark and G. A. Williams. Directed by Walter Morton.

EFFICIENCY EXPERTS (Kalem).—An average comedy reel with Ham and Bud in the spotlight parts. Henry Murdoch and Ethel Teare are also seen. There is more plot to this reel than to many preceding reels, and several laughs are registered, especially when the electric wires get mixed up with the water pipes. The efficiency lawn mower will also cause a few guffaws.

THE REGISTERED POUCH (Kalem).—An episode of the "A Daughter of Daring" series. Helen Gibson this time makes a flying leap from a gasoline "handcar" to a speeding train. In this manner she saves the registered mail pouch that has been stolen by three "bos." Helen is aided in her capture by a boy whom she is teaching telegraphy. This boy is a girl when not on the screen—Marion Emmons is the "boy's" real name. The boy adds a human interest touch. This reel shows an especially thrilling stunt on the part of Helen. Also in the cast are G. A. Williams and George Routh.

General Film Company Specials.

THE PHANTOM MINE (Kalem).—An episode of "The American Girl" series. This two-reel offering is a worth-while Western. It is melodramatic, full of action and full of mystery. The story tells of a villainous character's efforts to "put one over" on the Kings, but Madge King and her father outwit him and his followers. Realistic gun-fighting scenes are embraced in the film. Marin Sais, Frank Jonasson and Edward Hearn carry the leading parts. James W. Horne directed. A longer review is printed on another page.

A FOUR-CENT COURTSHIP (Essanay).—One of the "Black Cat" Features. This is a delightful two-reel "parlor" comedy, in which the humor is refined and subtle. There is no slapstick. The feature keeps the viewers chuckling from start to finish. A really worthy short-reel subject. Bryant Washburn and Hazel Daly play the leads charmingly. The story tells of a youth who, "touched" by his roommate, has only four cents with which to entertain his girl. How he gets carfare, theater tickets and enough money to show the girl a good time are highly amusing. And in the end he gets the girl.

THE REDEMPTION OF RED MULLIN (Selig).—A three-reel drama with a quiet strong human-interest appeal. The story tells of how a sick baby's cries for toys brings about the redemption of a crook, and how the infant is instrumental in bringing the crook and his sweetheart closer together. In the capable cast are Fred Eckart, Cressy Gotschalk, Cora Lambert and Roy Sutherland.

THE EXTRAVAGANT BRIDE (Essanay).—No. 11 of the "Is Marriage Sacred?" series. This two-reel drama treats convincingly and interestingly of the phase of married life referred to in the title. The wife's extravagance leads the husband into a situation where he is accused of stealing money. The bride believes her husband has stolen money because of her extravagance. The situation is cleared by one who saw a trap set for the husband by a dejected sultor of the extravagant wife. A better understanding is met by the husband and wife. In the cast are Marguerite Clayton, Edward Arnold, Lillian Drew, Sidney Ainsworth and Thomas Commerford.

Art Dramas, Inc.

PRIDE AND THE DEVIL (Apollo), March 1.—A foolish young wife, who gets mixed up with a lot of moral degenerates, is the part played by Alma Hanlon in this five-reel photoplay. The theme is unpleasant, but dramatic. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

HELL MORGAN'S GIRL, March 5.—A full review of this five-part production, which is not of the highest order as regards moral requirement, will be found elsewhere. The story is laid in the "Barbary Coast" of San Francisco, and is no doubt true to life it depicts.

Fox Film Corporation.

THE TIGER WOMAN (Fox), Feb. 19.—Another five-reel drama in which Theda Bara portrays a vampire. In this case she "out vamps" any of her other attempts. The production is elaborately staged and well acted by a large cast. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Greater Vitagraph

INTRIGUE, Feb. 26.—A romance of the American-hero-foreign-prince school, this five-reel photoplay has novel merit through the acting by Bobby Connolly of a little Grand Duke. The picture is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Metro Pictures Corporation

THE PROMISE (Yorke), Feb. 19.—A pleasing five-reel drama of the outdoors with Harold Lockwood and May Allison heading the cast. Especially good exteriors add interest to the story of the wealthy youth who makes good in a Western lumber camp, and of the society girl he left behind. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

RELIABLE HENRY (Metro-Drew), Feb. 26.—There are a number of lesser and one big laugh in this Drew comedy reel. "Reliable" Henry never makes a mistake in shopping, so friend wife piles it on. The big laugh comes when he runs into a fellow-commuter who is likewise loaded with bundles. Henry purposely loses his "rep" when he sends a flask to a baby and a bib to an uncle. Also he is instructed to buy a pair of black hose and comes home with garden hose.

THE SECRET OF EVE (Popular Plays and Players), Feb. 26.—Mme. Petrova is starred in this five-reel drama. The picture is not up to Metro standard—it is an unconvincing offering. The story tells of a gypsy girl, raised a Quakeress, who seeks the lights and finally finds her place ministering to the wants of blind children. A review is printed on another page of this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 112 (Gaumont), Feb. 21.—Interesting items in this number are scenes at the Buffalo harbor showing the ice blockade, the steamships St. Paul, St. Louis and New York held at their piers at New York awaiting decision as to safety at sea, naval militia guns being dismounted at the Brooklyn Navy Yards preparatory to their use in arming merchant ships, South Americans preparing at Lima, Peru, in case of necessity in the present world conditions, and Cuban recruits at Moro Castle, Havana. An unusually interesting number.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 76 (Gaumont), Feb. 21.—The subject chosen for this number is "Vicksburg, Mississippi." In it we learn historical facts connected with Vicksburg, and view in addition to scenes about the town, the National Park where memorials from many States have been erected to the memory of the heroes of the Civil War. A full review of this will be found in the Motion Picture Educator of March 17.

JERRY'S BRILLIANT SCHEME (Cub), Feb. 22.—This is not one of the best of George Ovey's efforts by any means, for the reason that the picture is somewhat gross in type. There is considerable of drinking and the usual kicking of people about. One very amusing situation occurs, however, when the father of Jerry's sweetheart, returning staggering drunk from where Jerry has him imprisoned, is put "back to bed" by his wife, who, because she has been deceived by an imposter disguised as her husband, thinks that he has left his room contrary to her orders. The discovery of the doubles is strictly amusing.

REEL LIFE, NO. 43 (Gaumont), Feb. 25.—An interesting number in which we find such subjects as "Making Dainty Perfumes," "Teaching Children to Swim," "Logging in Louisiana" and "Making Bottles at Home," the latter are sanitary bottles made of paper. A full review will be found in the Motion Picture Educator of a later date.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

ADVENTURES OF SHORTY HAMILTON, NO. 6 (Monogram), Feb. 19.—This is one of the best numbers of the series thus far. In it Shorty's love affair is very much mixed up with the pursuit of a counterfeiter. Shorty and his lady love advancing the love affair of the counterfeiter's daughter who is teaching school at Arrowhead ranch are about to figure in a double wedding, when his sweetheart tells Shorty that their marriage will be impossible at that particular moment because he has forgotten to get the license. And so Shorty's love affair is still a matter of prolonged interest.

A BUTCHER'S NIGHTMARE (Vogue), Feb. 25.—The subject on which this two-part farce comedy is based is anything but pleasant. As the title signifies the majority of the scenes are laid in and about a butcher shop. One of the employees has a dream in which everything that he touches turns into an animal. The fake animals, of course, are amusing, but the production is distinctly low brow. The most amusing incident has to do with the attempt of one thief to lay the blame of his theft on another. At the same time, while this may seem amusing, it has no right to moral commendation.

THE GREATER WOMAN (Mutual Star Production), Feb. 26.—A five-part adaptation of Algernon Boyesen's play directed by Frank Powell, and featuring Marjorie Rambeau. This production can not be recommended as a clean or wholesome one. On the contrary, it is one that is not fitted, speaking from a moral viewpoint, for the best theaters or audiences. The story tells of a woman's struggle to resist the influence of a man of indomitable will. She marries a weakling in the shape of an artist, and comes to grief through the machinations of the other man and a most repulsive type of woman.

SHORTY HOOKS A LOAN SHARK (Monogram), Feb. 26.—The seventh number of the "Adventures of Shorty Hamilton" will be found interesting. In it "Shorty" helps a young gambler with a wife and child, out of his difficulties, and in the course of time is instrumental, along with his lady love, in getting the loan shark from whom the young man has borrowed money, and who has been conducting a dishonest business, out of town. Considerable in the way of good comedy has been inserted into this chapter. Shorty's love affair is still unsettled.

MY FIGHTING GENTLEMAN (Mutual Star Production), March 1.—A delightful six-part Powell production treating of Colonial days. William Russell and Francella Billington have the leading roles, and among the supporting cast is noticed the names of Lucille Ward and other well-known players. The story touches on historic facts of the South in an indirect way, and gives opportunity for plenty of interesting action. A full review of the picture will be found elsewhere.

Paramount Pictures Corporation

ON RECORD (Lasky), Feb. 22.—An especially commendable five-reeler, with Mae Murray in the lead as an unjustly treated heroine. In this part she is effective and engaging. The story has character and will be a winner with most spectators. There is a freshness about the picture that is good. For longer review see elsewhere in this issue.

THE FORTUNES OF LIFE (Famous Players), Feb. 26.—Marguerite Clark as the star of this five-reel version of the well-known novel by Molly Elliot Seawell, makes the picture a delight. The scenes are laid in Paris in the time of Napoleon, and Miss Clark plays a charming little French actress. A longer review of the photoplay is printed on another page of this issue.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

RED NIGHTS (No. 8 of "Patria"), March 4.—In this instalment of "Patria," the explosion on Black Tom is worked into the action of the story with much skill. Mrs. Vernon Castle and Milton Sills take part in a sensational rescue. The number is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

FLORENCE ROSE FASHIONS No. 22 (Pathe), March 11.—"As the Day Wanes" is the poetic title given to this number of the Pathe fashion review. The half reel has its full share of interest for the ladies. "Birds of Gay Plumage," a colored educational, is on the same reel.

THE EMPRESS (Popular Plays and Players), March 11.—The title of this five-reel photoplay refers to an artist's model that poses as the wife of Napoleon. The best feature of the picture is the work of the cast, which is headed by Holbrook Blinn and Doris Kenyon. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

HOOEY HEROES (Mittenthal), March 11.—This one-reel subject is a Heinie and Louie comedy and is a burlesque on an old-time melodrama. It has all the slap-dash nonsense of this brand of comics.

Triangle Film Corporation

PASSION (Superpictures, Inc.), Feb. 26.—The fifth of "The Seven Deadly Sins" is not a particularly strong representation of the sin referred to. The story deals with the unfortunate attachment of a young girl for a champion wrestler. In her struggle to earn a living after having been cut off from her income, she finds work with him and lives to rue her lack of discrimination. A full review of this picture will be found elsewhere.

BETSY'S BURGLAR (Fine Arts), March 4.—A well-constructed and interesting comedy-melodrama by Frank E. Woods, with Constance Talmadge in the leading role. Out of the ordinary run, bright and entertaining, it is suited to any program.

BACK OF THE MAN (Kay-Bee), March 4.—A story having a fault of consistency so serious that its capable presentation does not overcome a natural loss of interest. Dorothy Dalton and Charles Ray do well in their respective roles; the typing and handling are beyond reproach—it is a case of treatment being far superior to the drama.

Universal Film Mfg. Company

VALLEY OF BEAUTIFUL THINGS (Victor), Feb. 6.—Beautiful photography, artistic lighting and settings that delight the eye, are found in this charming fairy tale made by Universal's juvenile company. From first to last, the film is marked by careful workmanship, and it is just the sort of story to please young people. As a little girl, washed ashore by the waves, Seafoam falls under the power of a witch, who is the evil spirit in the Valley of Beautiful Things. Seafoam is made to lure passersby into a cave where they are left to die; but eventually she is released from the wicked influence by the spirit of Love, Love, sent by the Fairy Queen. This production deserves a permanent place on the list of pictures suitable for children.

McLE MATES (Joker), Feb. 17.—A successful comedy, by Jack Cunningham, featuring Wm. Franey, Gale Henry and others. Franey befriends a burro, which insists upon following him around to show its gratitude. This gets to be explosively funny. Even the wife gets jealous of the burro's attentions to her spouse and tries to break up the friendship. This will bring laughter from almost anyone, and will please children in particular.

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 60 (Universal), Feb. 21.—American vessels held up by U-boat war, a waterfront fire in New York City, recruiting in Chicago, return of U. S. Army from Mexico, leaving of Count Bernstorff, and other interesting features are included in this number.

PASSING THE GRIP (Joker), March 3.—A one-reel comedy, by Walter Newman, featuring Wm. Franey, Milburne Moranti, Chas. Conklin, Gale Henry and Lillian Peacock. Two grips, one containing a dog and the other an infernal machine, become mixed up at a hotel. The fun is of a farcical, knockabout type and winds up with a rough house. This makes an average offering of the type.

GOOD-FOR-NOTHING-GALLAGHER (Big U), March 8.—This subject, by Wm. Parker, features Wm. Mong as a roustabout in a bar-room. He takes a liking to a Salvation Army girl, portrayed by Roberta Wilson, and becomes converted. Later he joins the militia and is shot while leading a raid on some escaped convicts. This has no special strength, but is well constructed and tells an interesting story.

THE BEAUTY DOCTOR (Victor), March 9.—A beauty doctor whose specialty is making fat people thin, or thin people stout, has many applicants for treatment, and the humor of the film depends upon the behavior of the women, who visit his office, generally followed by their husbands. The idea is far from new, but it is fairly well handled with Billy Mason and Silvia Ashton as the principal fun-makers.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE NO. 9, March 9.—An interesting number containing subjects such as "Bee Culture," "An Ice Harvest on the Hudson River," "Perpetuating Dewey's Image," and an animated clay cartoon entitled "A Hard Boiled Egg."

IT MAKES A DIFFERENCE (Rex), March 11.—A one-reel subject, from a story by Ida M. Evans, featuring Dorothy Davenport, Morris Foster, Irene Hunt and Edward H. Earne. The former sweetheart of a tight-fisted young farmer contrives to make him buy his wife a decent looking gown. This so changes the wife's appearance that he falls in love with her again. The first girl then marries her present lover. This is presented in an average way, but the cast is agreeable and the idea rather better than usual.

WANTA MAKE A DOLLAR? (Joker), March 10.—A comedy number, by Jack Cunningham, featuring Wm. Franey, Gale Henry and others. The former acts as a marriage broker and has a hard time finding a husband for Gale. This is a characteristic number of the kind and has numerous laughable spots in it.

SOME SPECIMENS (Nestor), March 12.—A comedy subject, by Jack Cunningham, featuring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. One poses as a botanist and the other as a mineralogist. The action is amusing. Both get black eyes at their first meeting, but later become friends. Well-directed and makes a comedy of good appeal.

Universal Film Mfg. Co. Specials

THE TORNADO (Bison), March 3.—In this two-reel number Jack Ford qualifies as a rough-riding expert. His hand-to-hand struggle in the cabin and escape by jumping from the roof to the back of his horse, makes a stirring feature. The story is an ordinary Western offering, but the presentation lifts it out of the general run. As a climax, the hero leaps from his running horse to a moving train. A fine Western offering.

THE GATES OF DOOM (Red Feather), March 5.—A five-reel story of love and warfare in India, written by J. Grubb Alexander and produced by Charles Swickard. Clarie McDowell appears in a double role; Indore, a native woman, and Agatha, the daughter. The latter's father is an English officer. Both mother and daughter are thrown into the harem of a native prince, but escape in a caravan. The girl is saved from death on a funeral pyre at the close. This is enacted by a large cast and contains numerous spectacular effects. The story has no great novelty in it, but is entertaining and moves along consistently. Others in the cast are L. C. Shumway, Jack Connolly, Mark Fenton and Alfred Allen.

DESPERATION (Gold Seal), March 6.—A three-reel offering, by E. Temple Thurston, featuring Elizabeth Risdon, Frederick Groves and Guy Newall. The settings are ordinary and some of the scenes are slightly disconnected, but the quality of the plot is unusual and quite entertaining. The neglected young wife has but two years to live, according to the specialists. She flirts with an old friend. Her husband learns of the attachment and takes steps to break it up. Later he discovers a remedy which restores the wife to health. The number has some faults of presentation, but possesses considerable strength in spite of this.

FATTY'S FEATURE FILLUM (L-KO), March 7.—A good comic subject, featuring Patty Voss, Gladys Roach and Dick Smith. The former plays a movie star who goes to the theater to watch himself in the films. Some good burlesque work is done, including excerpts from the "Cuckoo Weekly" and a melodrama. The snare drummer also makes a funny feature. This contains some amusing novelties.

THE AMAZING ADVENTURE (Rex), March 8.—A very pleasing number of the romantic type, adapted by Harvey Gates, from a story by E. M. Inghram. Roberta Wilson, Kingsley Benedict and Hayward Mack play the leads. The girl marries a down-and-out young man, who had once saved her life in the mountains, but had forgotten the episode. The story has a great deal of charm and is splendidly presented. A good offering.

THE LAST CIGARETTE (Imp), March 9.—No. 1 of "The Perils of the Secret Service." A two-reel subject, by George Bronson Howard and Luther Reed, featuring Kingsley Benedict, Jay Belasco, Vola Smith and Malcolm Blevins. Mr. Benedict plays the part of a detective who masquerades as a social dilettante. He is captured by some foreign conspirators, after being lured away by the girl at a hall in Washington, and escapes by means of an explosive cigarette. This holds the interest firmly, though the denouement lacks something in the way of force. The escape itself could have been made more convincing. The general atmosphere of the production is very entertaining.

THE DRIFTER (Bison), March 10.—A two-reel Western number, by Edna Rowell Schey, featuring Harry Carey as "Cheyenne Harry," the bandit hero. In this number he meets a girl dressed in boy's clothes, known as "The Kid." He holds up a wine room to get the money the latter lost in gambling. Later he shoots the girl by mistake and then risks his life to take care of her. This is highly romantic in flavor and not altogether convincing, but holds the interest throughout.

THE PURPLE MASK, NO. 12 (Universal Special), March 12.—Patsy gets upon the trail of a millionaire named Philip Johnson in this number. He makes money in a questionable way, presumably through white slavery, but so much has been cut out of the instalment that the plot is quite obscure. Detective Kelly and his men are on the trail and there is much mystery in the movements of all concerned. The number is short, from cutting, and hardly as strong as it should be to get over well.

THE GIRL WHO LOST (Red Feather), March 12.—This three-reel subject, by Calder Johnstone and Bess Meredyth, features Cleo Madison, Roberta Wilson, Jack Nelson, Mollie Malone and Daniel Leighton. A business man ruins the young sister of an actress named Isabel. The actress, seeking revenge, lures to her side the business man's son, who is engaged to be married. She gets a strong hold on the son and threatens to ruin him unless the father marries her sister. This the latter promises to do. This is not a particularly new plot and not very strong in moral value. The cast is agreeable and makes the most of the story.

BORDER WOLVES (Red Feather), March 12.—A two-reel number, by George Marshall, featuring L. M. Wells, Jack Mulhall, Janet Eastman, Neal Hart and Joe Rickson. This is a Western subject, in which a tramp, who drops off a freight train in a little town, twice rescues the heroine from trouble and eventually wins her hand. Gun-fighting in a gambling house and an abduction of the girl are leading features. The number is not exceptional in any way, but runs along entertainingly and makes a pleasing offering.

World Pictures.

THE WEB OF DESIRE (March 5).—Ethel Clayton and a good supporting cast appear in this five-reel drama on a conventional theme. The story tells of a man who neglects his wife while he piles up a fortune and nearly loses her love. The picture is well produced. It is reviewed on another page of this issue.

Selznick Pictures

THE PRICE SHE PAID (February).—A seven-reel version of the David Graham Phillips novel, this picture has been finely produced and is acted with skill by Clara Kimball Young and her support. A want of dramatic situations make it slow of action. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Miscellaneous

AMERICA IS READY (M-C Film Co.).—Five reels of scenes, showing many things about this country's defenses such as the different kinds of troops, the lighting ships, sailors, marines, West Point cadets, Plattsburg men, etc. There is a good deal of movement in these pictures, and while there is nothing sensational about the picture it is timely and interesting. For a longer report see elsewhere in this issue.

Four Metros for March

All Big Features, One Based on a Chambers Novel, Are Released on Program in March.

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION will release four unusually strong screen attractions during March. The first of these will be "The Barricade," released March 5, produced by Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., with Mabel Taliaferro in the stellar role. This five-part drama of modern life was directed by Edwin Carewe and photographed by John Arnold for the Metro program. It affords the star an unparalleled outlet for her dramatic powers. The star is supported by a capable cast, including Clifford Bruce, last seen on the Metro program in "The Devil at His Elbow," Frank Currier, favorite of many Metro wonderplays, and Robert Rendel.

Second in the list of the month's releases is "The Mortal Sin," a feature screen production with winsome Viola Dana as star. This five-part photodrama has been written and directed by John H. Collins and produced for the Metro program by Columbia Pictures Corporation. It will be released March 12.

In the part of Jane Anderson, Miss Dana for the first time in her screen career plays a married woman throughout the production. Robert Walker plays George Anderson, the husband. He has appeared with Miss Dana in "The Gates of Eden" and "The Light of Happiness," and played opposite Mabel Taliaferro in "A Wife by Proxy." Augustus Phillips has the part of Emmet Standish, a publisher. He has been seen in Miss Dana's support in "Threads of Fate," "The Gates of Eden" and "The Light of Happiness," and formerly appeared with her in many Edison features. Henry Leone, Louis B. Foley and Ricca Allen are others prominent in the cast of "The Mortal Sin."

The March 19 Metro release is a picture version of Robert W. Chambers' famous novel, "The Hidden Children," with Harold Lockwood and May Allison as stars. Oscar Apfel directed this feature production for the Yorke Film Corporation, and the photography was done by Antonio Gaudio. "The Hidden Children" is a story of the Revolutionary period, in the days when the Iroquois Confederacy held its dread sway on the northern boundary of the country. Harold Lockwood has the part of Euan Loskiel, a brave young scout, and May Allison is seen as Lois de Contrecoeur, who adopts the garb of a camp-follower in rags to find her way to her mother, who is kept prisoner in a far-away camp. Lester Cuneo, Lillian Hayward, Lillian West and Henry Herbert are among the prominent players appearing in the support of Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison in "The Hidden Children."

"His Father's Son," by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf, which will be released on the Metro program March 26, has for its co-stars Lionel Barrymore and Irene Hawley. George D. Baker directed this five-part feature production for Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., and it was adapted for the screen by June Mathis.

J. Dabney Barron is an irresponsible college youth devoting his time and money to poker and automobiles and furnishes Mr. Barrymore with a thoroughly congenial role, and Miss Howley as Betty Arden has a part which will add to the laurels she already has won in the screen world. Those two stars appeared together in one of Metro's strongest offerings, "A Yellow Streak." Mr. Barrymore has been seen in "The End of the Tour," "The Brand of Cowardice," "Dorian's Divorce" and other Metro wonderplays, and Miss Howley was co-star with Ralph Herz in "The Purple Lady" and with William Nigh in "Life's Shadows." The excellent cast which surrounds these two stars includes Frank Currier, Charles Eldridge, George A. Wright and Walter Horton, all well known to Metro patrons.

Three one-act Drew comedies and one Figman comedy will be seen in March. These are "Handy Henry," starring Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, released March 5; "The High Cost of Living," another Drew comedy, March 12; "A Modern Romance," a Metro-Rolma comedy starring Max Figman and Lolita Robertson, March 19, and "The Awakening of Helena Miner," again with Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, pre-eminent in the realm of wholesome playlets for the screen, will be seen March 26.

MUTUAL ANNOUNCES CHANGE IN RELEASE DATES.

The Mutual Film Corporation announces that the exigencies of the trade have made it advisable to release on six days of the week instead of seven, and therefore, starting March 5, there will be no releases on Sunday of each week.

The Vogue comedy which has been appearing on that day will hereafter be scheduled for Saturday, and "Reel Life," the magazine of the screen, will be released on Thursdays.

It is the aim of Mutual to release twelve guaranteed "Featurette" reels per week—an average of two reels per day, excluding Sundays.

NOTES GETS SOUTHERN RIGHTS TO "MASQUE OF LIFE."

Marcus Notes, owner of the Imperial Film Exchange, of Washington, D. C., has purchased the rights for eight Southern states to "The Masque of Life." The states contracted for are Alabama, Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, Mississippi, North and South Carolina and Louisiana.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"THE GIFT GIRL" (Bluebird).

Louise Lovely returns to the Bluebird program in this production, week of March 26, as co-star with Rupert Julian, in a photoplay founded on H. R. Durant's play, "Marcel's Birthday Present." For Bluebird's purposes, "The Gift Girl" is considered a more appropriate title.

It has been more than three months since Miss Lovely appeared on the Bluebird program, and her return promises her the best role she has ever appeared in. Rupert Julian directed the feature. In the supporting company will be Emory Johnson, Rex Roselli, Wadsworth Harris and Frederick Montague.

Scene from "The Gift Girl" (Bluebird).

The location of events in "The Gift Girl" are divided between Persia and Paris, and the career of an English girl, living part of her life in a Persian harem, are detailed in Bluebird's usual clever photoplay. There are many exciting episodes, but the picture will make its strongest appeal through the nature of its plot and the beautiful settings and locations that have been used to frame the action.

"THE WHIP" EIGHT MONTHS IN THE MAKING.

"When we started to make the scenario of 'The Whip,' we never realized what an undertaking we had before us," said Maurice Tournour, who directed the production. "Though we planned on making 'The Whip' much larger than a five reeler, we had no exact idea of the length that the picture would be. We wanted it to be complete and run ten reels if necessary, or eight, as it is now. Had we realized the expense and the time that it would take to make the picture, we might have hesitated."

More than eight months were consumed in the actual taking of the picture. Special sets were built that used the entire floor space of the Paragon studios. Many sets were so large that the balconies at the studio had to be used to make room for the various camera men who were to "shoot" at the sets. For the mob scenes, thousands of extras were called in. Special permission had to be secured to take the big wreck scenes on one of the branches of the Pennsylvania railroad. Due to the special influence of William A. Brady, permission was secured from the President of the Saratoga Race Track to have the big race scenes taken during the race meet held last summer. Because of the life-long friendship of Mr. Brady with the residents of Long Branch, he was allowed to have scenes taken for "The Whip" at the annual Long Branch horse show. Another interesting and unusual scene was the Baby show at Long Branch.

To make the wreck scene come up to the standard that Mr. Tournour had set for this production, the scene had to be taken twice, for when the first train wreck scene was shown in the projection room of the Paragon, Mr. Tournour was not satisfied and a new wreck scene had to be taken. The mere fact that the cost of the wreck scenes in each case approximated $10,000.00, did not stop Mr. Tournour from insisting upon a retake.

State right buyers throughout the country are aware of the unusualness of "The Whip" as an offering for their exhibitors. They are conscious that this is a modern, up-to-date feature with plenty of publicity value. It is very likely that in the near future a private showing will be arranged for "The Whip." In the meantime the offices of the Paragon Films, Inc. in the Longacre Building, New York, are kept busy answering inquiries and closing for territorial rights for "The Whip."

GAUMONT'S PROGRAM FOR WEEK OF MARCH 11.

One of the most interesting pictures from the Gaumont Studios for the week of March 11 shows through a microscope various phenomena connected with the circulation of the blood. This is "Reel Life" No. 46. The first Gaumont release of the week through Mutual is "Tours Around the World" No. 18 March 13. The Gabes Oasis on the edge of the Desert of Sahara and Koursk, a town on the Siberian frontier, are the two places contrasted on this reel. Both are highly entertaining.

The next day brings two Gaumont single reels to the screen. These are The Mutual Weekly, of which no advance mention can be made since it is only made up the day it is shipped, and the split-reel "See America First" and the Gaumont Cartoon Komic. The scenic takes spectators for a trip on the Mississippi river from New Orleans to Baton Rouge, La. The cartoon is called "They Say Pigs Is 1.gs."

"Reel Life" formerly had its first run on Sunday, but the date has been changed to Thursday of each week. No. 46, issued March 15, contains a highly varied and intensely interesting number of pictures. "The Fluid of Life" shows the circulation of the blood and its composition as viewed through a microscope. "A Club-Rifle for the Police" will create general interest because it pictures a new weapon which will eventually be part of the equipment of all policemen. "Making the Cactus Useful" is an exposition of the various uses to which this supposedly useless plant has been put. It is used for fodder, for making candy, and for making strong drink, to say nothing of the spines that are used for phonograph needles. "Gold Mining in Alaska" is portrayed in a series of interesting views.

"AN ACTRESS' ROMANCE" (Selig).

"An Actress' Romance," a forthcoming Selig release in General Film service, was written by Daisy Slocum, and produced by Otis B. Thayer. The story had to do with the downfall and later the reformation of the scion of a wealthy and aristocratic family, and of the constancy of a woman who, through the power of her great love, guides the man's feet into the straight and narrow way. There is some beautiful photography, a succession of elaborate sets are utilized and a capable cast, makes "An Actress' Romance" all that can be desired.

On the same week's program is presented the first of a series of four one-reel farce comedies to be released every week by the Selig Company. The name of this comedy is "No Place Like Home," and features an all-star cast, including that universally popular juvenile actress, little Lillian Wade.

Forthcoming Bluebirds

Six Especially Good Productions Promised in Schedule to April 16.

SIX especially good productions are promised among forthcoming Bluebirds in a schedule that has been completed to April 16. Lynn F. Reynolds' "Mutiny," Ella Hall, in "Polly Redhead," and Louise Lovely, in "The Gift Girl," have already been referred to, in detail, as the releases for the last three weeks in March.

On April 2 Violet Mersereau will begin the month with "Susan's Gentleman," a play directed by Edwin Stevens, from a story by Kate Jordan. The scenario was furnished by John C. Brownell, who also assisted in the direction. In the supporting company will be Sydney Dean, James O'Neill, Robert Congston and Maud Cooling.

Wedgewood Nowell and Gypsy Hart will be featured ones in "The Pulse of Life," scheduled for April 9. This attraction was produced by Rex Ingram from E. Magnus Ingelton's story, "Ships that Pass," and represents a colorful story of tragic bent, the which Mr. Ingram has specialized in of late. Wm. J. Dyer, Millard K. Wilson, Nicholas Duneaw and Dorothy Barrett will be prominent in the supporting company.

"The Girl in the Checkered Coat," with Dorothy Phillips the star, is a feature of exceptional merit. Miss Phillips has demonstrated her artistry in several recent productions bearing the Bluebird brand, but in this portrayal of two different characters, carrying practically the major part of the plot, Miss Phillips is declared to have excelled herself in the emotional interpretations. E. Magnus Ingelton wrote the story and Joseph DeGrasse directed. Lon Chaney and William Stowell will be featured as leaders of Miss Phillips' support.

"LITTLE LOST SISTER" (Selig).

"Little Lost Sister," the famous book and play by Virginia Brooks, has been completed by Director Al Green at the Selig studios, Los Angeles, and will be released as a Selig Red Seal play through K-E-S-E service on Monday, March 12. The production was filmed on an elaborate scale. As an instance of this Director Green secured the use of one of the largest factories where girls are employed in Los Angeles. These scenes serve to introduce Vivian Reed, "the little lost sister" of the story. Bessie Eyton is also given an opportunity for splendid work as the daughter of riches who forsakes a life of ease to devote her time to rescuing her less fortunate sisters of the city. Others in the cast are Marion Warner, Eugenie Besserer, George Fawcett, Joseph Singleton, Will Machin, Al. W. Filton and others.

JACK PICKFORD IN "THE DUMMY."

The celebrated stage success, "The Dummy," which was one of the biggest sensations of two seasons ago, has been adapted for the screen by the Famous Players, with Jack Pickford in the title role, and is scheduled for release on March 15 by Paramount.

It was this clever play by Harriet Ford and Harvey J. O'Higgins in which Ernest Truex sprang into fame over night. It is an interesting coincidence that it marks the first appearance of Jack Pickford as a Famous Player-Paramount star in his own right, young Pickford having previously co-starred with Louise Huff in "Great Expectations" and "Seventeen."

Scene from "The Dummy" (Famous Players).

In "The Dummy," as the name indicates, the qualities of a deaf-mute form the basis of the story. As a matter of fact there is no real dummy in the story—a dime-novel-inspired messenger boy pretending to be a dummy in order to outwit a gang of kidnappers who have stolen the little daughter of a very wealthy family. This peculiar character lends itself to especial treatment on the screen because of the silence of all the players.

Among those who appear in support of Jack Pickford in the production are Frank Losee, Helen Green, Edwin Stanley, Ruby Hoffman and the ever delightful little Ethelmary Oakland.

NOVEL LIGHTING IN "THOSE WITHOUT SIN."

Though Lasky-Paramount photoplays have been notable for their lighting effects ever since the founding of the company, the producers have continued experimenting along these lines and the fruit of this ceaseless endeavor on the part of Cecil B. De Mille and Alvin Wyckoff and the camera staff at the Hollywood studio is shown in the production, "Those Without Sin," in which Blanche Sweet is the star.

In this photoplay, the scenes of which are laid in and around Richmond, Virginia, during the Civil War, the greater part of the action takes place at night. Instead of the usual blue tint on a painfully light background, which so often signifies "night" photography on the screen, the cameraman actually did his work at night. The effect is weird and startling in its reality. It is particularly appropriate that this photoplay should have been handled in this manner because of the fact that the action has to do to a large extent with the experiences of a Confederate dispatch bearer. The secret formula by which these scenes were obtained has not been divulged by the producers, but it is apparent that a form of spot-light and back-lighting was employed. Not only are these scenes taken as close-ups, but long range views with a clean sweep before the camera are also shown during the course of the picture.

Busy at Belmont Studios

Production of Screen Comedies, Under the Direction of Fritz Wintermeyer, Has Been Resumed.

After a slight interruption in their producing plans, the Belmont Film Co. are again active in their studios at Yonkers, N. Y., turning out the brand of comedies with which they recently have been scoring so decisively. At the present time they are working but one company, but plans are being formulated to put two more companies to work in the very near future.

Fritz Wintermeyer is continuing as general director with the organization and is in personal charge of the pictures now being made. Mr. Wintermeyer's chief experience with comedy screen productions has come from his association with Charles Chaplin as director of the famous star when he was working for the Essanay company. Previously Mr. Wintermeyer had been with Thomas H. Ince at Niles, Cal., for a period of two years, directing.

Under Mr. Wintermeyer's tutelage, other directors are being groomed to take charge of the additional companies which the Belmont people plan to put to work in the near future. Among the possibilities for one of the new jobs is Blanche Stuart Scott, who hopes to add to a list of somewhat unusual past performances the distinction of being among the earliest of women comedy picture directors. Miss Scott attracted public attention some years ago by driving an auto across the continent as an advertising "stunt" for one of the leading automobile manufacturing concerns. Later she took up aviation, learning to fly at Hammondsport, N. Y., under the personal instruction of Glenn Curtiss. She is widely known as an exhibition aviatrix throughout the country, particularly on the Pacific Coast.

"IN THE HANDS OF THE LAW" (Moss).

"In the Hands of the Law," which B. S. Moss presents as a timely story of circumstantial evidence, dealing with the subject from a new angle, and without the veil of propaganda, is now complete in five reels, with Lois Meredith as one of the stars, and ready for release on Moss' favorite territorial plan.

The story of "In the Hands of the Law" visualizes the merciless inner workings of the present-day criminal court with unhesitating pointedness, and possesses a love story of more than conventional interest, involving complications in which the heroine convicts the hero on circumstantial evidence, brought out in new and unexpected treatment.

Variety in Pathe Program

List of Releases for Week of March 11th Contains Many Interesting Subjects.

PATHE'S program for the week of March 11th includes in a list of great variety, the last episode of "Pearl of the Army" and the second of the recently announced series of Pathe-Max Linder comedies. The Gold Rooster feature for the week is "The Empress," produced by the U. S. Amusement Corporation under the direction of Madame Blache, featuring Holbrook Blinn and Doris Kenyon, supported by William Force and Lyne Donaldson. "The Empress" is a fast moving melodrama of an artist and his model, the Man and the Woman in the Dark. It is a dramatic story acted by a splendid cast composed of people with big names, working under the supervision of an artist.

The fifteenth episode of "Pearl of the Army" is entitled "The Colonel's Orderly." The big serial which has broken all records comes to its close and the absorbing mystery is solved.

"Cat's Paw and Scape Goat" is the title of "Patria" No. 9. It contains an attempt on the part of Donald Parr's rival to blacken his reputation in the eyes of Patria and also the spectacular death of De Lima in a terrific explosion.

"Max in a Difficult Position" is the title of the second of the Pathe-Max Linder comedies, picked as the best work of this famous comedian. The story tells how Max's trousers tear in an inconvenient spot and how he does his best to hide the fact. He is forced to admit that a social gathering is no place for a shrinking violet like himself.

On the same reel is "Skinny Routs a Robber," produced by the Rolin Film Company. Skinney, with his 200 pounds or more affords a laugh for every pound.

A one-reel Mittenhal Comedy called "Hooley's Heroes" is a story about Weeping Winnie, the Willain's Wife, Heinie and Louis and the Wild Willain. Heinie decides to have Peace even if he has to fight for it.

The twenty-second number of the Florence Rose Fashions, entitled "As the Day Wanes" shows some of the most beautiful girls in New York having tea in the famous Cocoanut Grove, at Palm Beach. Miss Florence Rose announces that she will be pleased to answer any questions about these clothes in the newest fashions. Theater patrons should address her at No. 291 Fifth Avenue, New York.

On the same reel with the Fashion Picture is "Birds of Gay Plumage" containing closeup views of parakeets and cocatoos in natural colors.

A split-reel International cartoon and scenic is made up of "Thorns and Roses" drawn by George Herriman and "Artificial Flowers in the Making." The program also contains Hearst-Pathe News No. 22 and No. 23; released March 14th and 17th, respectively.

"SISTER AGAINST SISTER" (Fox).

The overwhelming influence of environment was never better illustrated on the screen than in "Sister Against Sister," the newest announced release from Fox Film Corporation.

The picture is scheduled at present for its premiere showings on March 5. Virginia Pearson heads a capable cast of players in the production. Irving Cummings, who will be seen as a Fox actor for the first time, has the part opposite the beautiful star.

"Sister Against Sister" gains immensely in the effect it seeks through the fact that Miss Pearson appears in the title roles. Her dual interpretation of Anne and Katherine Martin gives her many opportunities for achievements in make-up as well as in emotional work.

Like her star idol, little Katherine Lee also has a double role. She plays Anne and Katherine as children, and her performance of this difficult task will stand out prominently in all the child acting that has been done for the screen.

Besides Katherine Lee, the ever-pleasing Jane is also in the film. The rest of the company consists of Maud Hill, Walter Law, Carl Torres, William and Archie Battista. Mary Murillo wrote the script. James Vincent as in charge of the direction.

BLUEBIRD'S ADVERTISING CONTEST PROGRESSES.

Bluebird's February contest for exhibitors is progressing more satisfactorily than the promoters had imagined it would. Innovations are not always accepted at the outset, but Bluebird's advertising contest has found great favor among moving picture showmen in all parts of the country. The plan has been fully explained and exhibitors are submitting their ideas—the scope of the contest embracing lobby displays, newspaper advertising and any special campaigns through which managers are promoting public interest in "Bluebird Day" at their theaters. The first contest ends February 28, and the announcement of the prize winners will be made before March 15.

THREE WILBUR SUBJECTS FINISHED.

Of the six pictures constituting the series of Crane Wilbur features which David Horsley will release through the Mutual Film Corporation five subjects have either been made or selected for picturization. The features completed are "Love Everlasting," "The Single Code" and "The Painted Lie," while those decided upon are "The Eye of Envy" and "The Eleventh Commandment."

Competition Keen for "Mothers of France"

Sarah Bernhardt Picture Partially Owned by the French Government—Only One State to Each Buyer.

COMPETITION for the American control of "Mothers of France," the remarkable Sarah Bernhardt motion picture owned in part by the French government and destined to perpetuation in the records of France, has been so keenly pursued that an official order has been telegraphed restricting state right purchases to not more than one state for any individual buyer.

Louis Mercanton, who brought this picture to New York some weeks ago and who was summoned to France for further consultation before making definite arrangements, is said to be again on his way to this country with instructions for the final disposition of the rights for the United States and Canada.

In the interval S. L. Rothapfel has secured the first New York showing for the Rialto Theater—the week beginning Sunday, March 11. This, it is understood, was accomplished by cable.

Pending the arrival of Mr. Mercanton, representing the Societies Generale des Cinematographes Eclips, which made the picture in association with the authorities, an agency in New York has the affairs of "Mothers of France" in charge, with the expectation that they will be so completely in hand as to enable the French director to close them up within a few hours after reaching this port.

It was Mr. Mercanton who originated the idea of an intensely patriotic French motion picture to be written for Mme. Bernhardt by Jean Richepin, the foremost dramatic poet of France and member of the Academy. He enlisted the assistance of the military and civil officials and personally directed the picture in all stages of its making.

The government retains permanent ownership in all that part of the completed photoplay depicting scenes in the trenches, the field hospitals and other localities in the zone of actual military operations. This is a formality of French law, and in the present instance it serves to bind together all elements of the picture which Mme. Bernhardt is said to have described as "a message from the mothers of France to the mothers of America perhaps facing a similarly poignant crisis."

BRENON FINISHES "THE ETERNAL SIN."

The numerous vicissitudes which have beset Herbert Brenon's production of "The Eternal Sin" for Selznick Pictures have ended. The last scene in this unusual photodrama was taken at the Brenon Studio last Tuesday, and within twenty-four hours Mr. Brenon had packed up the entire negative and taken it to Atlantic City. A moving picture theatre has been engaged in that city and will be used by Mr. Brenon every morning for the next few weeks in cutting, assembling and titling his picture.

"ALADDIN UP-TO-DATE" (Essanay).

Bryant Washburn takes the lead in this Black Cat feature, the first appearance of this star in a short production since his feature-success, "Skinner's Dress Suit." The story is that of a "down-and-outer" who gets riches galore, as magically as did Aladdin, then discovers he has been made the dupe of a forger.

Mr. Washburn has a role as pleasing as that of Skinner, though along a different line. The plot has been well worked out, revealing some very human situations, and the suspense well withheld until the closing scenes. There is good rapid-fire action from beginning to end. The photography and settings are excellent. The production has a screen time of 28 minutes. It is being released through the General Film Service.

Pallas-Morosco's March Program

Paramount to Release Features in Which Are Starred Kathlyn Williams, Vivian Martin, George Beban, House Peters and Myrtle Stedman.

THERE is a great diversity of themes in the four Pallas-Morosco productions which will be released by Paramount during the month of March, with Kathlyn Williams, Vivian Martin, George Beban, House Peters and Myrtle Stedman in the respective stellar roles.

Political intrigue and a court story figure in "Out of the Wreck," in which Kathlyn Williams will star on March 8. It is a story which is taken from an actual incident in real life, as it was told by a newspaper reporter to Maud E. Corsan, the author of the photoplay. Among those in support of Miss Williams are William Clifford, William Conklin, William Winter Jefferson, Don Bailey and Stella Razeto. The story deals with the intent of one political factor to expose the past of the rival candidate's wife, who has been tried for murder. The thrilling recital of events which led up to the woman's arrest form the theme of the plot.

"The Spirit of Romance," in which Vivian Martin stars, is a light fantasy relating the adventure of a little girl who was a drudge in an antique shop, but whose winning personality attracts the attention of a crabbed old millionaire. She has always believed in a spirit called Romance—he has long since come to believe that there is no such thing in life. His endeavor to prove the falsity of the little girl's dream forms one of the most delightful stories in which Miss Martin has ever appeared. "The Spirit of Romance" will be released on March 22, and some others appearing with Miss Martin in this picture are Herbert Standing, Colin Chase, Elinor Hancock and George Fisher.

George Beban's next Pallas picture is called "The Bond Between" and is scheduled for release on March 26. In this production the celebrated Italian character actor has put away the togs of the iceman which he wore in "His Sweetheart" and has assumed the role of a white-haired Italian maestro. With all the improvidence of a musician he has so neglected his finances that he is forced to act as a watchman in an art gallery while pursuing the precarious calling of a singing teacher. It is one of the most lovable characterizations that Beban has enacted on the screen, and the story develops a dramatic punch which makes it a most absorbing drama.

House Peters and Myrtle Stedman co-star in "As Men Love," which is scheduled for release on March 29. In this dramatic production Miss Stedman plays the role of a society butterfly, whose fittings break the long-standing friendship between her husband and his chum. Though House Peters and Miss Stedman are in themselves a powerful drawing card, the producers have added to the cast Jack W. Johnston—who was loaned by Lasky for the picture—and Helen Jerome Eddy, who has already won an enviable reputation for her clever work in Morosco pictures. Lois Zellner, the author of the story, has cleverly avoided the usual "eternal triangle" situation and has given the story a twist which, coupled with the excellent cast, makes it a notable production even for Pallas-Morosco.

"THE PAINTED LIE" (Horsley).

Crane Wilbur will make his reappearance as a star in the Mutual array during the week of March 26. The vehicle selected for his return is "The Painted Lie."

"The Painted Lie" is one of six feature productions starring Mr. Wilbur, which David Horsley will release through the Scene from "The Painted Lie" (Horsley).

Mutual, and is a most happy selection with which to begin the series.

The photoplay was made from a scenario by Mr. Wilbur. The principal character is Lieutenant Greyton, who is engaged to Diana Welland. The story reaches intense dramatic heights and had more than ordinary interest in its telling through the treatment Mr. Wilbur has given his theme.

The part of Lieutenant Greyton is portrayed by Mr. Wilbur, while other parts are in the hands of well-known players. Harrish Ingraham plays the artist; Mae Gaston is Diana Welland; Marie Corteaux, the artist's model, and Ida Lewis appears as the lieutenant's mother.

Kalem Infuses New Blood

Scott Sidney, Former Triangle, Pallas-Morosco Director, in Charge of "A Daughter of Daring."

SCOTT SIDNEY is now directing Helen Gibson in her role of the girl telegrapher in Kalem's series, "A Daughter of Daring." His first release will be shown some time during the month of March and has been named "The College Boy's Special."

Back of Mr. Sidney's selection as the directing genius of Kalem's one-part Railroad dramas, there is the earnest desire of his employers to inject an atmosphere of freshness and spontaneity into the new series that will lift them far above the ordinary pictures dependent upon thrills for their drawing power.

Mr. Sidney joins the Kalem Company after compiling an enviable record of successes produced for other firms. His experience goes back more than twenty years when he was an actor, manager and director on the legitimate stage. For three years he was under the New York Motion Picture Co. banner and in that time produced eighty one and two-reel subjects. More recently he has been with Pallas-Morosco and prior to that connection he directed some big productions for Triangle. He therefore comes to Kalem well fortified for the demands that will be made upon his ingenuity by the "Daughter of Daring" scripts.

A new camera man has also been engaged to start simultaneously with Director Sidney, and the supporting company for Miss Gibson will be increased as necessary. Exhibitors, it is said, will be able to note the effect of this new blood immediately. Mr. Sidney is an indefatigable worker and completed his first release in jig time. It is now being trimmed and will be shipped several weeks before its showing date.

"FORTUNE PHOTOPLAYS" ARE READY.

The General Film Company has completed its plans for the release of "Fortune Photoplays," the series based on the pick of the stories that have appeared and will appear in the famous Street & Smith group of magazines. Commencing early in March, one of these four-reel features will be issued weekly. General Film feels that this series is the most important ever announced for release by the company and is sure that exhibitors will welcome it with delight. The titles of the first eight pictures are as follows: "The Inspirations of Harry Larrabee," "Mentioned in Confidence," "The Devil's Bait," "The Main Spring," "The Yellow Bullet," "Clean Gun," "The Vengeance of the Dead" and "The Best Man."

Particular attention is called to "The Inspirations of Harry Larrabee," the first release of "Fortune Photoplays." This picture, based on a story by Howard Fielding, published in "The Popular," created a sensation when it appeared and will undoubtedly duplicate this record on the screen. It contains enough action to make several ordinary length pictures. Margaret Landis, the lead, is faithful to her character throughout. Clifford Gray, in his portrayal of the shy Mary, does a masterful piece of acting. Other members of the cast are Winifred Greenwood, Frank Brownlee and William Ehfe.

In choosing this as the first of the great series, General Film feels that by its acting, its photography and its dramatic power, this drama is well fitted to stand as an example of the quality of those to come.

FIRST "CONQUEST" PICTURES MARCH 1.

It is announced by Thomas A. Edison, Inc., that the first five-reel group of pictures to be shown under the Edison Conquest Pictures brand will be released on Thursday, March 1. This date will mark the beginning of a well-defined effort to provide a program of pictures that, while retaining all of the elements that have made the photoplay such a popular form of amusement, will be entirely devoid of features that may be considered objectionable. Sponsored by one of the first companies that entered the motion picture field, and that always has been noted for the cleanness of its productions, the project promises to inaugurate a new era in the business and art of photoplay. The success of the movement is assured from the start, as already many exhibitors have contracted for the service. W. W. Hodkinson will supervise the marketing of Conquest Pictures, and the complete details of the method of release of the new productions will soon be announced.

MARGARITA FISCHER FEATURE POSTPONED.

The fourth of the Margarita Fischer series of Mutual Star Productions, "The Devil's Assistant," scheduled for release on March 5, has been postponed until April 2. This has afforded the Mutual Film Corporation an opportunity to use this date for the release of "The Girl From Rector's," a film version of the Broadway success which in dramatic form had a record-breaking run at Weber's Theater, New York City. Ruth McTammany plays the lead in the film story, many scenes of which are taken at Rector's famous restaurant in New York City.

A Review of the Wonderful Development of the Film Producing Industry on the Pacific Coast—Recent News of Some of the Big Plants

By G. P. von Harleman

IN the early spring of 1908 the late Frank Boggs, at the head of a company of players, blazed the pioneer trail to the Pacific Coast by establishing for Colonel William N. Selig a motion picture studio at the corner of Seventh and South Olive streets, in Los Angeles. It wasn't much of a place, and a camera, a few lights and some painted scenery were about the entire equipment. In the party were James L. McGee, Thomas Santschi, James Crosby, Harry Todd, Gene Ward and Mrs. Boggs. Mr. Santschi and Mrs. McGee are still in the employ of Mr. Selig here, the former being a featured player and the latter western representative and general manager for the Selig enterprises on the coast.

The Selig company has now two studios in Los Angeles. One is located in Edendale, and at the present time leased by the Keystone. The other is the Eastlake Park Zoo. This is one of the show places in Los Angeles. It covers thirty-two acres of ground and is situated in Mission Road, opposite picturesque Eastlake Park. The Chicago film manufacturer has here one of the largest animal collections in the United States, including many rare specimens. The entrance to the Zoo is beautiful. The design was executed by Carlos Romanelli, an Italian sculptor, and the figures of the animals on the pedestal between the gates were modeled from beasts within the grounds.

Matching the entrance in striking and imposing appearance is the home of the lions and tigers. It is mission style, the great patio in well kept lawn. The home of the elephants, some distance away, is in the same style of architecture. So, too, is the large amusement pavilion. There are many buildings on the grounds, among them the costume rooms, special storage structures, monkey pavilion, animal cages, bear houses, and the many buildings devoted to the sheltering of birds large and small.

The Selig Zoo is one of the playgrounds of Los Angeles. During the summer time merry picnickers invade the place and local organizations hold festivals with many thousand people participating. Mr. Selig adds to his large animal collection whenever he has the opportunity, and before the war he used to buy animals from all parts of the world, and receive several times a year large shipments from Hagenbeck, in Hamburg, and Jarmack, in London. The only place now left open is Australia and the East Indies. The Zoo received a large shipment of valuable animals from Australia recently, including several kangaroos and many beautiful birds. Another recent addition to the Zoo was a collection of fifty peacocks.

The studio part of the Selig Polyscope Company is at the extreme rear end of the Park, separated from the public grounds by artistic walls, replicas of the great city walls of ancient times. Near the stages are large concrete dressing rooms. In the rear of the stages are the extensive carpenter shops, property rooms and quarters for the scenic artists. In the garage are numbered stalls, each employee—official, director, actor or other—owning a machine having his or her individual storage place. Along the southern side are the corrals for the animals other than those in the category of the wild sort. There are stables for the ponies and the many horses; here, too, are quartered a dozen or more camels.

Colonel Selig operates at the present time two companies in Los Angeles, and two large productions are now being filmed. Director Colin Campbell is producing a large feature treating the question of capital punishment, the temporary title of which is "Who Shall Take My Life?" The picture probably will be in eight reels. The cast includes Fritz Brunette, Tom Santschi, Bessie Eyton, Eugenie Besserer, Harry Lonsdale and Al Filson. Director Al Green is producing another large picture, the title of which is "Little Lost Sister," from a story by Virginia Brooks. Several pretentious sets were built for this picture. The cast includes Vivian Reed, Bessie Eyton, Marion Warner, Joe Singleton and Will Aitken.

N. Y. M. P. Comes to Coast in 1909.

The next company to reach the Pacific Coast was the New York Motion Picture Corporation. As a matter of preliminary history, it might be of interest to mention that the inception of this large film manufacturing enterprise dates back to 1908, when Adam Kessel, Jr., Charles Kessel and Charles O. Baumann pooled their assets, which were extremely thin, and undertook to produce single reel pictures at a tiny studio at Coytesville, N. J. Kessel & Baumann, in the fall of 1909, dispatched a company of seventeen to Los Angeles, to continue the work of filming the one-reelers, which, incidentally, were known by the brand name of "Bison." Fred J. Balshofer was cameraman and general manager, and those under his supervision included J. Barney Sherry, Charles K. French (both of whom still are with the company), Jane Darrell, Evelyn Graham, William Edwards, William Gibbons, Charles Avery, Charles Inslee, James Youngdeer and Red Wing. The company established itself in the suburb of Edendale, on a tract of land graced only by a four-room bungalow and a barn. This same tract, since then considerably extended, is now the site of the Keystone producing plant.

The first picture turned out of the new plant was of an Italian nature, and its scenes were made in and about the orange groves of Pasadena. Then attention was directed at the making of Indian and military plays, for which there was a growing demand throughout the country. Kessel & Baumann enlarged their facilities from week to week. It was not long before the weekly expenditures of the organization approximated $1,500. Of this amount about $600 was spent for salaries.

About two years after the establishment of the company at the Edendale plant, Kessel & Baumann engaged Thomas H. Ince in New York and sent him to the coast to direct. Ince made only two or three single-reelers at the Edendale studio. Shortly after his arrival he had "discovered" the 18,000-acre ranch in the Santa Monica mountains, and obtained possession of it. This is now known as Inceville.

Upon Ince's arrival on the coast Balshofer relinquished to him the directorial reins and himself assumed the position of business manager. Thereupon there began a renewed campaign of expansion. Ince engaged more actors, built several structures on the Inceville domain and, in general, undertook to improve conditions in every respect. Among those who were associated with the organization about this time and some prior to it were such well-known figures as Charles Giblyn, Francis Ford, Burton King, Ethel Grandin, Frank Montgomery, Harold Lockwood, Edna Maison and Anna Little.

Following the making of several single-reel plays at Inceville Ince decided to introduce an innovation by offering to the market a "feature." So he produced "War on the Plains," a thrilling Indian drama, the length of which was two reels. It proved a success and he made another, "Custer's Last Fight." Then followed more Indian two-reelers, with an occasional Irish or Dutch picture intervening.

It chanced that as Ince moved to Inceville the entire personnel and equipment of the "Miller Brothers' 101 Ranch Show" arrived in Southern California to hibernate. Ince contracted with the Miller Brothers for the use of the entire outfit. The number of weekly productions was increased from one to two two-reelers, and the "Kay-Bee" brand was inaugurated. Still later "Domino" came into being.

With the termination of its contract with the Mutual program and the attendant organization of the Triangle Film Corporation the company planned the construction of what is now generally regarded as one of the most completely equipped and handsomest motion picture producing plants in the country—the Ince Studios at Culver City, where the Triangle-Kay Bee plays are filmed. Plans for this institution were drawn in the summer of 1915 and in the Spring of 1916 the plans became the new headquarters for the company.

Biograph Came West for One Picture.

The Biograph was the next company to reach Los Angeles, arriving here in January, 1910. At this time it only remained thirteen weeks. Among the party were General Manager Hammer, D. W. Griffith, director, and Lee Dougherty. The first studio was at Washington street and Grand avenue. The company undertook the trip for the express purpose of filming "Ramona" in authentic locations. The Biograph sent companies to the coast every year until 1916, when producing activities were suspended.

Fine Arts Studio.

Essanay a Pioneer, Too.

An Essanay company of players under Gilbert M. Anderson left Chicago on Sept. 8, 1909, stopping at Denver, El Paso and Santa Barbara. In 1910 a company was located at Niles, Cal. Essanay at present is not producing on the coast. The studio at Niles has been closed for more than a year, and the Los Angeles studio was abandoned when Charlie Chaplin went with Mutual. V. R. Day, special representative of the Essanay Film Company, is now at Los Angeles, where are being taken scenes for a feature production. The company is occupying the old studios of the Culver City Film Company at Culver City. The production is under direction of Dave Hartford. When the picture is finished Mr. Day will return to Chicago.

Kalem Centering Activity at Glendale.

In November, 1910, William Wright, now treasurer of the Kalem Company, came to Los Angeles to establish a studio.

Panorama View of Selig Zoo

Mr. Wright found the ideal site in Glendale, and in picturesque Verdugo Canyon he built Kalem's first Western studio.

In addition to building the outdoor studio in 1910, one of Wright's tasks was to put up a log cabin for Kalem's Indian thrillers. There were no logs to be had. Mr. Wright sought the aid of William H. Clune and together they located a number of telegraph poles sufficient to build the cabin. The poles were transported several hundred miles.

In December, 1910, Kalem's first California company arrived from New York. Headed by Kenean Buel, the director, were Alice Joyce, Mr. and Mrs. George Melford, Judson Melford, Jane Wolfe, Frank Lanning, Howard Oswald, Frank Brady, Knute Rahmn and Daisy Smith.

Early in 1911 Carlyle Blackwell and the late William H. West joined Kalem's Glendale company. Kalem, specializing on Western pictures, found the one reel a week from California insufficient to supply the demand. An additional studio was therefore opened at Santa Monica, where Ruth Roland, Marin Sais, Ed Coxen and Marshall Neilan were featured. Later when the Santa Monica company became a comedy organization, John E. Brennan joined the party of fun makers.

George Melford succeeded Kenean Buel as director at the Glendale studio, Buel going to Florida for Kalem, taking with him from New York Miriam Cooper, Anna Nilsson, Guy Coombs and Hal Clements.

In 1913 Kalem moved the Glendale studio from the Verdugo Canyon location to the present site on Verdugo Road. An additional studio was built at Hollywood, with Carlyle Blackwell directing. Then Marshal Neilan came to Hollywood to direct a Kalem comedy company. Neilan introduced Lloyd V. Hamilton and Bud Duncan, "Ham" and "Bud."

J. P. McGowan came West, after directing at Kalem's New York studio, and produced "The Hazards of Helen," featuring Helen Holmes.

In 1914, James W. Horne succeeded George Melford as director, Horne's first work being "The Girl Detective" series, which he followed with "Mysteries of the Grand Hotel," "Stingaree," "The Social Pirates," and "The Girl From Frisco." At present Mr. Horne is directing "The American Girl" series.

Helen Gibson, who followed Miss Holmes in the railroad series, "A Daughter of Daring," then joined the Kalem ranks and carried the subject into its third year.

In December, 1916, Phil Lang, editor for Kalem since 1911, came to Glendale, to work in intimate touch with the producers. Mr. Lang was joined later by Mr. Wright, again on an investigating expedition. Additional acreage was secured at Glendale on a long lease and the work of building a big interior studio and doubling the outdoor stage space was begun, under the direction of Storm V. Boyd, Jr., for eight years Kalem's technical director.

Kalem's New Interior Studio Under Construction at Glendale

Mr. Lang, manager of production, still acts as scenario editor, with the assistance of Frank Howard Clark and William Piggot, formerly editor for American.

Kalem is transferring to Glendale from the Hollywood studio, which they have disposed of, the Ham comedy company, directed by Al Santell, and "The Daughter of Daring" company, featuring Helen Gibson, directed by Scott Sidney. "The American Girl" series and the "Stingaree" series are being produced, while every facility has been prepared for the "Grant, Police Reporter," series company, featuring George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby, under the direction of Robert Ellis, this Kalem organization heretofore working in Jacksonville, Florida.

Horsley Hollywood's First Comer.

David Horsley's Nestor forces were the first motion picture players to invade Hollywood, Mr. Horsley renting buildings for studio purposes at the corner of Sunset boulevard and Gower street and occupying them in October, 1911. He was also the first manufacturer to bring three companies to California. These were under Thomas Ricketts, producing dramas; Milton Fahrney, westerns, and Al E. Christie, comedies. On May 20 following the company was merged with the Universal.

David Horsley's new Los Angeles studios, at Main and Washington streets, are now completed. The buildings and yard cover an acre of 300x350 feet, situated directly in the rear of the Bostock Arena and Jungle, the park in which the Bostock animals are quartered.

There is an arena 144 by 144 feet surrounded by walls twenty feet high, built to take only animal pictures. This arena is constructed like a great hexagon, the camera being mounted in the middle at the apex of six triangles, which spread away to the circumference, like so many enormous fans.

The director and the cameraman are stationed on a concrete platform in the center of this arena, from which place one camera can cover all parts of the arena from one setting. The housing for the camera is made of reinforced concrete.

Christie Studios.

It is surrounded by a moat, six feet wide and four feet deep, filled with water and crossed by the dividing fences. By plunging into the water and coming to the surface on the other side of the fence the players who work face to face with the animals without intervening bars can easily escape in case of attack.

Each of the sections is planted with typical trees and shrubs, vines and grasses that give the character of the location to pictures—that is, bears, panthers and pumas have Rocky Mountain and general North American scenes, while lions, tigers leopards, kangaroos and like animals are shown in their native wilds, away into a purple distance; huge, misshapen ledges of rock with a broken sandy foreground complete the picture of desolation. By a clever device, this last arena is so managed that in a few moments the background can be changed to a marine view and other effects.

Lying immediately west of the arena are the property rooms of the stage proper, in connection with half of the scene dock. The property room is on the east end of the stage, which is 70x140 feet, and spanned by sixteen structural steel trusses which carry the diffusers and canvas roof. This roofing and the diffusers are operated by means of geared shafting. The floor is constructed of the best material, laid on concrete foundations so as to do away with all vibration. Adjoining the steel work on the west end of the stage is the other half of the scene dock, public dressing rooms, lavatories, etc. These rooms are equipped with all modern facilities, including lockers, dressers, electric lights, etc., and are ventilated from above by skylights as well as by openings at either end of the room.

The stage and arena offer accommodation for six companies in addition to the facilities it provides for making animal pictures. The Horsley studios are at the present time operating two companies. One is under the direction of Milton H. Fahrney, featuring George Ovey in one-reel comedies, the other under the direction of Crane Wilbur, who also plays the lead in five-reel productions.

Universal Grows Fast in Two Years.

The Universal, as before stated, took over the Nestor studio on May 20, 1912. On July 12 following the company acquired the great plot of ground across the street, now the home of the L-KO Company. The next month William H. Swanson, then treasurer of the company, leased 1,299 acres at the end of San Fernando Valley, adjoining Griffith Park, and now known as the old ranch. In August, 1914, the company gave up this property, destroying the structures for picture purposes, and moved to the present site, ground for building on which had been broken the previous day. Early in 1915 the Universal again acquired the old ranch and still holds it. Carl Laemmle in the spring of 1912 made pictures for his

Portion of Studio of American Film Co. (Inc.), Santa Barbara.

Imp brand at a studio on Brooklyn Heights, but abandoned the plant on the organization of the Universal. Universal City was formally opened in March, 1915.

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, turned the golden key in the lock of the gate to the entrance to Universal City on March 15, 1915. There were then sixteen producing companies engaged in the manufacture of films, ranging from one to three reels and occasionally a four or five-reel feature.

Panoramic View of Ince

Since then Universal City has grown by leaps and bounds, the laboratories having tripled in size, the production, technical, art, property and wardrobe buildings having expanded, and the stage space, both exterior and interior, has increased more than fourfold.

Today between twenty-five and thirty companies are at work day and night to keep up with the demand for Universal films, and the cost of production of the photoplays, forty reels of which are turned out weekly, easily has tripled the cost of two years ago.

"The making of our plays for the screen," said General Manager H. O. Davis, "means an annual expenditure of fully $3,000,000. If these plays were made in the unsystematic way that formerly prevailed it is safe to say that a million dollars would be tacked on to this sum. By the methods now in operation at Universal City we know just how each dollar is to be spent and each dollar that goes into the picture renders its entire value in the production of the play, whether it be a single-reeler or a five or six-reel feature production.

"There is a thorough understanding regarding the cost among the directors, the production manager, the technical department and the superintendent of photoplay before the actual picturization of the play begins, and so perfect is this understanding and so harmoniously do all the parties concerned work in the making of the play that frequently the picture is completed several hundred dollars under the amount allowed for its production.

William Fox Hollywood Studios.

"What is the value of the Universal City plant at the present time? With the improvements that have been made during the past year—electric light studios and additional equipment, laboratory additions and new stages—I should say that the Pacific Coast studios of the company and the 230 acres upon which they are located represent a value of several millions.

"The greatest stage space in the world is to be found at Universal City, amounting to 175,000 square feet, occupying something like four acres. There is ample room for fifty companies to work with comfort even with unusually large settings for their productions."

Universal City, in addition to the regular departments to be found at any motion picture studio, maintains a thoroughly equipped hospital, a police department, a fire department, several restaurants, garages, and a zoo complete in every respect. Lions, leopards, tigers, elephants, jaguars and other beasts of the jungle are all trained thoroughly and frequently and are used in photoplays where wild animals are required.

H. O. Davis is vice president of the Universal company and general manager of Universal City; E. G. Patterson, secretary; H. R. Hough, controller; O. L. Sellers, production manager; S. C. Burr, assistant production manager; Eugene B. Lewis, scenario editor; Eugenie Magnus Ingleton, scenario editress; George W. Elkins, cashier; H. H. Barter, technical director; John M. Nickolaus, superintendent of photography; Edward Ullman, chief of cameramen; Dr. Lloyd B. Mace, in charge of hospital; George Ingleton, librarian; Marshall Stedman, engaging director; M. G. Jonas, publicity manager; L. H. Buell, purchasing agent.

Keystone Nearly Five Years on Coast.

Production of Keystone pictures began on July 4, 1912, on which date Mack Sennett took a small party of players, including Mabel Normand and Ford Sterling, to Fort Lee, N. J. Sennett had been working as an actor and a director of comedy films in another company. Kessel and Baumann were friends of his, and the idea occurred to them that Sennett should branch out and use his intellectual resources for his own profit.

At that period it looked very easy and simple. As far as they could see, all you had to do in order to launch a motion picture company was to buy a camera, employ actors, stick the party of the second part in front of the party of the first, turn the crank and—well, there you were!

Studios, Culver City, Cal.

They had not got far into the business before they realized what appalling odds they were up against. They scraped together what little money they could get hold of and began taking their first pictures. Their eyes, even at that time, were on California as a studio location; but they couldn't raise the price. Wherefore they decided to take the first Keystone comedies at Fort Lee.

Mabel Normand was engaged as the first leading woman. The first day they started out in grand style in a hired automobile. They found a good-natured man over at Fort Lee who loaned them his house. The interior of the house was too dark to take pictures and there were no lights available. As he simply had to have an interior, Sennett moved his friend's furniture out on the lawn and took the "interior" there.

When he came to settle the automobile bill that first day Sennett had to dig up twenty dollars. As the whole payroll of the company only amounted to fifteen dollars at that time, they decided they would have to cut out the automobile. Thereafter the little Keystone company plodded out to work every day in the street cars. And when the actors got to the end of the street car line they went on the human hoof. The cameraman carried the camera over his shoulder and the actors packed the props on their backs. Being very husky by nature, Sennett took to himself the honor and distinction of carrying most of the scenery on his own back.

The poor little Keystone company speedily became the butt of the town. One day an actor rolled by in a big automobile gayly decorated with "chickens." As the Keystone actors climbed hastily into the gutter to avoid being rolled over, the actor sang out "How's the walking, Mack?"

Some time later, when Sennett was the proprietor of twenty comedy companies and was running between thirty and forty automobiles every day, that same actor came around to the studio and asked for a job. In the interval he had accumulated some very intimate information about walking. He knew all about walking.

These, however, were but incidents. There was a real tragedy connected with those first Fort Lee pictures.

The first cameraman was a Russian. He looked like a million dollars. He let it be generally understood that he invented the art of photography and that he had to leave Europe because the kings threatened to go to war with each other to see which should get him as court photographer. He insinuated that the filming of pictures was so easy for him that he generally wrote a book about something while he was turning the crank. He talked about cameras in such technical terms that no one could understand him; in fact, he couldn't understand himself. Naturally Sennett let him have his own way about the photography part and trusted his judgment.

The circumstances were such that they were not able to see their first picture at once. The first film was sent to the factory for development; meanwhile they went ahead and produced five more comedies.

When they went proudly over to the factory to see their first picture run off a crushing disappointment awaited them. The Russian cameraman had turned the crank less than half fast enough. The figures in the comedy looked like jumping marionettes. Their entire output of five comedies was spoiled.

At this time they seriously considered the advisability of throwing up the sponge. The only reason they went on was the instinctive horror that any fighting heart has of quitting. They didn't want to go on; but they wouldn't quit. At a very gloomy little business meeting the partners pulled out their watches, yanked out their stickpins and pulled off their rings and put them in a pile in the middle of the table. The accumulated pile was "hocked" for funds to enable the little company to make the trip to California.

In September, 1912, Mack Sennett and his players came to Los Angeles and took possession of the studio that had been the original site of the Bison company. The older division of the New York Motion Picture Corporation had removed to Santa Ynez Canyon near the end of 1911. It wasn't much of a studio. A vacant lot, a couple of dilapidated sheds and a rickety stage were about all. Mack Sennett did most of the work himself. He wrote all the scenarios, lent a hand with the scenery, acted as telephone girl and gateman most of the time. After the day's work as an actor, he came back at night and cut film until early morning.

When Sennett's first California comedy was sent east the verdict was quick and positive. It was punk. Nobody would buy it.

With bulldog tenacity he struggled on. Finally he landed with a comedy in which he had no faith and which was a careless makeshift affair. A Grand Army of the Republic convention happened to be in Los Angeles. Without any very definite idea in mind, Sennett had his cameraman take pictures of this parade. From another company he bought some cast-off battle pictures. He rigged up one of his comedians as a soldier, had him dash in and out of some smoke from a smudge pot and make up a ramshackle comedy out of it. For some reason or other, this was an instant hit. The East demanded more like it.

The Keystone found itself all of a sudden on the map.

The demand for Keystone comedies soon became so great that the one little company couldn't meet the demand. Another company became absolutely necessary. Where were they to get a director and how were they to pay for a director?

Mabel Normand threw herself into the breach. She offered to direct a company herself. Miss Normand, accordingly, became the first woman director of comedies. The actors who worked in her first company say there were occasionally some wild scenes. She was not what you call a phlegmatic director, but she was a good one.

When the Keystone once got going its rise was rapid. Today the open air stages of the Keystone Film Company cover five acres. In addition to this are buildings of wood, brick and concrete, housing all the industries to be found in the average city of several thousand population, including a five-story planing mill and restaurant.

Another feature of the Mack Sennett Keystone studios is the big open air plunge, which is electrically heated. When not in use for pictures it is at the disposal of the actors, who may bathe in it whenever they desire. A modern cafeteria is conducted by the company. Here everybody employed at the plant may obtain the best of food at prices considerably lower than are demanded downtown.

In the planing mill is made everything from patrol wagons to the various sections of Swiss-chalet bungalows and skyscrapers. The painters supply the realistic touches, which are given finish by wall paper and designers' department. All kinds of mechanical devices are made in the machine shops, and in the big garage the scores of autos used in the Keystone's activities are housed and kept in repair. Many touches of humor are added to the comedies by the sign painters' staff. The plumbing department is kept busy providing water and sewerage connections wherever necessary.

Separate buildings are maintained for the general offices, scenario and publicity departments and for other activities allied with the manufacture of motion pictures.

The studios compose quite a city within a city, thriving with industry and giving employment to more than a thousand people, in one capacity or another.

Horkheimers Have Been Manufacturing Five Years.

H. M. Horkheimer came to Southern California in 1912. He was a showman of a varied career in all lines of the amusement business, from ticket seller for a circus to producing manager for the legitimate stage.

At the time, most theatrical men were seeking to discredit photodrama, but Horkheimer thought he saw a future for screen entertainment. On the impulse, without knowing the first thing about picture making—he hadn't even seen a cinematographic camera up to that time—he decided to get into the business for himself.

It was just about the time when others were plunging in. The fact that his total capital was only $7,000 did not deter Mr. Horkheimer. Having decided to become a photoplay producer he wasn't long in finding a studio—or what was called one in those days. It was a small affair which had just been vacated by the Edison company under J. Searle Dawley. It consisted of one small building and a platform 25 by 75 feet which served for a stage. Under the one roof were the dressing rooms, offices, carpenter shops, laboratory, property departments and the half dozen other necessary adjuncts—in miniature, of course.

On invoicing, it was found that the place was shy about everything needed to make picture. So a lot of paraphernalia was ordered. It came to nine thousand dollars more than "H. M." had. Did it feaze him? Not a minute. He gathered together half a dozen actors, some carpenters and stage hands, a cameraman and a few laboratory assistants and began "to shoot" his first picture. All told, the first week's payroll numbered twelve people and the operating expense totaled about $500.

Today, after three and one-half years, the Balboa studio occupies all four corners of the two intersecting streets where it started. A score of buildings painted uniformly green and white and surrounded by landscape gardening are required to shelter the various departments. The company roster has some three hundred and fifty names as regular employees, of which a third are players.

Not long after he got started H. M. Horkheimer found that he needed assistance. So he invited his brother, Elwood D. Horkheimer, to come west and join him. E. D. accepted and became the company's secretary and treasurer. H. M. Horkheimer is president and general manager.

The original building was soon outgrown. So a piece of property was acquired across the street and on this a modern outdoor stage was erected and supplemented with carpenter shops, scene docks, property rooms and the like. The general offices and scenario department were housed in an adjoining bungalow. Since then the first building has been remodeled and serves now to accommodate the laboratory and wardrobe departments.

Subsequently, these quarters proved even too small. To make room for an inclosed studio the bungalow offices were moved to the third corner across the street. Adjoining thereto, a garage big enough to hold twenty cars was built. Then a papier mache department was added and several large warehouses. The latter give shelter to Balboa's magnificent stock of props and furniture. This studio makes a point of owning everything it uses. It requires a large investment, but is found more economical in the long run than renting.

For some time the fourth corner of Sixth and Alamitos streets was used to erect large sets on, which could not be provided for on the stage. But with the beginning of the new year construction of the finest stage in Southern California was started. It has just recently been completed at a cost of $20,000. It has a hardwood floor and a system of overhead work for controlling the diffusers from a central station. This stage is 200 feet square and will be extended another hundred feet in the near future. It is flanked on one side by a battery of thirteen private offices for directors. On the other side will be twenty of the most modern dressing rooms constructible. In early spring ground is to be broken for a glassed-in studio, 150 by 200 feet, the largest in the industry.

As the Balboa plant stands today it represents an investment of $400,000. Plans have already been matured for further enlargements to be made during the coming year.

Many Buildings at Fine Arts Plant.

What is now known as the Fine Arts Studio at 4500 Sunset Boulevard, Los Angeles, was a residence property five years ago, and was converted into a studio of toy dimensions by a pioneer producing company which soon went broke. The Kinemacolor company next took possession, and after a year or so the Reliance and Majestic companies moved in during the early winter of 1914, and for eighteen months thereafter produced pictures for the Mutual program—the studio being then known as the Reliance-Majestic.

When the new Triangle interests were formed the Majestic Company under the general management of D. W. Griffith became connected with the Triangle Program, and since the summer of 1915 it has produced five-reel Fine Arts pictures at the rate of one completed picture per week.

Three years have now passed since the Majestic organization settled here and it is interesting to note the growth the studio has made. Originally there were only three acres, part of which was covered by an orchard. There was a residence building which was used for offices, dressing rooms and laboratory; one stage 50 by 60 feet; and a small building used for a property room and projection. The payroll then approximated $2,000 a week for the one company in Los Anges; three other companies were also operated in New York, but the expense of them was met independent of the Western studio.

The studio has grown until seven acres are now fully occupied—a veritable city by itself, so complete is the organization. There are now two open-air stages, one 50 by 100 and the other 70 by 200; also two inclosed electric light studios, one with a stage 60 by 70 feet and the other 60 by 120 feet, each equipped with enormous generating units and the stages lighted with the latest type of Cooper-Hewitt, Aristo, Winfield and Majestic lamps.

There are two projecting rooms each equipped with the best known apparatus and equipment for ideal projection. These rooms are for inspection of the film during the progress of the picture or for final study by the directors, film cutters, or title department.

Mabel Normand Studios, Los Angeles, Cal.

The large property rooms, 50 by 60 feet each, take care of the furniture and other props, and recently there has been built a new scene dock 60 by 130 feet centrally located and connected by broad walks with all four stages.

The factory itself is an extensive institution of which little is generally known except to those engaged directly in its operation. The factory buildings contain laboratories, developing, drying and printing rooms, camera rooms and store vaults, and it is possible to handle four hundred thousand feet of negative and positive film a week. Adjoining the factory is a large two-story building where the films are cut, trimmed, spliced and the pictures assembled; and just outside the cutting room are three special inspection rooms, where each commercial print is carefully inspected on a screen before it is shipped.

The Fine Arts Studio also has the mechanical end of the business well provided for by the installation of an up-to-date carpenter shop, an electrician repair shop, camera repair shop, decorators' work shop and supply room, paint shop, etc.

Adjoining the two principal stages are located the buildings in which also are the executive and scenario offices, as well as a school for the education of children used in the pictures. Two buildings are employed for wardrobe and dressmaking establishments. One is a two-story building—the lower floor being used for the reception and storage of special wardrobe for mobs and the upper floor for the double purpose of an extra large rehearsal room and for dressing the mobs. In the other wardrobe building the upper floor is reserved for the use of the modistes and the lower floor for the storage of the vast quantity of wardrobe which has accumulated in the last three years. There are sixty dressing rooms in all, for the accommodation of the stars, stock people and extras.

Two up-to-date heating plants are installed—a steam plant for the factory and cutting rooms, and a gas heating system for the two electric light studios and for the offices.

There are now approximately 350 regular employes, including actors, carpenters and office people, with a payroll averaging about $18,000 a week.

Lasky Studio Is One of the Finest.

Three years ago at this time the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company were at work on their second picture on a little 40 by 60 stage at the rear of a garage on the corner of Vine and Selma streets, Hollywood. Six months ago, having acquired the entire block on which the former garage was located, the Lasky Company took over an entire adjacent city block.

The former garage, which had housed the executive offices and laboratories, has been transferred into a small property room and the business offices moved into a new administration building which extends practically the entire length of the entire block facing Vine street. This building houses the offices of Cecil B. De Mille, director-general; Milton E. Hoffman, studio general manager; Frank G. Garbutt, Pacific Coast general manager; Fred Kley, studio business manager; Kenneth McGaffey, studio publicity representative; W. E. Wales, auditor, and the auditing department; Louis Goodstadt, engaging department; Miss Alpharetta Hoffman, wardrobe department, William C. De Mille, head of the scenario department, and the scenario department, as well as all of the directors and their assistants.

A new glass stage has been erected 60 by 200 feet, and another glass stage of the same length. New carpenter and property construction shops have been built 300 by 100 feet in size.

An addition to the laboratory is contemplated. This building six months ago handled the entire Lasky output, but it is now necessary to work in two shifts, night and day, to fill the demand for Lasky pictures.

The block across the street from the main plant, generally referred to as the "back yard," contains the fourteen garages and all of the exterior sets, such as streets, house fronts and the like.

A new double deck paint frame has been erected, eight times the size of the former paint frame, which a few months ago, at the time of its construction, was the largest on the Pacific Coast. Over 150 new dressing rooms have been built for the stars, members of the organization and the extra people.

At the Morosco-Pallas studios, which are now controlled by the Famous Players-Lasky Company, a new stage is being built and the plant so adjusted that it can handle at least six companies.

From an entire staff of fifteen people three years ago, the Lasky company has now nearly a thousand on its weekly payroll. It has a complete printing plant on the grounds, which is used not only in printing sub-titles, but for preparing all stationery and the like.

From having two automobiles, one of which was the personal property of Cecil B. De Mille, the Lasky Company now has fourteen machines, as well as three auto trucks. At the rear of the garages a complete machine shop has been erected and all repairs are made by an expert mechanic and his force of helpers.

A concrete building has been put up especially for the housing of the transformers for the electricity for lights on the stages and the adjacent yard. Over $7,000 worth of electrical equipment has been built into each of the new stages to supply all the Lasky lighting effects.

In spite of the vast increase in the size of the Lasky studio, none of the efficiency co-operative spirit has been lost—in fact, under Milton E. Hoffman's direction, it has been increased so that now there is really not a delay from any source in the production of Lasky pictures.

William Fox Branching Out.

The Fox Company was one of the latest to establish a studio in Southern California. In December, 1915, a party of Fox players left New York to explore the wild and woolly West. They were headed by William Farnum, who was to star in a series of pictures made on the Coast.

Within a few days after their arrival in Los Angeles they had completed arrangements for taking over the Selig studio in Edendale. Their first production was entitled "Fighting Blood," which was released in February, 1916. When the film arrived East it pleased Mr. Fox so much that he immediately dispatched another company to Los Angeles. This organization was headed by R. A. Walsh as director, with his brother George Walsh as the star.

That was the beginning of the Fox company's work in California. After completing his first picture here, "Blue Blood and Red," R. A. Walsh began the making of the cinemelo-drama, "The Honor System."

The next additions to the Fox directorial staff in the West were Otis Turner, Richard Stanton, Frank Lloyd and William D. Taylor. The dramatic stars working under these supervisors are William Farnum, Dustin Farnum, Gladys Brockwell, George Walsh and Miriam Cooper.

About July, 1916, the Fox Company began the making of comedies. Charles Parrott directed the first organization. Five other comedy companies were quickly added to the list, and among their directors were such well known men as Hank Mann, Tom Mix, Harry Edwards and Walter Reed.

This continued increase had made the Fox organization outgrow the three-quarters of an acre which it occupied in Edendale. Abraham Carlos, general representative of the company, had meanwhile arrived from New York and he immediately took steps to find a larger field of operation. The studio of the National Drama Corporation in Hollywood was leased and a fifteen acre lot opposite it on Western avenue was also taken over. Here an enormous glass studio, an inclosed studio and six open air stages have been built, while a large area of ground at the rear is used for "sets." A four-acre tract near Silver Lake and six acres in the San Fernando Valley for exterior locations have also been taken over.

In little more than a year the William Fox Studio in California has grown from an organization covering less than an acre of ground, and employing about thirty persons, to one which covers thirty acres and pays a weekly salary to more than 500 persons. Instead of the single company which ventured from New York at the end of 1915, the corporation now employs twelve companies of actors.

Mutual Has Three Los Angeles Studios.

The Mutual Film Corporation operates at the present time three studios in Los Angeles, the Signal, Vogue, Lone Star, and also one in Santa Barbara, the American. The American Studio is one of the most beautiful plants on the Coast. The property comprises a great plot of ground surrounded by a large wall of cream-colored concrete, banked with masses of flowers and shrubbery. All the buildings are in mission style and surrounded by a semi-tropical garden. The plant has been in operation since July, 1912, when a company of "Flying A" cowboys with their cameramen and directors came from La Mesa, Cal., and permanently located in the quaint old city. The American is at the present time operating three companies producing large feature productions.

The Signal Film Corporation and the Vogue Films, Inc., started production in Los Angeles in October, 1915. Both of the companies were then located at the old Western Lubin studios, at 4560 Pasadena avenue. The Signal Film Corporation is under direction of J. P. McGowan and is making a specialty of railroad pictures. Miss Helen Holmes is the featured player, supported by a cast including Leo Maloney, William Brunton, Thomas G. Lingham and Paul C. Hurst. A second company under the direction of J. Murdock McQuarrie was operated in 1915 for a short while, producing five-reel dramas. The McGowan company has produced three large serials of thirty reels each. The first of these was "The Girl and the Game," the second "The Lass of the Lumberlands" and the third is now under production, "The Railroad Raiders." The company has only on one occasion deviated from its specialty of railroad pictures and produced a five-reel drama entitled "The Diamond Runners," which was taken on a trip last year to Honolulu. It may be of interest to mention that the company still is employing the identically same cast with which it started production.

The Vogue Films, Inc., moved to its own studio at Santa Monica Boulevard and Gower street in the early part of 1916. The company is producing two-reel comedies only. The Vogue operates two companies, one under direction of Rube Miller, with Ben Turpin and Gypsy Abbot as featured stars. R. E. Williamson is directing the other company, with Patsy McGuire and Lillian Hamilton. S. S. Hutchinson, president of American, is also president of the Signal and Vogue companies.

Carl Laemmele and H. O. Davis Talking Things Over at Universal City.

The Lone Star Film Company is the third studio operated by the Mutual Film Corporation. Charlie Chaplin, the world famous comedian, is the lone star of this company. The studios are at 1025 Lillian Way, in Hollywood.

Yorke-Metro Situated in Hollywood.

The Yorke-Metro studios, of which Fred J. Balshofer is the president and general manager, started production in Los Angeles in 1916. The studios are at 1329 Gordon street in Hollywood. Mr. Balshofer is now producing five-reel features, with Harold Lockwood and May Allison as featured stars. The company is at present producing two features, "The Hidden Children," directed by Oscar Apfel, and "The Promise," under Mr. Balshofer. Charles P. Stallings is assistant director, Tony Gaudio the chief cinematographer, and Clark Irvine, formerly of the Moving Picture World, is manager of the publicity department. Mr. Balshofer is one of the pioneer producers on the Pacific Coast, and as previously mentioned was at the head of a company of players sent to California in 1909 by the New York Motion Picture Corporation. Later Mr. Balshofer organized the "101" company with the Miller Brothers, the Ford Sterling Company with Universal, and then the Quality Pictures Corporation, with Francis X. Bushman.

Christie a Long Time Coast Producer.

Al E. Christie is another pioneer producer. Away back in October, 1911, he was sent by David Horsley to Los Angeles with three companies of players which at that time included Dorothy Davenport, Harold Lockwood, Victoria Forde, Eugenie Forde, Russell Bassett, Horace Davey, Gordon Sackville, Leo Maloney, and Directors Thomas Ricketts and Milton Fahrney. In addition to directing the comedy company Mr. Christie acted as general manager of the plant, which they located at the corner of Sunset Boulevard and Gower street. This corner is still practically the pivotal center of the industry in Hollywood.

The first pictures were made without diffusers in the shadow of a barn then on the premises, while an old roadhouse on the corner housed the actors, offices, laboratory and all equipment. Where one of the new stages recently added by Mr. Christie now stands was the corral where upward of fifty horses were often kept for Western pictures, one of which was turned out each week in addition to the comedy produced by Mr. Christie and a modern drama.

The Nestor brand covered all three types of pictures at that time. When the Nestor became part of the newly-formed Universal (in June, 1912) Al E. Christie was given charge of the comedy companies. At the time of the merger Universal also leased and built on the opposite corner (where L-Ko now stands). Mr. Christie worked for some time on that lot, and this was the scene of his activities until March, 1915, when Universal City was opened, at which time a special stage was constructed for his comedy companies in that big plant. He remained there until January, 1916, when with his brother, Charles H. Christie, he formed the Christie Film Company and leased, from Quality Pictures Corporation, the original lot which had seen his early successful endeavors. The first six months the newly formed company made comedies on contract for Universal, and these were distributed under the old Nestor brand. In May, 1916, Fred L. Porter, a man of experience in the film business, was added as secretary of the company. In July the same year Mr. Christie entered the open market with a weekly comedy release to independent exchanges. The studio, lands, buildings, etc., were purchased outright in October last year and the stage capacity has been nearly doubled since that time, as well as an up-to-date laboratory being installed.

At present one one-reel comedy is released each week and in addition two special comedies of two-reel length are released each month. Two companies are at all times active, one under Mr. Christie's direction and the other under Horace G. Davey, featuring Miss Betty Compson and Miss Billie Rhodes.

W. H. Clune, local theater magnate, entered the film-producing field in the summer of 1915. The Clune Film Producing Company, of which Mr. Clune is the president and Lloyd Brown general manager, acquired the studios of the Famous Players and started production on large feature films. The first subject was a twelve-reel picturization of Helen Hunt Jackson's famous California classic "Ramona." Then followed an adaptation of Harold Bell Wright's popular novel, "The Eyes of the World," which recently has enjoyed a phenomenal run at Clune's Auditorium in Los Angeles, and the company is now preparing for another large multiple feature, "The Shepherd of the Hills," by the same author.

Other film companies at the present time producing in or around Los Angeles are L-Ko, Monogram, Rolin, Corona, Frieder, Continental, Monrovia Feature Film, Bernstein

Film Productions, La Salle Film Company, E. & R. Jungle, Problem, Sierra Photoplay, Redlands Beauty Films, Fuji Yama Features, Nevada, and the Lincoln.

Biggest Industry of Southern California.

The motion picture business is the largest single industry in Southern California. It is conservatively estimated that the motion picture companies in and around Los Angeles spend more than $30,000,000 a year. Probably more than 20,000 people are more or less permanently employed by these companies. It is said the city of Los Angeles does not fully appreciate the motion picture people. About a year ago the producers were so dissatisfied with conditions here that many of the studios were contemplating a move to more congenial surroundings. The matter of censorship was then one of the burning topics, and the film producers objected most strenuously to having the one city in the United States which benefits most from the motion picture industry mutilate their productions and thereby set a bad example for other communities.

It has been recorded in this paper at length how the producers formed the Producers' Association and in conjunction with the exhibitors, headed by J. A. Quinn, completely annihilated the censor board and abolished censorship in Los Angeles.

The producers have been annoyed in many other ways by red tape regulations and by unfriendly newspaper criticism. When many of the film companies threatened to leave conditions became better and things were running satisfactorily for many months. Now trouble seems to have started again. Local merchants, it is stated, are holding up the picture companies for exorbitant prices on props and furniture, so the producers are now contemplating building a factory and manufacturing their own stuff.

The little city of Hollywood, a suburb of Los Angeles, where most of the studios are located, has also shown a peculiarly unfriendly attitude of late. The non-film residents of the burg have gone on record as making a petition to the city council that motion picture studios are more or less of a nuisance and should be restricted in a zone by themselves. This attitude is unexplainable and different from that of other communities in California and elsewhere who even offer large bonuses for picture companies to locate with them.

It is a well known fact, however, that nobody is a prophet in his own country, but who will be so foolish as to kill the goose that laid the golden egg?

Australian Notes

A DEPUTATION representing the Federated Picture Showmen's Association of Australasia waited upon Chief Secretary Fuller this week, on the subject of film censorship.

W. Barrington Miller (Union Theaters, Ltd.) said the deputation represented over five hundred theaters. The association had no desire to show films that were in any way undesirable, but wished to avoid as far as possible any difference of opinion between the public and the censors as to what was desirable. It was hoped that whatever censorship was ultimately decided upon would be national in character, and conceived on broadly democratic lines.

Mr. Howe, secretary of the association, read a statement setting forth what he said were the opinions of practically the whole of the picture interests of Australia, and also the views of most of their patrons. The showmen had no hostility toward a censorship. They would welcome a system whereby all exhibitors would be placed on the one footing, and the public protected against objectionable and vulgar productions, but they strongly opposed any scheme of censorship which did not include finality. Experience had proved that it was impossible to obtain uniformity of action by state censors. There were already several occasions on which the censor in one state had passed a film, while the censor in another state had banned it.

Mr. Fuller replied that he had purposely made the New South Wales board exclusively official, so as to review on as widely democratic lines as possible. He had no desire to do any harm to the picture theaters, but felt it his duty to protect young people against the influence of undesirable films.

In connection with the foregoing paragraph, Mr. Hughes (Prime Minister) states that he will try to give effect to the proposal to form a Federal Censorship of films in place of the various state censorships which exist at present.

* * *

The Clement Mason Cine Company has made out a good case for a review of the censorship in connection with its film, "The Unborn," which has been banned in New South Wales, though it is being screened in the other states. The company contends that it has taken every reasonable step to exclude objectionable matter, and that the film, which was considered by the censor board to be undesirable for the public view, is actually valuable from a moral standpoint.

* * *

The Co-operative Film Exchange opened the new year with a trade showing at Hoyt's theater, Sydney, this week. The two pictures shown were "The Conquest of Canaan" (Frohman) and "The Hand of the Law" (Moss). Both of these productions are part of the new services secured by Alec B. Hellmrich while in America.

* * *

There is growing dissatisfaction over the daylight saving scheme, which came into operation on the first of this month. It has especially hit the suburban and country exhibitors very hard, as fully 75 per cent of the theaters are only partially covered in or entirely open-air. Under the new scheme the daylight lasts until nine o'clock, and only shows with very powerful machines can screen a satisfactory picture before half-past eight. This condition, together with the heat wave now being experienced throughout the country, has caused consternation among the ranks of the showmen, as attendances have dropped tremendously. The weather and the amusement tax have also done their worst for metropolitan theaters, attendances having dropped 20 per cent since the first of the month.

A TRIBUTE

Upon the tenth anniversary of the Moving Picture World, I desire to acknowledge a debt of gratitude to its founder, the late Mr. J. P. Chalmers, for the kind assistance I received from him when I was struggling to enter the motion picture business as an independent producer and but for the advice and information I received from him at that time I might have given up the struggle and would not be celebrating the tenth anniversary of my advent into the art which his publication has done so much for. My one regret is that he is not here with us to see the fruits of his early labors.

"The Birds' Christmas Carol"

From KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN'S famous story, of which more than a Million and a Half Copies Have Been Sold

Produced and Directed by LULE WARRENTON

"The Birds' Christmas Carol" is a story for People of All Ages and all understandings—its appeal is universal. It is full of gentle humor and pathos. It is a story of today. There are scenes that touch the heart, and scenes that cause uproarious laughter.

Mrs. Warrenton has worked with the utmost care to preserve the great charm of Miss Wiggin's story, and to present it with artistry befitting so great a masterpiece. It will delight everybody; the children will be fairly entranced by it.

To be released March 15, 1917, on the

Mutual Program

Schedule for Week of March 5 Headed by "The Girl from Rector's"—Other Good Stuff.

"THE GIRL FROM RECTOR'S" will be the five-reel subject released by the Mutual Film Corporation on March 5. This is in picturization of the comedy by Paul Potter, which in dramatic form ran for more than one hundred consecutive weeks at Weber's Theater, New York City. Ruth Mac-Tammany plays the leading role in this feature, that of a dancer at Rector's cabaret.

Rector's famous restaurant and cabaret furnish the settings for the play and many of the scenes were taken in this world renowned cafe. Mr. Rector himself appears in some of the scenes as an "extra." One of the features of the picture is Rector's celebrated "Midnight Review." There are also many scenes taken on and around Broadway showing the gay life of the "Great White Way."

In "Shorty Traps the Lottery King," No. 8 of the Mutual Featuettes "Adventures of Shorty Hamilton," released March 5, Shorty gets entangled with a band of crooks, who stop at nothing to gain their ends. They find that Shorty is on their trail and try to get rid of him by sending him a number of ingenious devices, any one of which are supposed to end his life, but he escapes and continues his pursuit of Anita Keller. Shorty's dog plays quite a prominent part in this story. Anita and Shorty use the canine as a means of sending private messages to each other concealed in a pocket inside the dog's collar.

Zena Keefe takes the leading role in "The Meeting," the eleventh of the Mutual series "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters." The rest of the cast remains the same as in the ten previous stories, with Arthur Matthews and W. H. Turner taking the leading male parts.

Mr. Matthews and Mr. Turner both assume the role of villains and crooks in this picture and present decidedly different types. Arthur Matthews portrays the crook and blackmailer who preys upon a woman who he knows has married again believing her husband is dead, while in reality he still lives. W. H. Turner gives two characterizations, that of a suave, gentleman crook, and later the same man reduced by drink to a filthy, bedraggled tramp.

On March 8 will be released the Cub comedy, "The Flying Target," featuring George Ovey. This is a Western picture and gains its title from a bandit character who rides a horse which has a target insignia on its head. The bandit forces Jerry to change clothes and mounts and hence many complications ensue. Ray Lincoln, M. J. McCarty and Helen Gilmore also appear in the comedy.

Ben Turpin plays a triple role in "His Bogue Boast," the Vogue comedy released March 10. Mr. Turpin is kept busy impersonating himself, his twin brother and the sheriff. Ben comes to grief in his efforts to be a hero in the eyes of a number of ladies and boasts of his prowess to such an extent that the men can stand it no longer and play a trick on him which proves that he is the worst kind of a coward. Gypsy Abbott, Arthur Moon and Margaret Templeton assist in producing the laughs.

Mutual Tours Around the World.

No. 18 of the "Mutual Tours Around the World," ready for the screen on March 6, will prove especially interesting at this time because of the scenes shown in the countries brought constantly to our notice through the war. The places visited are Munich, the third largest city of Germany; Schonbrunn Castle, near Vienna, the summer home of the Imperial Family; and Rustchuk on the Danube in northern Bulgaria.

Oregon's Coast Line Shown.

On March 7 will be released the Mutual Weekly showing all the latest and most interesting events of the hour, and "See America First," which this week shows "Oregon's Rock Coast Line." The coast of the state of Oregon is one of the beauty spots of America and views are shown of the giant stepping stones at Chapman's Point, Lost Cave at Ecola Point, the Needles, Tillamook Rock, Arch Cape, Castle Rock, Hug Point, Camel Rock and Haystack Rock. The names themselves are descriptive of the shapes into which the wind, water and weather have carved the coast during countless ages.

On the same reel is a Gaumont Kartoon Komic entitled "Rastus Runs Amuck," a quaint little oddity of pickaninny life animated for the screen by Harry Palmer.

Reel Life.

Reel Life No. 45, ready March 8, shows the process through which furs are put in their transition from trapper to wearer; the various methods used in restaurants to stimulate the appetite of the tired business man by amusing him while he is eating; the manufacturing of artistic vases; how pelicans are cared for by the government in two islands reserved for their home off the coast of Florida, and Charlie Chaplin's wobbly walk imitated by a rooster.

CHANGE IN FOX RELEASES.

A change in the releases of Fox Film Corporation advances "Melting Millions," with George Walsh, to February 19. "A Child of the Wild," the new June Caprice subject, originally scheduled for that date, will be sent out on February 26. "The Tiger Woman," a super de luxe production directed by J. Gordon Edwards, is released simultaneously with "Melting Millions."

Australian Base for Famous Players-Lasky

Australia Feature Films, Ltd., Big Distributing Firm, Acquired—Lorimore Tells of Australia's Possibilities.

ANOTHER important stage in the solicitation of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's foreign distribution and another link in the big chain of international activities which that company is conducting, was made when Alec Lorimore, the company's special foreign representative, completed arrangements by which a controlling interest in the Australia Feature Films, Ltd., was acquired. It was several months ago that Mr. Lorimore departed for Australia for the purpose of making an extensive survey of the motion picture conditions in Australia, New Zealand and Tasmania. Following Mr. Lorimore's report to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, it was decided that the producers take over the controlling interest in the Australian Exchange for the purpose of binding it more closely to the home office.

The deal itself is characterized by the local Sydney exhibitors as the biggest film deal that has ever transpired in Australia.

Mr. Lorimore's comments on the film conditions in Australia are illuminating. He reports that the Antipodes are climatically a "second California magnified to the nth power." Every conceivable form of natural phenomena and foliage is to be found there, and Mr. Lorimore characterizes Australia from the physical standpoint as a "Producer's Paradise." The reason for the failure of American producers to establish studios in Australia is explained by the fact that the entire Island Continent is ruled by Labor, and that all legislation tends toward the lightening of the laboring man's burdens. It is estimated by Mr. Lorimore that the cost of labor involved in the maintenance of a big studio in Australia would be almost prohibitive.

At the present time the problems of distribution and exhibition of motion pictures are intensified by numerous taxes incidental to the war. There is a heavy duty and an Amusement Tax on films, which is a direct war tax together with several other levies which make severe inroads upon the exchange man's profits.

As a result of the labor situation already referred to, operators, house staff, and musicians receive considerably higher salaries than those paid in America—all of which tends to complicate the motion picture man's problem in Australia.

However, the country is extremely prosperous, and Mr. Lorimore reports that it is his belief that the possibilities of Australia from a motion picture standpoint have only been vaguely hinted at up to the present time. He anticipates a tremendous increase in business with the closing of the present war, and is now making his plans in order to be prepared to meet this new development in the local situation.

ARROW HAS BIG AD CAMPAIGN.

The Arrow Film Corporation is adopting a most effective system of publicity in connection with its last state rights production, Hall Caine's "The Deemster." Instead of advertising in the trade papers till the picture has been disposed of to territorial interests and then dropping the whole proposition as a closed incident so far as the Arrow Company is concerned, it is taking just the opposite course.

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow, believes that the time to do real advertising work is when he can help his state rights colleagues book the picture, and, in turn, the exhibitor to gain public attention. His first step in carrying out this policy will be to issue the largest rotogravure publication ever printed in connection with any photo-drama. This will consist of five pages. The fifth page, 28x42 inches, will serve as a hanger which the exhibitor may use for preliminary lobby display.

The other four pages will be devoted to the critiques of the trade reviewers who saw the picture at the Strand theater, February 8, to synopsis of the story and cast and to a review of the merits of the picture as an entertainment. It will be sent to every exhibitor, large or small, throughout the United States and Canada. This publication, combined with advertisements in the trade papers, should establish the picture with exhibitors.

LILLIAN WALKER POPULAR IN SHORT SUBJECTS.

General Film's Lillian Walker comedies have been greeted with great popularity by the exhibitors. Branch exchanges have received many inquiries concerning the pictures, and there seems a great deal of interest centered around them. The dimpled star, who has won her way into the hearts of thousands of picture fans with her winning smile, is ever a powerful drawing card, and exhibitors seem to be realizing her great strength in short length subjects.

The second comedy will be "Dimples, the Diplomat," and will afford Miss Walker especial opportunity to charm her audience. She has to charm everybody as "Dimples," for she lives in a family where there is nothing but discord, and her winsome ways bring happiness to all, including herself.

"BROADWAY JONES" RELEASE MARCH 26.

Artcraft Pictures Corporation announces that the release date of George M. Cohan's initial photoplay, "Broadway Jones," has been set ahead a week, and that this production will be shown to the public commencing March 26.

Paramount Offers Two Stars

Marie Doro in a Lasky and Kathlyn Williams in a Morosco Production.

"CASTLES for Two," a Lasky production starring Marie Doro, and "Out of the Wreck," a Morosco production starring Kathlyn Williams, are the two features on the Paramount Program for the week of March 5th. That week, there will also be released the Paramount-Bray Pictographs; the 56th of the series of "Trips Around the World," conducted personally by Burton Holmes, in which he takes his fellow-travelers to Yoko Valley in Canada, and a Black Diamond Comedy entitled "Speed."

"Castles for Two" was written especially for Marie Doro by Beatrice De Mille and Leighton Osmun, and it gives her a wonderful opportunity to display her best talents in the role of a wealthy American girl of Irish descent.

This delightful romance is rendered all the more effective by engaging a number of children to play the roles of fairies, and by the employment of an interior decorator to design all of the interior settings for this production. Although the interior decorator has been permanently engaged by the Lasky Company this is the first production in which his art will be displayed upon the screen.

Director Frank Reicher shows as supporting cast for Miss Doro, a number of prominent players, among them being Elliott Dexter, Maym Kelso, Horace B. Carpenter, Billy Elmer, Jane Wolff, Harriet Sorenson, Lillian Leighton and Julia Jackson.

"Out of the Wreck," is a thrilling slice of real life. The story is based upon an actual incident, in which there is an overabundance of "twist" and "punch," and in which Kathlyn Williams will make a distinct sensation.

Miss Williams is too well known to photodramatic audiences to have her successes enumerated in this brief space. It is entirely by her ability and conscientious effort that she has made for herself the enviable niche in the hall of fame of photodramatic artists. As Agnes Aldrich in "Out of the Wreck," she is seen in one of the most unusual and interesting screen dramas ever presented to the public.

Miss Williams is supported by an unusually excellent cast which includes William Conklin, William Clifford, Stella Razeto, William W. Jefferson and Don Bailey. The method of presenting this story, is absolutely unique. The photography is especially beautiful, and combined with the beauty of the production, goes to make a photodrama of real excellence.

The 56th edition of the Paramount-Bray Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen, contains four very interesting subjects: "Zoological Antics," "Swapping Foundations Under New York Skyscrapers," "Physical Experiments" and how they illustrate the remarkable effect produced by rays of light when thrown through various kinds of lenses, and a cartoon entitled "Colonel Heeza Liar, Detective."

Burton Holmes, the world's greatest traveler in his 57th of the series of "Weekly Trips Around the World," takes his fellow-travelers to "Yoko Valley" in Canada, where he pictures in a unique and interesting manner, the modes of living in this distant section of North America.

"Speed" is the title that is given to the Black Diamond Comedy that is released by Paramount this week, and is significant of what the picture really is. There is more action in this single reel, than has ever been gathered together in a single comedy reel before issued.

LIVE-WIRE EXPLOITATION FOR NEW PICKFORD SUBJECT.

In addition to the usual advertising and publicity material being prepared by the Artercraft Pictures Corporation for the exploitation of Mary Pickford's newest picture, "A Poor Little Rich Girl," arrangements have been made for the output of a special "Mary Pickford Photoplay Edition" of the well known book by Eleanor Gates. The book has become widely popular throughout the country and is known as one of the "best sellers." In fact, it was as a result of the popularity of the book that the subject was produced on the stage, where it registered an immediate hit.

A plan of co-operation which will effect a special sale of the book and at the same time prove valuable advertising for the Artercraft picture has been entered into by the publishers, Messrs. Grosset and Dunlap, and the Artercraft Pictures Corporation. Agents of Grosset and Dunlap are arranging with local book-dealers for special window and advertising displays of the photoplay edition to take effect simultaneously with the presentation of the film. Book-dealers will tie up the sale of the book with the showing of the picture by announcing where the photoplay can be seen, and exhibitors will announce by means of their programs and advertising where copies of the book, which contains as illustrations stills from the photoplay, can be secured.

In addition to this, exhibitors throughout the country are getting in touch with school authorities and women's clubs in connection with the presentation of this picture in that it has particular appeal to these bodies. Several managers have already reported that "Special Nights" in honor of various women's clubs have been arranged for and that morning shows to school-children as well as matinees have been taken over by local school boards.

FITZMAURICE BUSY ON "BLIND MAN'S LUCK" FOR PATHE.

George Fitzmaurice, director of the Gold Rooster Plays "Via Wirelss," "At Bay," "New York," "Arms and the Woman," "Big Jim Garrity," "A Romantic Journey" and "Kick In," is now engaged in making for Pathe "Blind Man's Luck."

Mr. Fitzmaurice has selected for his cast Mollie King, Earle Foxe, William Riley Hatch, Zeffie Tilbury, Helen Chadwick and Francis Byrne.

Miss King, who is the star of Pathe's new serial "Mystery of the Double Cross" is too well known in Pathe pictures to require comment.

Earle Foxe, however, is a new comer in Gold Rooster Plays. He was born in Oxford, Ohio, and while playing stock in Chicago was engaged by William Hawtrey to appear in "Dear Old Billy." He played in "The Third Degree" in Chicago and afterwards was with Annie Russell, Wilton Lackaye, and Douglas Fairbanks. Mr. Foxe is well known on the screen having played leads with Alice Joyce and also with Mme. Petrova.

MARJORIE RAMBEAU IN "THE DEBT."

Marjorie Rambeau has started work at the Frank Powell studios on the third of her series of features for the Mutual Film Corporation, having finished "Motherhood," the strong war drama, which she has been working on under the direction of Mr. Powell.

"The Debt," an adaptation of the great European success, will be Miss Rambeau's next subject. "The Debt" is entirely different in plot and locale from Miss Rambeau's first two pictures—"The Greater Woman" and "Motherhood"—and will present the star in a widely different role.

Frank Powell is directing the production and has chosen an excellent cast to support Miss Rambeau. This includes Robert Elliott, Paul Everton, Anne Sutherland, T. Jerome Lawlor, Agnes Eyre and Nadia Gary, a child actress of unusual ability.

"TWO MEN AND A WOMAN" (Ivan).

Characterized by unusual lighting effects, startlingly beautiful scenic surroundings, elaborately screened and cast with the usual Ivan effectiveness, "Two Men and A Woman" the forthcoming release of the Ivan Film Productions, bids fair to uphold the standard of that organization.

The cast, containing James Morrison, Catherine Mayo, Rubye De Remer, Guy Coombs, John Reinhardt and Helen Arnold, under the direction of William Humphrey, displays ample histrionic powers to convey the dramatic moments afforded by the virile story written by Willard Mack.

The entire production bears the essence of class which marks a new departure in film productions. Magnificent estates furnished the interiors, elegant wardrobes were secured from J. M. Giddings for Miss De Remer and Mme. Frances for Miss Arnold, while the habillament of Guy Coombs and James Morrison are sufficient in the extreme.

Mr. Humphrey and Marcel A. Le ricard secured a number of highly startling night effects and a skating and cabaret scene, of more than ordinary attractiveness, characterizes the picture.

The locale of the story in Washington and the plots, counter plots and unusual theme, lends themselves to exploitation of a sensational and attractive character.

Scene from "Two Men and a Woman" (Ivan).

The story of "Two Men and A Woman" was written by Willard Mack and the scenario constructed therefrom by Don Don-das and Mr. Humphrey.

The picture will be released this week.

James Morrison who plays the featured role in the story, was a former Vitagraph star and will be one of the featured players in "Motherhood" which is soon to be launched by J. Stuart Blackton.

CANADIAN OFFICES FOR METRO.

In line with its general policy of expansion, Metro Pictures Corporation is opening a chain of offices in Eastern Canada, in order to give the motion picture exhibitors of that territory the same complete, effective and high class service that is now supplied exhibitors in the United States.

The first of these offices has already been put in operation at No. 8 McGill College Avenue, Montreal, and within a few days headquarters will be opened in Toronto. It is in response to a persistent demand for exclusive Metro features in Canada that the new chain is being formed.

This new line of expansion by Metro comes within almost a month of the second anniversary of Metro's first release, "Satan Sanderson" which was sent forth to the exhibitors March 29, 1915. The initial release was offered two years ago following an organization of Metro's manufacturing and selling forces to meet a demand for feature pictures of high grade that were box office attractions.

CONSOLIDATED OPENS LOS ANGELES BRANCH.

The Consolidated Feature Film Corporation, with offices at 116 Golden Gate Avenue, San Francisco, Cal., has opened a branch at 818 South Olive Street, Los Angeles. A projection room has been installed, using two Simplex machines and a gold-fibre screen. A large office, shipping room, cleaning and inspecting department, are all on one floor, making it one of the finest and most up-to-date film exchanges on the Pacific Coast.

Mr. Marion H. Kohn is the president and general manager of the Consolidated. Associated with him is Mr. Geo. B. Epstein and other well known men of Los Angeles and San Francisco. Mr. Kohn is an old-timer in the picture business, although young in years, having managed the first feature film exchange on the Pacific Coast. Mr. Kohn is very enthusiastic over the open market, and the Consolidated purchases all its features through this channel. The Consolidated will shortly open additional offices in Seattle and Portland and also Denver, thereby increasing their buying power.

DAVID STERN COMPANY INCREASES LINE.

The David Stern Company, of No. 1047 Madison street, Chicago, is now handling the complete line of Universal cameras and accessories, in addition to their already long list of cameras and supplies, one of the chief of which is the Davsco motion picture camera, which sells for $110. These cameras are guaranteed by their makers to make pictures equally in quality to those made by the higher-priced cameras. Another specialty is the light-weight panoram and tilting top tripod, the price of which is $25.

The David Stern organization is made up of experienced cameramen, and their thirty-two years in the business have given them an enviable standing in the trade. Their complete line is listed in their 1917 catalogue, which will be mailed free of charge.

"THE WEB OF LIFE" FOR STATE RIGHTS.

The first of the feature releases put out by the Gold Medal Photoplayers, "The Web of Life," is now being offered to state rights buyers for immediate delivery.

The story from which the picture was made concerns the love of a dissipated young man for a simple country girl who did not know what to do when she found her young husband tiring of her and going back to his evil companions. She appeals to her boyhood sweetheart and the efforts he makes to straighten things out brings on the tragedy that costs him his life. However, in his death, the young husband is made to see the error of his ways and reforms.

The principal parts are played by Hiida Nord, James Cruze, George Spencer and Billy Quirk, together with capable support.

The Gold Medal Photoplayers will produce five-reel features to be sold to state rights buyers at the rate of one a month, for the present.

"THE GIRL FROM RECTOR'S" (Mutual).

With a fame and following ready made by its stage successes "The Girl from Rector's" is coming out in motion pictures. The Mutual Film Corporation announces the release of a five-part picture edition of the play for the week of March 5.

Ruth McTammany in the role of "Louise Sedaine," the Girl from Rector's, is the star and center of attention.

The picture is all that its title suggests, and it achieves success as a screen interpretation of Broadway and the night life of smart New York without overstepping the border line into the region of the improper.

"The Girl from Rector's" was originally produced upon the stage by A. H. Woods. It ran for one hundred consecutive weeks at Weber's theater in New York, and at one time as many as ten road companies were presenting the piece to crowded houses all over the country.

"LONESOME LUKE" COMEDIES ONCE A MONTH.

It is announced that Pathe's new two-reel "Lonesome Luke" Comedies will be issued once a month beginning with March 13. The first on the program is "Luke's Lively Life," "Lonesome Luke's Honeymoon," "Lonesome Luke's Plumbing Mishaps," and "Stop, Luke, Listen."

Notes of the Trade

LITTLE ELLA HALL was selected to play the featured lead in "Pawned," a five-act drama, which is to be elaborately filmed at Universal City.

Ethel Clayton's next World picture, Brady-made, bears the title "The House Cat."

Elaine Hammerstein, granddaughter of the illustrious Oscar, will make her screen debut in support of Robert Warwick in the Selznick-Picture presentation of the detective drama, "The Argyle Case." Ralph W. Ince directed the picture, which will be presented to the public within a few weeks. The cast includes such noted stage players as H. Cooper Cliffe and Frank McGlynn.

The Selig-Tribune, the twice-a-week news reel released in General Film service by the Selig Polyscope Company, has proved its timeliness in news enterprise by presenting pictures of Thomas W. Lawson, the Boston broker, now in the limelight in Congressional investigations; and of the late Colonel Cody, "Buffalo Bill."

"The Phantom Buccaneer," Richard C. Travers' current Essanay feature, is reported to be having an exceptionally successful run. Exhibitors who have shown the picture have reported capacity business, and critics have characterized it as a "thrilling drama with a punch from beginning to end." Mr. Travers is seen at his best. "The Phantom Buccaneer" is being released through the K-E-S-E service.

Ethel Clayton's next release by the World-Brady interests is called "The Web of Desire," with Rockcliffe Fellowes featured. Others in the cast are John Hines, Edward Kimball, Richard Turner, William Williams and little Madge Evans.

Sybil Carmen, a favorite in Ziegfeld's "Midnight Frolic," is posing in fashion pictures for the Gaumont Company. Her pictures appear at intervals in the Mutual Weekly.

The first of E. Phillips Oppenheim's novels of adventure to be adapted to the screen is "The Court of St. Simon" now being filmed at the Selznick studios by Robert Warwick under the direction of Leonce Perret, the famous French motion picture producer, who is making his debut on this side of the Atlantic with this production.

The first appearance of Evelyn Greeley in a World-Brady cast will occur in "The Eleventh Hour," now nearly completed. Miss Greeley is a quite recent acquisition by the World Film Corporation, whose agents were attracted by the fine quality of her acting in the star roles of "Tempest and Sunshine" and "Just A Song at Twilight."

Victor Potel, better known as "Slippery Slim," is a member of Tom Mix's Foxfilm Comedy company. He is six feet one inch tall, weighs 127 pounds gross and plays "heavies."

Thomas P. Carnahan, Jr., juvenile actor, will appear in a production of Richard Harding Davis' story, "Gallagher," which has been made at the studios of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., for release on the Conquest Pictures program.

"The Flying Target" is the title of the Cub Comedy, featuring George Ovey, recently completed at the David Horsley studios, and scheduled for release through the Mutual Film Corporation on March 8.

Lou Tellegen and Mary Fuller have returned from Saranac Lake, where they have been staging snow scenes for the Famous Players-Paramount picture, "The Long Trail," under the direction of Howell Hansel. "The Long Trail" marks the first appearance of Mary Fuller in a Paramount picture.

Boston's Big Community Theater Opens

West End Theater Costing $300,000 Will Bring the Best Entertainment to a Thickly Congested Part of the City.

By J. J. Phillips, Moving Picture Editor, Boston Journal.

BOSTON, Mass.—With the purpose of bringing the better class moving picture and vaudeville show to over 50,000 who live in the congested district of the West End of Boston, the Lancaster Amusement Company has opened its new $300,000 moving picture theater on Lancaster street near Causeway, Boston. The Lancaster was opened to the public for his mid-winter vacation in Florida, where he had an opportunity to see one of his stars, Ethel Barrymore, put the finishing touches on "The Call of Her People," a forthcoming Metro release.

State Rights Company Elects Officers.

Boston, Mass.—The Globe Feature Film Corporation, recently reorganized, has elected the following officers of this corporation: David A. Lowrie, president; Nathan H. Gordon, of the Gordon Bros. Amusement Company, treasurer; James Soloman and Max Schoolman, directors, and Harry Segal, general manager. This corporation has the state rights for New England on "The Witching Hour," the Ella Wheeler Wilcox series, "War As It Really Is," photographed by Donald C. Thompson of Leslie's Weekly; "Around the World In Eighty Days," and many other features.

General Manager Segal announces a program is to be released by this corporation in the near future but is not at liberty to state what this program will be, as negotiations have not been completed with relation to it.

Making "Lemon" Houses Pay.

New Britain, Conn.—Of all the prominent exhibitors through the New England States, there is none better and more widely known than P. S. McMahon, of New Britain, Conn., who started his business career in New Britain in 1889 with a capital of $135, and through an accident, became interested in the theater business there.

P. S. McMahon.

Notwithstanding the usual opinion of the "know it alls" that the Keeney theater was a lemon house, under Mr. McMahon's able management the business prospered. Four years ago Mr. McMahon took over the Empire theater in Hartford, Conn. This likewise was considered a lemon house, and to-day this theater is one of the best paying properties in Connecticut.

Mr. McMahon is rated as one of the largest tax payers in New Britain and Hartford, and men of this type are of great advantage to the exhibitors.

Mr. McMahon has recently installed one of the fine Fotoplayer organs, built by the American Photo Player Co., in the Empire theater, and since this installation expressed himself as having noticed a healthy growth in business, with a corresponding reduction in expense.

Washington News Letter

Need of Express Pick-ups Felt.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Washington's exchange managers have two serious complaints to make. The most important of these is their inability to get midnight pick-up service from the express companies, the other is the making of Washington's Birthday such a holiday as to cut off all mail deliveries to the exchanges.

"All of the exchange managers," said a well known member of the Exchange Managers' Association of Washington, "are still waiting for the express companies to inaugurate a midnight pick-up. We had been given to understand that two of the companies with whom we do business were going to do so, and it is very necessary that they should, for fully one-half of the films shown in Washington are due for shipment south or west after the local theaters close. The exchanges are forced to make delivery of these shipments to the express companies after they come to them from the theaters, in time for their movement on trains leaving for the various destinations between the hours of eleven and one, or they will not be delivered the following day in time for exhibition at night."

"Aside from the inconvenience to which the exhibitor would be put, the exchange would lose a day's rental if they failed to make the proper train, and this would total to a considerable sum in a very short time. The managers feel that their business is worth the extra effort which they desire the express companies to make in order to give them proper service, and, in view of the number of shipments moving in this way, they cannot see why a midnight pick-up cannot be accorded them."

A number of the exchange managers are trying out the parcel post service and just as soon as the local post office officials can get other plans in good working order they are going to throw a good deal more business to Uncle Sam. There are two obstacles still in the way—the C. O. D. collections are not satisfactory as now made, and the exchange managers want some provision made for the quick return of a film when the exhibitor to whom it is shipped refuses to receive it. These changes are expected to be made in the very near future.

All along the line on Washington's Birthday, as was the case on New Year's Day, the exchange managers were kicking because the city postmaster had taken it upon himself to issue an order, as a result of which there were no mail deliveries. They point out that the department is so anxious to get the film business, yet hampers it by not delivering incoming orders and other important matter. The managers are very much up in arms about the whole proposition and there is a possibility that strong complaint will be made, especially as it is known that some firms in other lines were able to get their mail by sending for it, which privilege, however, was not accorded the film men.

Front of Lancaster Theater, Boston's West End House.

the first time Saturday night, Feb. 15. Admission was by invitation, and in the audience were many society people of Boston and Brookline who are interested in this project from the philanthropic standpoint. Speeches were made by members of the company, including Harold Sherburne, the president. The Lancaster was designed and built by Clarence Blackall, the prominent Boston architect, and has a seating capacity of 1,500. It is of cement and brick and thoroughly fireproof, fourteen exits offering egress.

The company has installed a new type of instrument called the photo player, which will furnish music.

Manager Charles Ross in defining the policy of the house announces that a select list of high grade pictures will be shown twice weekly together with a number of polite vaudeville acts, also vocalists and musicians of repute will be secured for the full week engagement. Tuesday will be try-out day for amateur musicians and singers with stage aspirations, who will be given an engagement at the Lancaster if approved by a competent board of musical critics.

New Theater Will Seat 6,000

San Francisco Will Shortly Have the Biggest Theater in America when the House Planned by Turner & Dahnken Is Finished—Will Be Built at the Corner of Eighth and Market Streets—Lease Is for Fifteen Years.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.—Plans for the erection of a mammoth moving picture theater, the largest in America, with a seating capacity of 6,000, are being rushed to completion for the Turner & Dahnken circuit by Architects Cunningham & Politeo, and these are to be ready in detail form for the letting of contracts within sixty days. This immense house is to be erected on the McCreery property at Eighth and Market streets, on the site formerly known as Central park, where, in years gone by many circuses and tented attractions have held forth. The T. & D. circuit has secured a lease on the property and will hold it for fifteen years, at a total rental of about $1,000,000.

The building will be of strictly fireproof, one story, and will be so constructed that 6,000 persons may view screen productions at one time without climbing stairways, all the seats to be on one floor. There will be ninety loges, but the seats in the other sections of the house will be uniform. While intended for moving pictures exclusively, there will be a fully equipped stage forty-five by one hundred and forty-five feet in size, with an opening measuring eighty to forty-five feet.

The main promenade foyer will be reached from Market street by an entrance fifty-five feet wide and one hundred and sixty-five feet long and will be fifty by two hundred and forty feet in size. Off this will be the reception and tea room for ladies, forty-six by one hundred feet, ladies' rest rooms, men's smoking rooms, check rooms and cozy corners. Here will also be a beautiful candy stand and some unusual attractions in the form of a pond for wild fowl and an aquarium. The seats in the theater proper will be reached by a series of gradients from the main promenade foyer, each twelfth row to be tapped by an entrance at regular intervals, so that the aisles in the house will be crowded at no time. A thirty-foot picture will be shown and the seat farthest from the screen will be two hundred and twenty-five feet distant. The front of the house, which will face San Francisco's magnificent civic center, declared to be the most notable group of public buildings in this country, will be of handsome design and will be lighted after the style inaugurated at the recent exposition.

Plans are being made for the installation of a mushroom and plenum system of heating and ventilating, this to be the largest of the kind ever installed in a theater, and the lighting will be of the most approved design, the house lights to be on four circuits, with remote controls. No selection of a pipe organ has been made, as yet, but this instrument will have not less than seventy-five stops and four manuals.

Secretary E. B. Johnson, of this firm, is now on a tour of inspection to secure ideas to be used in this new house, and others to be erected soon, it being the intention to equip a house that will serve as a model for others. No decision has been reached as to what disposition will be made of the Tivoli opera house, which is conducted by the T. & D. circuit, and this may be transformed into a stock house when the new theater is ready.

New Film Company Incorporates.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Affiliated Film Companies has been incorporated with a capital stock of $3,000 by Mark M. Leichter, George H. Perry, M. Leichter, A. L. Lissner, M. L. Haines, N. Boas and O. C. Wilson. Mark M. Leichter, who was formerly with the De Luxe Film-Lasky, is president of the new concern, which has opened offices in the Mills building on Montgomery street.

Former Theater Man Marketing Hat Holder Device.

San Francisco, Cal.—Fred Frisk, formerly a well known moving picture exhibitor, but more recently manager of the United Theater Exchange, has formed the Frisco Manufacturing Company and is now placing on the market a combination hat and program holder to be installed on theater chairs for the accommodation of patrons.

Warner Handling "Yellow Menace."

San Francisco, Cal.—The Warner film attractions, which recently returned to Film Row, is now handling the "Yellow Menace," formerly controlled in this territory by the United Film Service.

G. A. Metcalfe Takes Theater St. Francis

San Francisco, Cal.—The financial difficulties that have beset the Theater St. Francis since its opening last fall have culminated in the taking over of this house by G. A. Metcalfe, who installed most of the equipment, and it will be operated by the St. Francis Theater Company, of which Mr. Metcalfe is president. Film service is being arranged for and it is planned to use this house for demonstration purposes, installing all the latest machines, equipment, decorations and effects so that owners of houses may see these in actual operation. The house will be conducted under the direct management of Walter De Latimer, well known through his connection with the Kahn & Greenfield houses. Mr. Metcalfe has taken over the agency for an electric fountain line, suitable for use in moving picture houses and is handling the spot lights used at the San Francisco exposition of 1915.

Charles Klopot to Visit North.

San Francisco, Cal.—Charles Klopot, who conducts a film exchange on Golden Gate avenue, and who has been devoting his attention of late to a large state rights production secured by him for this territory, is planning to leave shortly on a visit to Portland, Seattle and other points in the Northwest. He returned recently from a visit to Los Angeles.

"Battle Cry of Peace" Sent to Hawaii.

San Francisco, Cal.—Sol L. Lesser has sent the "Battle Cry of Peace" to Honolulu, where it has been booked by some of the largest houses. He returned recently from a brief visit to Los Angeles and may be expected to be seen heading for New York soon, as it has been several weeks since he was in that city.

M. A. Levy Visits San Francisco.

San Francisco, Cal.—M. A. Levy, president of the United Film Service, has returned to this city following a stay of several months at Seattle, and is seeking a manager for the local office. Miss Ora Graham, who has been in this office for the past two years, and who has had charge of it for several months, is now with the Mutual.

Star Appears on Stage.

San Francisco, Cal.—Edith Storey was a recent visitor here from Los Angeles and during her stay appeared in person at the T. & D. theater in Oakland, where she explained the inside story of the filming of "Money Magic," the feature being shown at that playhouse. Later she attended the Ad-Masque ball at the Municipal auditorium, where she took the part of Cleopatra in the pageant and later occupied a seat in the Turner & Dahnken box.

San Francisco Newslets.

X. K. Stout, formerly manager of the local Mutual, but now with the American company at Santa Barbara, was here recently for a short visit.

G. A. Metcalfe has installed new projection machines in the demonstration room being fitted up in the new quarters of the Greater Vitagraph in the Musical building.

The Savoy theater is being given over to a run on the "Eyes of the World."

The lobby of the Tivoli theater has been transformed into a woodland bower by the use of ferns, potted plants and songbirds.

California Theater News.

Sausalito, Cal.—The Princess theater is now being conducted by Elizabeth Gates, owing to death of the former owner, Mr. Eliot.

Fruitvale, Cal.—The Diamond theater has been reopened by S. A. Wolf, who also has Brown's theater.

Redding, Cal.—The committee appointed to select a name for the new house of Anderson & Wood has selected the name of the Redding theater.

Tulare, Cal.—New projection equipment is to be installed in the Theater Tulare, recently taken over by O. B. Eustace.

Fort Bragg, Cal.—A. Polly and Wm. Rasmussen have purchased the property of Charles Dahl on Franklin street and will use it as a moving picture house. Mr. Dahl is the owner of the Sequoia theater on Laurel street.

Gilroy, Cal.—The Gilroy opera house is to be renovated and a new heating system installed.

Santa Cruz, Cal.—The Jewel theater was closed recently for two weeks, renovated throughout and fifty-five new seats added.

Colfax, Cal.—The Colfax theater has been renovated throughout by Manager S. K. Williams.

Nevada City, Cal.—Melville Miller, of Vallejo, is planning to open a vaudeville and moving picture house here.

Bakersfield, Cal.—The Parra theater, conducted for the past year by Charles H. Freear, has been taken over by George W. Helm and will be conducted under the management of Herbert H. Norris.

Petaluma, Cal.—The Globe theater has been sold to Frank P. Doyle of Santa Rosa.

Redwood City, Cal.—W. J. Salisbury has taken over the Bell theater and will reopen it shortly.

Porterville, Cal.—F. A. Porst and associates have leased the Majestic theater and will expend about $3,000 in refitting it.

Oakland, Cal.—The theatrical managers of this city have filed a written protest with the city authorities against the use of the municipal auditorium for theatrical purposes, charging that the original purposes of the auditorium are being violated.

K-E-S-E to Move in March.

San Francisco, Cal.—Work is progressing in a very satisfactory manner on the fireproof building on Golden Gate avenue in which the K-E-S-E exchange has leased quarters, and plans are being made by Manager W. O. Edmonds for removing from the present quarters some time in March. Business at this exchange is showing much life, and its releases are now well placed in the San Francisco field. A. E. Beck returned recently from a trip through the northern part of the state and did an especially large business on "The Truant Soul." W. H. Korper, formerly with the International, has been placed on the road as special Max Linder salesman.

Pine Tree State Letter

By John P. Flannigan, 151 Park View Ave., Bangor, Me.

Maine Exhibitors Against Deposit System.

BANGOR, ME.—Maine picture men are dead set against the deposit system, many declaring it to be absolutely unjust. They cannot see why they should deposit four weeks' program money, when they are obliged to pay for their films in advance, anyway, under the C. O. D. arrangement.

Three-reel Features Popular.

Bangor, Me.—Small Maine picture houses, according to the Bangor exchange men, are not using many five-reel features at the present time. Most of them use a three-reel feature, a comedy and a single-reel drama. Then, if anyone comes in after the feature starts, they have a chance to see something, but if they come in after the third reel of a five-reel feature they don't get their money's worth.

Machias Film Palace Reopens.

Bangor, Me.—William Means, proprietor of the Machias film palace, has opened it after a thorough renovation and his patrons are delighted with the change. He is using General Film service.

Bangor Business Notes.

Bangor, Me.—Manager Charles M. Stern of the Universal's Bangor branch, reports that "Liberty," the feature serial, is booked for at least 75 Maine towns.

Victor Holts, proprietor of the Danforth, Me., theater, is using General Film service.

Pearl Crockett, proprietor of the Brooks moving picture house, reports big business with the "Girl From Frisco." J. J. Pray, proprietor of the Silver House, Waterville, is also using it.

Odd Fellows hall theater, Newport, is using Universal program just now.

Reginald F. Borroto Weds.

Bangor, Me.—Reginald F. Borroto of New York, until recently manager of the Bangor Mutual branch, was united in marriage to Miss Abbie Constantine at a pretty wedding in St. John's Catholic church, Feb. 12. Mr. Borroto is now manager of the headquarters of the Mutual in Boston. The bridal couple was attended by her sister, Miss Frances Constantine, and by Dr. C. J. Taylor, of Bangor. Mr. and Mrs. Constantine will reside in Boston after March 15.

General Film Stenographer Honored.

Bangor, Me.—Miss Doris Brann, formerly stenographer in the Bangor office of the General Film, has been appointed stenographer to Governor Carl Milliken at the state capital, Augusta.

Miss Madeline Gallagher, who has been clerk in the checking department of the Bangor office of the General Film, has been promoted to the position of stenographer for the local branch.

Palace Theater Again Closed.

Bangor, Me.—The Palace theater, Bangor, which has been opening and closing at intervals for several years, again closed on Saturday. John Goodwin, the manager for a year or so, has terminated his connection with the theater.

Only Old Pickfords Seen Here.

Bangor, Me.—The new Mary Pickford pictures have not been seen in Bangor as yet, although Queen Mary has many ardent admirers here. Apparently the managers are holding back on account of the price. Pickford pictures show only in the larger cities of the state, Portland, Augusta, Lewiston and Waterville. The smaller towns cannot touch that program.

Province Uses Shows to Urge Recruiting

St. John Motion Picture Houses Become Centers of a Campaign to Recruit a Provincial Regiment to Full Strength.

By Frederick F. Sully, 68 Lansdowne Ave., St. John, N. B.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—That the motion picture industry is coming to play a more and more important part in the affairs of a nation is brought out in no more forcible manner than in the recent decision of the St. John recruiting committee. The committee, composed of Mayor Hayes and ninety-nine other leading citizens, representing all branches of industry and almost every profession, decided after several meetings to use, or rather request the use of, the St. John motion picture theaters as a means to stimulate the recruiting for the 236th New Brunswick Kilts battalion, which now lacks only about 200 men to bring it up to full strength, in order that it may go overseas as a battalion.

According to the latest plans of the committee a prominent citizen will attend each performance at one of the picture theaters, and between reels will give a brief address urging upon the people the necessity of strengthening their fighting forces. The skirl of the bagpipes and the swirl of the kilts are to be made a part of the program. This new step in recruiting will, if the plans of Lieut. Col. P. A. Guthrie, O. C., of the 236th, materialize, be started early in March and will be continued until the unit is full strength. The committee and the military authorities felt that the motion picture houses afforded the best opportunity to get the existing conditions fairly and candidly before the people. Many who do not read the daily papers are regular patrons of the picture houses, while it is seldom that a reader of the papers is not also a picture devotee; thus it was felt that every class and every type would be reached. In St. John the influence and the prestige of the screen are increasing daily.

Regal Films Exchange to Open.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—Charles Burman, special representative of the Regal Film, Limited, with head office in Toronto, was in the city last week and completed arrangements for the opening here early in March of a branch of the Regal exchanges. Their new offices will be located at 19 Market square, in the same building with the Fox quarters. Productions of the World Film, Brady-Made, Victor Moore comedies, educational films, and enough Clara Kimball Young subjects to keep the provinces supplied two years will be handled by the newcomers to this territory. Mr. Burman believes that the Maritime Provinces, especially Nova Scotia, offer a good field.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—J. G. B. Metzler of Halifax, treasurer of the exhibitors' league, was in the city over the week end while returning from a trip to Montreal and Chicago.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—R. Allan Christie of the Universal forces has returned from a trip through the provinces. Weather conditions and embargoes declared on commodities coming into the provinces by freight in order to give preference of war munitions have somewhat affected general business conditions, and the moving picture interests have experienced a noticeable falling off of business in some sections.

"Bob" McKay Goes to Famous Players Exchange.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—"Bob" McKay, who has been assistant manager and booker at the local Mutual exchange for the past five years, has resigned and joined the St. John forces of the Famous Players film service in the same capacity. Joseph Liebermann, a member of the office staff of the Famous Players, will go on the road with the big production, "The Canadian Armies in Action." Previous to affiliating with the Mutual office Mr. McKay was with the Warner feature company.

St. John Opera House Hustles Its Chairs.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—A record for the installation of 1,000 chairs was perhaps made here last week by the placing on the main floor of the opera house that number of seats within 20 hours. With the house scheduled to open on Saturday noon, there were no signs of new orchestra chairs on Tuesday. Orders had been placed with a firm in Kitchener, Ont., for the delivery of the chairs two weeks previous to the time they would be needed. Embargoes and general freight congestion found the chairs but ten miles from their starting place two weeks after the time of shipment. An express car was backed up against the side-tracked freight Wednesday. The theater equipment was transferred by hand, hurried back to Toronto, and reached St. John by express Friday afternoon. Thirty-four carpenters worked unceasingly for 20 hours and finished the last chair one hour before the house was scheduled to open.

Harry Beahman, formerly with Mr. Franklin in the Halifax house, has been transferred here as assistant to Walter C. McKay, resident manager. Previous to going to Halifax, Mr. Beahman was with the World film corporation forces.

Operators to Form a Union.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—Enthusied by the success that has apparently come to the Nova Scotia operators' union, following its organization a short time ago, New Brunswick motion picture operators are anxious to organize. This desire to get together is especially noticeable in St. John. The World has been asked in the absence of a chairman of any sort of operators' union to take the initiative and make an effort to bring the men together on some Sunday afternoon, or any time that might prove convenient to the majority. Some operators have offered objections to working conditions, others to the small pay and cutthroat methods employed by beginners, and to the laxity of the provincial examinations, which are given by the chairman of the board of censors, who has had no experience in projection. The dozen or more operators in and about St. John are anxious, it is said, to make their organization provincial one. The World will be glad to do what it can toward bringing about an organization. Communications regarding such a move could be sent to the Maritime Provinces correspondent (see head of this letter), who would be willing to issue cards naming a place and date for a preliminary meeting.

Manager A. B. Farmer Gives a Party.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—A. B. Farmer, proprietor and manager of the Star theater, recently treated a few friends and members of the staff of the theater to a sleigh drive and dance. The party left the Star at the conclusion of the second show and drove as far as Glen Falls, and on the return went to Mr. Farmer's home, where a fine collation was awaiting the guests. Mrs. A. McKay played several selections on the piano, and an order of twelve dances was carried out. Besides Mr. and Mrs. Farmer those present included: J. N. Golding, Jr., Mrs. A. McKay, Mrs. Strauss, Mrs. R. Farmer, Mrs. J. R. Hutchinson, Arthur Farmer, Jr., Harold Beverly, Clarence Farmer, D. Carpenter, "Sandy" Golding, Harry Farmer, Luther Jordan, Miss Kathleen Golding, Miss Helen Foster, Miss Mildred Foster, W. R. Golding, S. U. Buchanan and the Misses Farmer.

Pittsburgh Filmdom News

Resignation of Manager M. C. Hughes from Local Universal to Accept Charge of the Montreal Metro Exchange—Several Other Local Exchange Changes—Film Notes from Western Pennsylvania.

From Pittsburgh News Service, 6016 Jenkins Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—Considerable surprise and regret were expressed in local moving picture circles this week over the resignation of M. C. Hughes as manager of the Pittsburgh Universal exchange. Mr. Hughes has accepted the manager-ship of the new Montreal, Can., branch of the Metro pictures service, which has been established under the new Canadian policy of that company. With his departure from this city the Pittsburgh trade loses one of its most active and esteemed members and a leader in Screen Club affairs.

Mr. Hughes came here a little over a year ago to take charge of the Universal branch, having been formerly manager of the Atlanta, Ga., and Memphis, Tenn., offices of the General Film. He was previously to that manager of the Twenty-third street, New York, offices of the General, and has had wide experience in the business. Because of his high qualifications as an organizer and manager as revealed by his past success, the Metro selected him to guide the destinies of the most important of its new Canadian branches. The good wishes of his host of friends follow him in his new position. No successor to Mr. Hughes has yet been named by the Universal.

Harry E. Reiff Changes to General Film.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Harry E. Reiff, prominent film salesman and former mainstay of the force of the Pittsburgh Pathe exchange since its establishment here three years ago, resigned that position February 17 to become assistant manager of the local branch of the General Film. Mr. Reiff's experience in the picture business has been exceptionally broad and his appointment as assistant to manager Fred Flarity at the General is received with approval.

W. J. Fitzpatrick with Pathé Forces.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—W. J. Fitzpatrick, a well-known showman and film salesman, has just been added to the forces of the Pittsburgh Pathe exchange. Mr. Fitzpatrick was formerly with manager Fuller, when he was head of the St. Louis exchange of the General, and is widely experienced in the business. He will look after the East Liberty, Westmorland County and downtown Pittsburgh territory, succeeding E. E. Erickson in that field. Mr. Erickson has succeeded Mr. Reiff in looking after the balance of the western Pennsylvania territory.

High-class Films Promised to Braddock.

Braddock, Pa.—A notable change from vaudeville to moving picture attractions will be made soon, when the Family theater, Braddock, converts its policy into one of the exclusively high-class films. Benjamin Burke, owner of the Family, has announced that the house will be closed at once for extensive remodeling and redecorating, and will be ready for reopening under the new arrangement the latter part of March. Joseph Buike, brother of the owner, will look after the management of the Family.

Sharpsburg Cameraphone Changes.

Sharpsburg, Pa.—The Cameraphone theater, Sharpsburg, Pa., was recently purchased by Herbert Murray from Edward Balson. Mr. Murray was formerly house manager of the Colonial theater, Wilkinsburg, one of the Rowland & Clark chain of houses. The Cameraphone is an up-to-date theater and a money-maker, and the wide experience of the new owner will enable him to maintain the high standard that has been set.

Lewistown's National Opens.

Lewistown, Pa.—The handsome new National theater, Lewistown, has just been opened under auspicious circumstances and is reported as doing a thriving business. The National is a modern theater, of fire-proof construction and attractive in architectural design. The interior is tastefully and comfortably arranged and the equipment complete and up-to-date. It is owned by the Whitehouse amusement company. The National will offer high-class feature attractions, including Ivan and Art Drama productions.

Improvements at the Majestic.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Majestic theater, 1215 Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, has just made a number of up-to-date improvements, including an entirely new equipment of motors and fans, made necessary by the installation of a new generator, which manager Solz declares has improved the projection of his picture 100 per cent. The Majestic also boasts a handsome new organ, installed at a cost of $5,000.

Leon D. Netter Here a Week.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—After a week's visit in Pittsburgh, Leon D. Netter, general manager of the Masterpiece film attractions, left for Cleveland, O., recently, where he will be located for some time personally looking after the affairs of the company in that state. His headquarters will be at the Statler hotel. Mr. Netter stated that "Purity," "Neptune's Daughter" and "The Spoilers," the firm's leading subjects, are proving a continued great success.

Philadelphia News Letter

By E. V. Armato, 144 N. Salford St., West Philadelphia, Pa.

Many Big Pictures Promised.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—The coming week will reveal the initial presentations of many pictures which promise interest. The Victoria will introduce for a six-day run Norma Talmadge in "Panthea," Selznick's release. The Stanley is to offer "The Winning of Sallie Temple" during the first three days and Mae Murray in "On Record" the last three, supplemented by the British War Pictures. At the Arcadia, Leonore Ulrich will be seen in "Her Own People" for the first three days and Theda Bara will star in "The Tiger Woman" the last three. The latter will be the first William Fox production ever shown at the house. "Patria," as an added attraction, will be presented the last three days. The Strand will show Lillian Walker in "Kitty MacKay" and Wilfred Lucas in "Jim Bludso" each for a semi-week run.

Lew Krouse Weds.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Lew Krouse, the business agent of Local No. 307, Motion Picture Operators Union, surprised his many friends by plunging into the sea of matrimony on February 11. However, the event was made one of great jubilation, and he and his bride are now on the honeymoon path. The members of Local No. 307 are preparing for their annual ball, which will be given April 18, in Eagles Temple.

Believes in "The Survival of the Fittest."

Philadelphia, Pa.—When it comes down to knowing the "inside stuff" of the moving picture business J. M. Graver, the business manager of the Liberty theater, at Broad street and Columbia avenue, is there with the goods. Mr. Graver was the pioneer of this line of popular amusement in this city, and at the birth of this form of entertainment created a vogue and made a reputation for himself as a hustler and critic of pictures worth while.

In looking over the past decade in the amusement line, Mr. Graver often remarks with a bit of modest pride, that as all things in the business world bear out the Darwinian theory of the "survival of the fittest," honest worth and painstaking effort have made good in his work that today stamps him as a successful manager in the art of figuring out just what the public wants.

Somerset Theater to Open.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Somerset theater, which has been closed because of pending litigation, has been reopened by S. Goodstein. Mr. Goodstein has placed his son in charge of the house, and will try and build up a permanent and prosperous business. He was formerly the owner of the Fairmount theater, at Fairmount avenue and Marshall street, which he built and later disposed of.

Pottsville's Picture Theater Burns.

Pottsville, Pa.—The worst fire in the history of Gilberton occurred at 2:30 o'clock, on the morning of February 20, and before it was extinguished it had destroyed five houses in the business section of the town, including the only motion picture theater. The estimated loss is $15,000. Indications are that the fire started in the Kerrigan moving picture theater building, which was occupied also by a pool room. It was supposedly due to an overheated stove.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"Pearl of the Army" created a remarkable sensation at its first presentation at the Cross Keys theater last week. As the various notable men of our national life were introduced, including Lincoln, Roosevelt and President Wilson, the enthusiasm of the spectators waxed, and as the alert orchestra leader swung into the strains of "The Star Spangled Banner," the audience joined lustily in the chorus. The picture was shown at the end of the regular vaudeville program, yet scarcely a person left a seat until it was ended.

Baltimore News Letter

Red Moon Theater Is Making Good.

BALTIMORE, MD.—The Red Moon theater, 20 West Baltimore street, under the management of G. S. Benjamin for the past year, is fast becoming one of the most popular moving picture houses in the central business district. When Mr. Benjamin took over this theater the finances were in straits, but by hard work and perseverance not only has the patronage been enlarged, but so far as can be learned all the back debts have been paid off and a good profit is coming in every week. For the last two weeks painters and carpenters have been busy redecorating and renovating the lobby. New one and three-sheet holders have been installed and a general color scheme of ivory white and mahogany blends nicely with soft green walls and marble wainscoting.

R. Smeltzer Takes Over World Film.

Baltimore, Md.—On Thursday, February 15, H. C. Wales, formerly manager of the Washington office of the World Film, came over to Baltimore accompanied by Robert Smeltzer, who has been appointed as manager of the Washington branch of this corporation, and made visits to several theaters in this city introducing the latter to the film men. It is understood that Mr. Wales has now been made special representative of the World Film for the entire country, and his many friends in this city wish him much success in his new position.

Mr. Smeltzer spent most of his younger days in Baltimore, and at one time worked for Ricard Giardwell before the latter obtained his present position as vice-president and general manager of the World Film.

Terrific Fire at Uniontown.

Uniontown, Pa.—In the disastrous fire which is estimated to have caused the loss of $250,000, which occurred here on Saturday, February 17, the Vic theater was badly damaged. For a time the whole business district was threatened with destruction.

Quick Work by Manager Leight.

Baltimore, Md.—A sure proof of the safety of an operating room, no doubt, is to have a fire in it. William Leight, manager of the Teddy Bear theater, 1741 East Baltimore street, evidently has a safe one, for on Thursday afternoon, February 15, part of a reel caught fire. No outcry was given; an alarm was sounded by a policeman who was warned. The audience knew nothing of the blaze, however, until it was all over. Only a trifling amount of damage was done and Mr. Leight escaped without serious injury.

Evangelist at Goldberg.

Baltimore, Md.—Through the courtesy of Thos. D. Goldberg, secretary of the Maryland Exhibitors' League and owner of the Goldberg theater at 317-19 West North avenue, Evangelist A. S. Booth was able to give his lecture at this house on Sunday night February 18.

Weber Books Special Play.

Baltimore, Md.—As a special feature for Ash Wednesday, Frederick Clement Weber, manager of the Gertrude McCoy theater at Fulton avenue and Baker street, booked "The Eternal City," featuring Pauline Frederick. Mr. Weber considered that he could get no more appropriate play than this for the occasion.

Bazar Benefit at the New Theater.

Baltimore, Md.—On Sunday, February 18, through the courtesy of L. A. DeHoff, manager of the New Theater, 210 West Lexington street, this house was donated to Mrs. John Barron to be used for a sacred concert and the exhibition of pictures which was given for the benefit of the Allied Exhibition to be held in this city shortly. The entire staff of employees at this theater was also on duty for the occasion. Pictures of the battlefields of France, which were taken by the British Government, were a feature of the occasion. No admission was charged, but a collection was taken.

Capital City Exhibitors Glad of Their Coal Bins.

By Clarence Linz.

Washington, D. C.—While some of the other industries have been suffering to a greater or less extent, the motion picture theaters of the District of Columbia have been exceptionally lucky in being able to get a sufficient supply of coal with which to heat their houses. In common with all other cities in this section of the country, Washington is experiencing a great shortage of coal accompanied by very high prices for that which is available. It has, however, been the practice of the exhibitors, at least among the larger ones, to contract for a season's supply before cold weather arrives, and they have been fairly well taken care of.

It is understood that one or two of the smaller houses found their supply dwindling, but the other houses merely state that deliveries are delayed considerably, due to the slow arrival of cars from the mines. This is largely overcome by duplicating orders; as soon as one lot is delivered order another, and in that way they have been able to heat their houses and so keep them open. The weather during the early part of February was more severe than during any year since 1911.

Congestion Troubles Toronto Film Men

Ontario Passenger Trains Are Being Taken Off by the Scores, but the Programs Are Still Going Forward to Exhibitors.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard St., E. Toronto, Ont.

TORONTO, ONT.—The moving picture business of Ontario has been little disturbed because of the cancellation of several score passenger trains by Canadian railway companies, because of a serious freight congestion. Regular trains have been taken off by the twenty or thirty at a time so that schedules are reduced to very simple tables. In some instances, Toronto exchanges have found it necessary to ship reels one day in advance of booked date, thus losing one or two day's business each week for a number of releases, but, generally speaking, the inconveniences are not serious. One fine jam occurred recently when every picture house in Hamilton, only forty-five miles from Toronto, missed matinee performances because practically all reel shipments from this city did not arrive until the evening.

Local exchange shippers have been forced lately to make frequent changes in shipping arrangements in order to cover bookings out of town. Outside exhibitors have been rather surprised, it is declared, that connections have been made so regularly despite the wholesale curtailment of train service.

F. R. Lennon an Organization Booster.

Toronto, Ont.—A man who has grown up with the Canadian film business, practically from its very start, is Mr. F. R. Lennon, Toronto. He is now assistant general manager of the Canadian Universal, for whom he is also doubling in the role of acting manager for Ontario. Mr. Lennon was largely instrumental in the formation of the Ontario Moving Picture Protective Association, whose inaugural convention was held at Toronto late in January, with an attendance of one hundred and fifty exhibitors from all parts of the Province.

Mr. Lennon was first employed in the office of the Kleine Optical some eight or nine years ago, and at nights he was a projection machine operator in one of the first picture theaters in Toronto's downtown section. He has a wide knowledge of the business inasmuch as he has served in practically every capacity from shipper and booker to manager. Lennon is known throughout Canada wherever there is a moving picture theater.

F. R. Lennon.

E. A. Langley Joins Universal.

Toronto, Ont.—E. A. Langley, formerly general sales manager with the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., and other Canadian film distributors, and recently general organizer for the Canadian automobile sales company, has joined the Canadian Universal to take charge of the Vancouver branch office.

National's First Film Star Comes.

Toronto, Ont.—Miss Sadie Weston, the well-known film player, was the first to arrive in Canada to take up duty with the new Canadian National Features, Ltd., whose studio has been erected at Trenton, Ontario. While waiting for the completion of the company's plant there, Miss Weston remained in Toronto and soon made a host of friends in the moving picture fraternity. Because of her prospective work in the Dominion, Miss Weston has been making a study of Canadian conditions. She finds she declares, that Canadian people are not demonstrative, and some, of course, are super-critical. She is surprised that Toronto exhibitors do not see to it that the local newspapers do not carry brighter and newer film pages.

Miss Weston is highly enthusiastic over her Canadian prospects. She has already a survey of the physical facilities of the company at Trenton. The studio is an up-to-date and perfected building, while two large Trenton residences, located in large grounds, have been turned into club-houses for the new company's players. Arrangements for the opening of the institution provided for the reception of a trainload of interested moving picture men from Toronto.

Toronto Fox Film Notes.

Toronto, Ont.—The Toronto office of the Fox Film has been making excellent progress in all departments under the direction of Manager Mitchell Granby. New premises at 15 Wilton avenue have been taken over, and the facilities here will enable Mr. Granby to look after the growing business with ease. Charles Ramage, formerly shipper in the local Fox office, has been promoted to the rank of booker.

Sammy Fine Leaves Regal.

Toronto, Ont.—Sammy Fine, roadman out of the Toronto office of Regal Film, has resigned. Fine recently put across some good work in an extensive trip from Toronto to Winnipeg.

TO EXHIBITORS.

MORE MARITIME NOTES.

New Gayety Theater in Fredericton.

Fredericton, N. B.—W. W. O. Fennety, manager of the Gayety theater in Fredericton, was a recent business visitor in St. John. Mr. Fennety announces that ground is to be broken in May for a new Gayety theater on the main street in the Capital City. The building, which is to be constructed of concrete, will cost approximately $35,000. This is but one of the many big picture houses that will go into the making in the early spring in almost every section of the three provinces.

St. John, N. B.—Walter H. Golding, manager of the Imperial theater, has closed negotiations for the new Vitagraph serial, "The Secret Kingdom," which is to follow the last chapter of the Beatrice Fairfax pictures, now running. Marguerite Clark in "Miss George Washington," after its two-day run, was repeated again on Saturday of last week at the Imperial and drew capacity houses at practically every performance, Mr. Golding says.

St. John, N. B.—Phil Kaufmann, Canadian general manager for the Famous Players, with headquarters in Montreal, was in the city over the week end on a visit of inspection to the local branch office, of which Mitchell S. Bernstein is the manager. Mr. Kaufmann has been a strong advocate for the amalgamation of all provincial exhibitors' leagues into one national body, feeling that such a move would result in the establishing of a federal board of censorship, for which Mr. Kaufmann has been fighting for a long time.

Co-operation Keynote of Buffalo F. I. L. M.

Exchange Men's Association Will Look Toward the Good of the Business as a Whole and Work by Modern Business Methods.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 5 Lewis Block, Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Better understanding between the exhibitor and the exchange manager is being accomplished by the Buffalo F. I. L. M. club, which holds regular meetings and disposes of various complaints. The club fosters co-operation such as was advocated by Fred Clayton Butler, secretary of Jamestown, N. Y., chamber of commerce, who recently spoke in Buffalo. He said co-operation during the past few years has taken the place of the cutthroat competition practiced by the old-fashioned business men. He said competition is as keen as it ever was, but that it is a co-operative competition for the good of the business.

Lenten Season Has Lowered Theater Attendance.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The flow of dimes and nickels into the box offices of the local moving picture theaters this week was slightly checked by the opening of the Lenten season. It is a fact that hundreds of the fans will not enter a theater from now until Easter Monday. Others will feel the old show habit grip them after the first week in Lent and will spend many evenings in the next six weeks at their favorite houses. Some of the exhibitors are already meeting the Lenten situation by gingering up their shows.

"More money has to be spent by us when money is hard to get," said one exhibitor, when explaining his plans for getting the crowds during the season of sackcloth and ashes.

Harold B. Franklin to Manage Shea's.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Harold B. Franklin has been appointed manager of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, classed among the largest and most elaborate moving picture theaters in the country.

"There will be no change in our policy," said Mr. Franklin. "We will continue to buy the best. We intend to enlarge and improve the Hippodrome orchestra."

Mr. Franklin succeeds Isadore Moses at this house. Mr. Moses' painstaking methods as manager has in a great measure been responsible for its present success. He has resigned to take a much needed rest. Mr. Franklin managed the Lyric and Family theaters, Buffalo, for the past two years. Besides his experience in the show business Mr. Franklin is noted for his original newspaper and outdoor advertising. His successor at the Lyric and Family have not been announced.

W. C. Fickeisen Heads Rochester General.

Buffalo, N. Y.—W. C. Fickeisen has been appointed Rochester representative of the General Film. He succeeds C. J. Rose, who has been appointed city salesman for the Pathe in St. Paul and Minneapolis. The Buffalo newspapers are giving wide publicity to the new Kalem series, "The American Girl," and "A Daughter of Darling." The General Film's purpose in this advertising campaign is to help the exhibitor to get the crowds into his theater.

Hobos at Convention See Films.

Buffalo, N. Y.—That no class seems to have a monopoly on the enjoyment of screen performances was exemplified in Buffalo recently when moving pictures were even shown at the Hobos' National Convention, held at 259 Main street. Despite the name of the convention none of the delegates appeared to be in the "comic paper, Weary Willie" class. Even tomato cans were tabooed by the visitors. They took their meetings seriously and showed a preference to moving pictures which related to social, economic and kindred topics. J. Eads How, the so-called "millionaire hobo," was among the delegates.

Films in Dunkirk School.

Dunkirk, N. Y.—The high school students of Dunkirk have requested that moving pictures be introduced in the public schools of that city. The Dunkirk board of education has approved the request. Films of an educational character will be shown. The pupils have raised funds to aid in the project.

L. D. Stone Buys Palm Theater.

Salamanca, N. Y.—L. D. Stone has bought the Palm theater at Salamanca, and is making elaborate plans for boosting business at the house, which seats 1,600. Mr. Stone is interested in other theaters in the territory.

Cincinnati News Letter

From Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank Building, Cincinnati.

C. E. Holah Goes to Omaha.

CINCINNATI, O.—Local film circles will lose one of the most popular members in this vicinity when C. E. Holah leaves for Omaha. He has been chosen as district manager of a large territory for the Pathe interests. Mr. Holah had been working on a roving commission since the Pathe organization took over the International, doing some excellent selling work on the road and also helping Manager Wessling in the office by installing some clever efficiency devices. Since coming to Cincinnati about two years ago Mr. Holah has been very active in exchange work, and also found time to organize the Cincinnati Screen Club, of which he was the first president. A convincing proof of his value as a film man is shown in the number of first-class exchange men who have worked under him, including F. B. Chase, of the Triangle, P. L. Niland, of the Pathe, R. E. Brown, Columbus Pathe representative, and others.

Summer Films in the Legit Houses.

Cincinnati.—One of the first and most convincing signs of spring in Cincinnati each year is the announcement of plans for the big "legitimate" houses for their annual season of pictures; and this sign has already made its appearance for 1917, the Lyric management indicating that the moving picture season will begin there in April, with the Cincinnati premiere of the great Kellermann picture, "A Daughter of the Gods." The appearance of this film has been awaited with considerable interest, on account of the furore which it created in the East and the success of the first Kellermann film, "Neptune's Daughter," which continues to do a good business in Ohio under the management of McMahan & Jackson.

Picture House Within a Hotel.

Dayton, O.—Plans have been announced which, to a certain extent, affect the Auditorium theater, one of the city's popular moving picture houses. The building of which the theater uses the first floor and basement, is to be converted into a modern hotel, with considerable additions and improvements; but the theater itself is not to be disturbed, and will continue operations without interruption. Later on the theater may be remodeled, but this is not contemplated at present. The net result, therefore, will be to give the house a very desirable surrounding, without otherwise affecting it in any way.

Suit over Rights to "Civilization."

Youngstown, O.—A controversy over the right to the first exhibition of the great Ince picture, "Civilization," in Youngstown, has resulted in the filing of a suit by the Youngstown Amusement Company, lessee of the Grand opera house, against the A. G. Fontana productions, controlling the picture, for $3,350 damages, this being the estimated loss caused by the fact that the Strand theater secured the first run of the picture. The Strand management declares that it cancelled a $250 engagement in order to make room for "Civilization," paying $100 for the release. Money in the hands of the Strand due to the Fontana company was attached as an incident to the suit, but the showing of the picture was in no wise interfered with, the Strand management having nothing to do with the suit.

New Youngstown Theater to Be the Liberty.

Youngstown, O.—The Federal Holding Company is to construct one of the finest theaters in this part of Ohio, already named the Liberty as the result of a contest for the selection of an appropriate name. The work will begin in a few weeks, and that practically all of the details regarding the house have been decided upon. As already announced, the house will seat 2,000 persons, and one of its features will be a $20,000 organ and orchestra. A modern ventilating system will be installed, and the appointments and conveniences will be of the most luxurious description. A large statue of Liberty will be a prominent feature of the exterior treatment of the building, serving to indicate its name.

Suit of Leaky Room on Leased Theater.

Akron, O.—Abraham Wiener, manager and lessee of the Alhambra theater, at Cuyahoga Falls, has filed suit for $5,000 damages against the Theater Supply Co., of Akron, on rather unusual grounds. He alleges that he leased the theater in 1914, with the understanding that the owners were to look after all necessary repairs. He declares that the roof has for a long time been in a leaky condition, with the result that people have stopped attending performances, and that the amount of damages asked for has resulted.

Changes Among the Cleveland Exchanges

A. M. Holah to Manage the Pathe Office and Dan Stern Becomes Chief Booker—C. E. Shurtleff and C. Goetz Go to the General Film.

By M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Bldg., Cleveland.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—Numerous changes among exchange men of Ohio have been reported within the last week, most of them concerning employees of Pathe.

C. E. Shurtleff has resigned as manager of the Cleveland Pathe exchange and gone to the General Film as district supervisor, with headquarters in Cleveland. His territory embraces these offices: Cleveland, Cincinnati, Wheeling, Buffalo and Syracuse.

A. M. Holah, brother of C. E. Holah of Cincinnati, formerly assistant manager, has been made manager of the Cleveland Pathe exchange, while Jack Conant, who had charge of city territory for that exchange, has been transferred to Detroit, where he will handle similar territory.

Dan Stearn has resigned as booker for the Victor film service, Cleveland, to be chief booker at the Pathe branch of the same city, succeeding Arthur Kurtz, who takes the city selling position.

Charles Goetz, formerly with the International and Pathe in Cleveland, has resigned to become affiliated with the General Film at Chicago.

Marty Kavanaugh Booking Films.

Cleveland.—Marty Kavanaugh, outfielder on the Cleveland American league baseball club, is booking films in Michigan this winter for the Union film company, Cleveland.

W. D. McGuire, Jr., Speaks in Cleveland.

Cleveland, O.—W. D. McGuire, Jr., executive secretary of the National Board of Review, spoke before the Cleveland Foundation recently. Besides members of the foundation, there were present representatives of the Exhibitors League and the Cleveland Screen club. The Foundation is making a survey of the picture theaters and other amusements of Cleveland.

F. B. Strawn Buys Two Theaters.

Cleveland, O.—F. B. Strawn, a jeweler of Cleveland, has bought the buildings and land of the Jewel theater and the Starlight theater, both located on St. Clair avenue, at the junction of East 125th street.

Strand Gets First Run Paramounts.

Cleveland, O.—The Strand theater, Cleveland, has contracted for first run Paramount in Cleveland, to start at once. The first picture will be Marguerite Clark in "The Fortunes of FiFi." For five years first-run Paramount has been at the Knickerbocker, not a down-town house. It is understood this theater will continue to run Paramount pictures.

Fatal Accident in Columbus.

Columbus, O.—In a collision between a Ford and a high-powered Velie on the Broad street bridge over the Black Lick, east of the Columbus Country club, Friday, Feb. 16, Ralph W. Kelly, of the Columbus Theater Equipment Company, and Joseph McCormick were killed. Leo E. Dwyer, president of the Columbus Theater Equipment, was injured; but is getting along nicely. To others were injured.

The lighter car was hurled for a distance of more than 100 feet, and the heavier car turned over into the creek bottom.

DETROIT NOTES.H. C. Griffin to Run the New Oakland.

Harry C. Griffin is announced as the manager of the New Oakland theater in Pontiac, Mich., which will open around April 1. He was for twenty years backstage of big dramatic and musical productions.

Louis Loeb, assistant general manager of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, was in Detroit, February 15 to 18.

A. J. Gilligham, of Detroit, is spending a few weeks in Florida and Cuba.

Harry Lorch has been appointed manager of publicity for the State film, of Detroit, coming from Chicago. He takes hold March 1.

The Drama League of Detroit has gone squarely on record as opposing state censorship of motion pictures. It believes that no three persons should set the standard for the community.

Col. W. S. Butterfield is building a new theater in Flint, Mich., to be known as The Palace.

Detroit, Mich.—Kerr and Berry have opened a new theater in Reed City, Mich. A motiograph projector was installed in the booth.

Detroit, Mich.—The American photoplayer company, under the management of Max Arnovitch, has opened a Detroit factory branch in the Joseph Mack building, Columbia and John streets. Mr. Arnovitch will specialize in Michigan and will ever be ready to give prompt service. He comes to Detroit from the southern part of California believing Michigan offers a more lucrative field. He has brought his family and Twin Six Packard along with him.

Censorship Discussed in Lansing

Many Attend Legislative Hearing on Proposed Censor Measure—Film Men Ably Present Their Side of the Question—A. J. Moeller, Secretary of the State League, and William H. Shiek of the Detroit League Speak.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—Censorship was discussed from every angle at the hearing before the committee on state affairs at Lansing, Mich., last Wednesday night, February 14. About 200 people were present in the house of representatives chamber, including members of the legislature, the committee and those who came to listen and to talk. Chairman Newkirk gave full permission and plenty of time to those who wanted to be heard, either for or against the bill.

Speaking for the bill were several clubwomen of Detroit and a number of preachers. Speaking against it were William H. Shiek, secretary of the Detroit Exhibitors' League; A. J. Moeller, secretary of the Michigan Exhibitors' League; W. S. McLaren, of Jackson, and Theodore Mitchell, personal representative for David W. Griffith.

The point brought out by Mr. Shiek was that censorship by a state board was unnecessary inasmuch as there was sufficient police power in every community to put a ban on all unclean pictures.

Mr. Mitchell said that while the producers themselves felt there were a few pictures that might be questionable, the operation of a board of censors in every state was not the remedy. He showed what a complete failure was the censor board in Pennsylvania and in Ohio.

Mr. McLaren spoke against the bill, protesting it vigorously. He said that he had tried a series of children's matinees for two weeks at five cent admission prices, putting on a special educational program, just to convince himself whether there was a field for children's matinees. He even made the price two admissions for five cents, and yet the children would not come. He said the trouble was that children preferred the regular shows, and that parents themselves did not take enough interest to see that their children attended the special afternoon performances. He said that his experience was the experience of many other exhibitors—children will not attend these educational performances.

If the committee weigh carefully all of the arguments pro and con they are certain to pigeon-hole the bill, but in the event that they report it out and it goes back to the house there is sure to be a fight, and it will mean that every exhibitor in the state will have to co-operate and give his fullest support to the defeat of the bill.

Detroit Will Have a Film Building.

Detroit, Mich.—It is absolutely certain that Detroit will have its own film building before the end of the current year. Contracts for the six-story structure on Elizabeth street were let on Monday, Feb. 19, and the building is to be completed by the first of next September. The building will be exclusively for film exchanges and allied trades. Already most of the space has been taken. G. S. Trask, formerly manager of the Mutual, was the promoter.

Will Build New Theater in Hancock.

Hancock, Mich.—This city is to have a new motion picture theater according to an announcement made by Frank Ongie, manager of the Savoy theater. The deal transferring the Coughlin lot on Quincy street to Mr. Ongie and his father, Napoleon Ongie, was made yesterday and this morning. Mr. Ongie stated it is their intention to erect a modern and up-to-date theater.

The new theater will be a handsome structure and will add greatly to the appearance of that part of the city. It will have a seating capacity of 900 people of which number 600 will be accommodated on the first floor. Every convenience for the comfort and safety of the patrons will be installed, and it will be one of the neatest and best things of its kind in this section of the state.

Many Big State Right Films.

Detroit, Mich.—The number of state rights pictures in Michigan is on the increase. W. S. Butterfield, of the State film company, has purchased about ten big features, including "Civilization," "A Mormon Maid," "The Conquest of Canaan," "Robinson Crusoe," "Libertine" and others. John H. Kunsy has "The Crisis" and several other big attractions. B. Barnett has "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" and "Joan the Woman," and Dave Klein has just bought "Absinthe" with King Baggott.

B. Barnett Office in Peter Smith Bldg.

Detroit, Mich.—B. Barnett, who has "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" and "Joan the Woman," will open permanent offices in the Peter Smith building about the first of March. He will have a complete organization for the booking and promoting of these features.

Dave Klein in the Pontchartrain.

Detroit, Mich.—Dave Klein, who has "Absinthe," can be located at the Hotel Pontchartrain. He already reports many bookings. In several cities he has arranged for the personal appearance of King Baggott himself.

Who Says 13 Is Unlucky?

Detroit, Mich.—When the World correspondent dropped into the Vitagraph exchange last week he found four of the employes opening up envelopes which contained profit-sharing checks. These are sent to Vitagraph employes every 13 weeks.

J. S. Visger Promoted.

Detroit, Mich.—Jack W. Loranger, of the Famous Players exchange in Detroit, announces that J. S. Visger has been promoted to special representative, while George A. Ranshaw will be special representative on the road. He was formerly with the Casino feature film, and more recently with the Paramount in Chicago.

The Ideal Show and the Right Price.

Detroit, Mich.—Elwyn M. Simons, of Adrian, Mich., says his idea of a good program for the daily-change exhibitor, is four-reel feature, one-reel comedy and one-reel scenic or educational. He also says that 10 and 15 cents is the ideal price policy.

C. W. Perry Becomes Assistant Manager.

Detroit, Mich.—C. W. Perry has been appointed assistant manager of the Pathe exchange in Detroit, a new position created for him. Jack Conant is now with the Pathe exchange in Detroit as special representative, coming from the Cleveland branch.

Personal Notes from Detroit.

Detroit, Mich.—D. Leo Dennison, formerly with Paramount, is spending a few weeks in Detroit combining business with pleasure. He is staying at the Hotel Pontchartrain.

Censorship Talk in Louisville

Two Hundred Women Hold Meeting and Discuss Pictures, Dress, Vaudeville and Children's Shows—A Motion Asks the City Council to Appoint Censor with Power to Ban Pictures Deemed Objectionable.

By Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Bldg, Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—Censorship in Louisville is the object of a movement initiated at a meeting of two hundred women in respect to a call by Mrs. Helm Bruce, president of the Fifth District organization of the Kentucky Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. Ben C. Frazier, president of the Parent-Teacher League, and Mrs. John H. Thomas, president of the Children's Protective Association.

The meeting was to consider objectionable moving pictures and to further consider present modes of women's dress. Both of these came in for some withering comment on the part of the reformers, and at the conclusion of the meeting it had been determined to ask the city council to enact an ordinance which would provide an official with authority to prevent showing of objectionable pictures, and authority to close up a motion picture theater which persisted in showing films of the character referred to.

Mrs. Bruce, the wife of one of the leading attorneys of the city, and identified with most of the reform movements, presided. "The question of improper motion pictures and theatrical entertainments has been coming to people interested in the matter of public recreation for some time," said Mrs. Bruce. "We know that in Louisville the motion picture is not the only source of danger. The last scene of the Russian ballet, given here recently, was without excuse, and the picture, 'Intolerance,' now being shown, is so full of horror that no person in the adolescent period should be allowed to see it. Vaudeville is often unfit for the young—we might as well admit it since we are here to talk plainly.

"If there is any class of people, however, which should be roused by these conditions, it is those women who have been brave enough to bring children into the world. We hear a great deal about birth control these days, and I believe that a reason for it is that women are afraid to bring children into a world in which even the young are surrounded by temptation and adversity."

Mrs. Harry Bishop, another local reformer, whose activity compelled the Boston opera company once to produce "Madame Butterfly," using a big wax doll for the child, also attacked the pictures being shown. "I want this meeting of mothers," she said, "to crystallize in a movement to make a cleaner city for the children. Do you think that your children can have the physical presented to them day after day in pictures and be unhurt?" she added. Mrs. Bishop told of a tour of moving picture theaters, and quoted the comment of children aged from 10 to 13 on a picture recently shown here. "I tried to get these children to leave the theater and go with me to see another picture, but they refused. They said they liked it. Films make a gradual transition to vice. They affect your children more directly than you know." Mrs. Pierce Butler, president of the Woman's Club, the leading women's organization of the city, made the motion asking the city council to pass an ordinance providing for the character of censorship desired. It is wanted that the ordinance would not only make it possible to suppress pictures considered to be improper, but that the same measure should include theatrical performances of the same character.

There is much interest in the proposal among the reforming element in the city. The Louisville Board of Censorship, which approves, with Mrs. Fred Levy, chairman, the pictures specially adapted for children, was to have taken action on the project at its last meeting. Mrs. Levy, however, was absent in New York, where she was selecting children's films, and the question was laid over to the next meeting. Comment generally, however, is to the effect that there is not a great deal of likelihood of an ordinance such as requested being enacted, at least at this time.

Asked to Have National Air Played.

Louisville, Ky.—All of the Louisville moving picture theater managers have been asked by the Kentucky branch of the Society of Colonial Dames, to have "The Star Spangled Banner" or "America" played by the orchestras or musicians at least once each day, while the audiences have been requested to stand at the same time. This request is in view of the present international situation, and some of the theaters have taken a favorable action on the request. It is noted, however, that the audiences are not very ready to stand and demonstrate their patriotism in that manner.

C. S. Van Wart in Charge of Local Mutual.

Louisville, Ky.—C. S. Van Wart, of the Chicago office of the Mutual Film, has come to Louisville and taken charge of the branch office of the company here, succeeding Percy L. Smith, who took his departure some time previous.

George Bleich Lends Theater for Belgian Children.

Owensboro, Ky.—George Bleich, manager of the Grand theater, has agreed to donate his theater for one afternoon and evening, at cost, to a local women's organization, which will take advantage of the occasion, put up the price, and provide for special music. The proceeds will be devoted to the Belgian children's fund. Mr. Bleich has made arrangements for some unusually attractive pictures for the occasion, and the orchestra will be augmented.

Louis Hayes to Rebuild Theater.

Henderson, Ky.—Louis Hayes has let a contract for reconstruction of the Princess theater, which was destroyed by fire about a year ago. The new building, which will embody the latest ideas of theater construction, will be erected at a cost of $25,000, and when it is completed Mr. Hayes, who was the pioneer of pictures in Henderson, will close the Gem, now operating, and concentrate on the Grand and the Princess. It is expected that the new theater will be ready for occupation by the first of May.

John B. Stout to Improve Opera House.

Danville, Ky.—John B. Stout has completed plans for remodeling and improving the Danville opera house, which he owns, and which he is operating as a motion picture house. The present entrance will be retained, but used for the colored people only, and a new entrance through Mr. Stout's drug store will admit the white people. Separate toilet rooms, rest rooms and a lobby will be provided, among other things, including the best type of projecting machine the owner can find. For safety the number of exits will be increased.

Tennessee Film Notes.

Louisville, Ky.—D. W. Griffith's "Intolerance" filled Macauley's theater twice daily during the week of Feb. 11-17, with the exception of the last night, when the house was not up to capacity.

Bowling Green, Ky.—The board of the Western Kentucky Normal School, located here, has installed a modern projecting machine in the auditorium of the main building of the school, and will make use of it from time to time in connection with the studies of the pupils. At the Kentucky Rural Life Conference the picture machine was used for showing many reels of life films provided by the government and other agencies.

Providence, Ky.—D. W. T. Hayes has purchased the popular "Dreamland" theater from R. L. Forsythe and will continue its operation.

Winchester, Ky.—Albert Conn has taken a lease on the Colonial theater from George Bros., and proposes to operate at intervals, showing only feature films. If business justifies, according to his announcement, in the spring, Mr. Conn will operate continuously.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Loew Opens Memphis Lyceum.

MEMPHIS, TENN.—The Lyceum was opened to the public on February 12th as a Loew picture and vaudeville house, pending construction of the proposed new $700,000 theater for the Loew interests in Memphis. The first week's program consisted of an Alice Brady feature, "The Hungry Heart," and three reels of comedy in addition to the vaudeville acts. A scale of prices has been arranged at 10 and 15 cents for week-day matinees, and 10 and 25 cents at night. Memphis is a wide-open Sunday show town, contrary to the other large cities in the state, and the night prices prevail on Saturday and Sunday matinees.

Indication point to a very successful run of the Loew entertainment in Memphis, it having been impossible to handle the crowds on opening day, and the management expects to carry the good will and patronage of the public with it when the new theater is completed.

"Daughter of the Gods" at Vendome.

Nashville, Tenn.—Annette Kellermann's "A Daughter of the Gods" is booked for an entire week's run at the Vendome, the largest road showhouse in the city, beginning February 26th. Prices are in conformity with those charged for the master spectacles of the screen during recent years, and much local advertising is in evidence. This feature is also being shown at Memphis, Chattanooga and Knoxville playhouses at greatly advanced prices, being placed on a par with the high class road shows of the season.

Knickerbocker Releases Orchestra.

Nashville, Tenn.—Owing to the expense of maintaining a full orchestra for the Knickerbocker, it was decided to abolish this feature of the entertainment. A ten thousand dollar pipe organ now furnishes the music altogether for this house. The instrument has been in service since the erection of the Knickerbocker, and has been used in connection with the orchestral music as well as during morning performances, but is now being used throughout the afternoon and evening.

Memphis United Shows Big Increase.

Memphis, Tenn.—Manager A. H. Kaufman, of the United film service, announces that the purchases for his branch have tripled the sum of last year for the month of January. As an instance of the growing popularity of this service he mentions the fact that the receipts for January, 1917, were $1,567 in excess of the corresponding month for 1916.

"The Lure," a Shubert-World feature, featuring Claire Whitney and James O'Neil, has been secured by this company, and will be distributed from the Memphis office.

Changes in Memphis Mutual.

Memphis, Tenn.—On January 29th the local branch of the Mutual film corporation changed managers, and the Fort Smith Arkansas, office was closed. Manager Smith from the Arkansas branch assumed the duties at Memphis, but remained at this point only until February 10th, at which time the managership was again thrown open. At the present writing no successor has been named for the Tennessee office, although the routine work is being carried on in the customary manner.

Roy Shelton Visits.

Nashville, Tenn.—Roy Shelton, director for the Fox Film Corporation at the New Jersey studios, has been in town a number of days on a visit to friends. Mr. Shelton is ex-manager of the Strand theater of this city, and while here took occasion to go over some matters regarding the recent transfer of ownership of that house to Carson Bradford, the present manager.

Birmingham Activities.

Birmingham, Ala.—Exhibitors and exchange men report that business has been extremely poor for several weeks prior to February 15th, on account of bad weather, but after that date empty seats were in the minority following a change for the better in climatic conditions.

"The Crisis" played the week of February 12th at the Bijou theater, and reported good houses.

"Civilization" was the offering at the Strand for the week of February 19th.

Announcement is made that the Queen feature service of Birmingham has secured the six-reel feature, "My County First," starring Tom Terriss. Manager Doc Graham states that from inquiries received by the Queen office, the picture promises to go like a house afire. This exchange has also acquired rights for the states of Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, North and South Carolina for exploitation of "The Soul of a Child," the Pioneer special feature.

Rockford Has Sunday Shows as Formerly

City Council Now Abides by the Will of the Majority of Voters. Expressed in Referendum and Sabbath Shows Return.

By Frank H. Madison, 628 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

ROCKFORD, Ill.—Sunday moving picture shows in Rockford are back on the old basis. The city council, by a vote of 8 to 7, passed an amendment to the ordinance which had changed the hours so that no show could profitably run. This leaves the shows free to operate the same hours as before the trouble began.

Alderman Gallagher, who has been fighting to have the old hours restored, introduced the ordinance and declared that the referendum vote of the people took the matter out of the city council's hands.

Resolutions from a number of labor organizations protesting against the regulating of Sunday moving picture shows and promising that union men would use their efforts to vote at the polls for officials who refused to carry out the will of the people were read. Mayor Bennett did not indicate whether he would veto the latest amendment to the ordinance.

The Rockford Register Gazette says: "The ordinance would have been changed in the first instance had not advantage been taken of the absence of two aldermen to bring the subject up. Had the two aldermen in question been present at that meeting the vote would have been exactly the same as it was last night, 8-7, in favor of abiding by the will of the majority. The small tempest in a teapot which was stirred up over the matter would then have remained unstirred."

Crystal Photoplays in Place of Barker-Swan Film.

Peoria, Ill.—The Crystal Photoplays Corporation takes the place of the bankrupt Barker-Swan Film Company. The property was bid in by Merrick A. Whipple, a Chicago attorney, who assumed all liabilities of the company, amounting to $73,000. Creditors would receive one hundred cents on the dollar, it was announced. A charter has been received from the secretary of state. The capital stock is authorized to be $150,000; of this Whipple, who is believed to represent other interests, holds $149,000. He will be secretary and general counsel. Frank Z. Ames, a banker of Rutland, Ill., who took title to the property, was elected treasurer, and P. W. Swan, assistant treasurer. A. H. Shields, of Chicago, who is to play a prominent part in the affairs of the new company was named acting president and general manager. Charles H. Dixon, of Chicago, who acted as receiver for the old company, takes the place of vice-president and will have charge of the production. The commercial management will be in the hands of Willis B. Long, of Chicago and New York. In addition to Whipple stockholders are: A. H. Shields, Charles H. Dixon, Frank Z. Ames, M. C. Nelson, P. W. Swan, F. R. Whipple and Mr. Troy. The concern will be a close corporation, it is announced.

Illinois Theater Changes and Showmanship Notes.

Shawneetown, Ill.—Joe W. May has purchased the interest of Charles Willis in the Grand theater. Willis had control but a very short time.

Kewanee, Ill.—Robert Quimby, manager of the Central Union telephone exchange at Galva, has been made manager of the Majestic and Willard theaters in this city. W. J. West, owner, will divide his time among the Kewanee houses, the West theater in Galva and the house which he controls at Cambridge.

Bushnell, Ill.—Walter Vail, a postoffice employee, has purchased the Cozy theater. Cobden, Ill.—The opera house was destroyed by fire.

Virginia, Ill.—The firm of McDaniels & Long, which operated the Tureman opera house, has been dissolved and a new concern known as the Tureman opera house company controls the moving picture shows given there. Henry Jacobs, county clerk, is president of the new company. L. A. Long is manager.

Kewanee, Ill.—Chris Taylor, proprietor of the Dreamland theater, and Charles Faulkner have leased a building at 113 West Second street and will remodel it into a moving picture theater, seating 375 persons. W. T. Braun, Chicago architect, has been employed to draw plans. The name of the new house will be selected in a prize contest. Taylor will continue to operate Dreamland theater.

Fairfield, Ill.—The Rex theater is devoting Wednesday and Saturday afternoons to special shows in an effort to secure more matinee business from people living in the country.

East St. Louis, Ill.—A small boy loosened the valve on a radiator, causing steam to flood the Majestic theater. A panic resulted but fortunately nobody was injured.

Streator, Ill.—Charles Vance, who recently sold his moving picture theater at Chillicothe, has planned to purchase a theater in the southern part of the state.

Rochelle, Ill.—Every Tuesday morning Manager Wimmer, of the Princess theater, shows two educational films for school children.

Taylorville, Ill.—After two or three delays "The Birth of a Nation" has been booked for the Grand, March 13-14.

Taylorville, Ill.—Manager Joseph McCarty turned the Empress theater over for a performance of "Shadow and Sunshine," for the benefit of the St. Cecilia circle of the Baptist church.

If You See That Film We'll Tell Your Wife

Over a Hundred Moral Uplift Persons Picket a Theater in Valparaiso, Ind., and Argue Against "Race Suicide" Picture.

From Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

VALPARASO, IND.—About 100 men and women, mostly the latter, all representing various clubs and church organizations of this place, picketed the streets leading to Schelling's music hall last week, and offered vigorous protests to the showing of the motion picture film "Race Suicide," which had been booked for three nights.

Opposition to such films as "Race Suicide" and "Purity" were voiced about ten days ago in resolutions adopted at a meeting of representatives of the Methodist Brotherhood, the Valparaiso Woman's Club and the Porter County Citizens' League. The action was intended to convey a warning to the motion picture theater managers, but failed of its purpose.

The sequel to the meeting came when the manager of the Schelling music hall, a motion picture house, advertised the showing of "Race Suicide." The self-appointed censors soon began to mobilize their forces, and, when the theater opened for the evening performance, appeared in large numbers in front of the place in an effort to dissuade theatergoers from entering.

Many women were turned back to their homes, but the advertising given to the show by the protestors proved a big drawing card for the men folks. They jammed the theater to the doors. The club women, with note-books, took the names of all the men known to them, and promised to report the matter to wives and other members of the family.

Numerous persons who attended the show denied that there was anything objectionable to the film.

"A Romance of Kokomo" Pleases.

Kokomo, Ind.—Kokomo's own motion picture production, "A Romance of Kokomo," which is being shown at the Isis theater, is proving a real success. The popular photoplay house is receiving large crowds daily, and there are indications of even larger attendances as the week progresses.

"A Romance of Kokomo" is a local photoplay, the characters of which were selected by a public voting contest conducted by a Kokomo newspaper, under the auspices of the Hundrie Film Company of New York. All the scenes were laid in Kokomo, and the whole presents a decidedly pleasing picture.

Indiana Theater Notes.

Rockville, Ind.—Roy Whitesell, a local business man, has purchased the Cozy theater, a motion picture house, from Tad L. Johnson, and will run the show only three nights a week. The theater was damaged by fire recently, and will not be opened until repairs are made.

Garrett, Ind.—The Pastime theater, owned and operated for the last few years by John Zeek, has been sold to Mr. and Mrs. George Owens. The new owners are planning to improve the interior of the theater and to change the picture twice a week.

Medora, Ind.—The Crescent theater, a local photoplay house, was sold last week to J. E. Bray and R. T. Callihan. Under the new management the theater will be open only on Wednesday and Saturday nights.

Missouri Censorship Hangs Fire

Senate Bill No. 79 Has Been Up Before Ways and Means Committee and Many Conferences Have Been Held, but Nothing Definite Has Been Accomplished—Exhibitors Have no Cause to Congratulate Themselves as Yet.

By A. H. Giebler, 4123 Westminster Pl., St. Louis, Mo.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—During the Civil War, in a little village called Knob View, there was a justice of the peace who was considered a sort of oracle. When the weekly paper would arrive everybody made it a point to go down to the "squire's office" to hear him read the news from the front. The war correspondent, after giving account of the battles and speaking of the movements of the various army corps and divisions, would always wind up his article with these words: "Otherwise the situation remains in statu quo."

One day one of the listeners asked "Squire, what does them words mean?" The squire was a stranger to the classics, but he could not admit the fact, so he assumed an air of wisdom and replied, "Ben, them words are Latin, and they mean, when translated, 'in a hell of a fix.'"

The censorship situation in Missouri is in statu quo just now. Senate Bill No. 79 has been up for consideration before the Ways and Means committee for two or three weeks; delegations have been sent to Jefferson City and numerous conferences have been held, but nothing definite has been accomplished, and now another bill has been introduced by Representative Boehm, and it is said still another one is being prepared.

The chances are very good that Missouri is going to have a censorship law of some kind, and a drastic one at that, and Missouri exhibitors and exchangers are going to find themselves in "statu quo," with a liberal application of the squire's definition, in a very short time, of a strong and determined fight is not made.

George Baldson, Jr., Promoted.

St. Louis, Mo.—George Baldson, former assistant manager of the V. L. S. E. exchange in New York, has succeeded A. N. Webster as manager of the V. L. S. E. office at 3630 Olive street.

Lew Bent Local Selznick Representative

St. Louis, Mo.—Lew Bent, who has been all up and down the line in the film business, has been appointed local representative for the Selznick pictures for St. Louis and eastern Missouri, to succeed I. P. Rosenberg. Mr. Bent's headquarters are in the Plaza building, on Olive street.

Delmar Theater Changes Hands.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Delmar theater, 4936 Delmar avenue, was sold to Mrs. J. W. Cornelius last week. Mrs. Cornelius is proprietor of the West End Lyric, diagonally opposite the Delmar, and of the Lyric and the Royal in the downtown section of the city. The Delmar is closed temporarily.

Trade Letter from Des Moines

By Dorothy Day, Register-Tribune, Des Moines, Ia.

Newspaper Entertains Children at Garden.

DES MOINES, Ia.—Without doubt one of the biggest film happenings in the city last week occurred at the Garden theater Saturday morning, February 17. The Evening Tribune, the newspaper of Des Moines that takes the greatest interest in the motion picture business, carries the largest film advertising and devotes the most space to reviews and motion picture gossip, rented the Garden theater, one of the largest theaters in the city, for Saturday morning. Then the paper inserted a coupon in every edition for a week in advance, the coupon admitting any child below the age of fifteen. It is estimated that 3,500 children were admitted to the Garden theater to see the three performances of "Such a Little Queen" with Mary Pickford. The Tribune is already planning another performance to take place the following week if possible and at any rate in a couple of weeks.

Theater Notes Over the State.

Woodard, Ia.—Robert Connor is the new manager of the Opera House in Woodard.

Davenport, Ia.—"Panthea" with Norma Talmadge quite took Davenport by storm a couple of weeks ago when the Garden theater was packed to the roof. A big blizzard was raging and the other shows in town starved.

Brooklyn, Ia.—P. E. Wilcox is the new owner of the Broadway theater in Brooklyn.

Amesworth, Ia.—E. W. Spessard purchased the Play House theater in Amesworth of Lee Workman.

Callers at Des Moines Exchanges.

Des Moines, Ia.—Mr. Saul of Saul & Son, the owners of the Irving theater in Carroll, was a visitor at the Des Moines Pathe exchange last week. Saul & Son are the oldest exhibitors in Carroll.

Powd McLuen of the McLuen theater in Guthrie Center, C. E. Arnes of the Princess theater in Reinbeck, Pettit of Pettit and Gushorn, owners of the Iowa theater in Winterset, Chester Zuck of the Lyric theater in Dallas Center, and J. A. Hitchcock of the Commercial Club theater in Beman, were all last week callers at the Pathe exchange.

A. C. Schuneman of Webster City, the manager of the Isis theater, was a visitor at the Mutual exchange last week.

Ben Bloom, who recently sold his rights in Kansas and Missouri for the feature, "The Unborn," was in this city the other day looking over some state rights propositions.

Harry Rosenberg, who has the United States rights for "Ignorance," by Anthony P. Kelly, who wrote "The Soul of a Woman," one of the finest Metro pictures ever released, was in Des Moines last week, on his way to the Coast. He has sold the rights for his picture in several states but did not succeed in placing the Iowa rights in this city.

Lewis J. Selznick to Visit Des Moines.

A. H. Blank, president of the Mid West Photoplay, just returned from New York last week. He expects to go to Kansas City at once to visit the Mid West and Triangle offices there. He brought back the news that Lewis J. Selznick will pay this territory a visit in a couple of weeks. Mr. Selznick will visit the Blank, will go to the Kansas City branch and will also pay a visit to Rathner and Conhoun of the Supreme Features in Minneapolis.

Des Moines F. I. L. M. Club.

Des Moines, Ia.—The Des Moines Film Credit Association has already changed its name and now is known as the Des Moines F. I. L. M. Club. This little organization is setting out to be the most congenial little body ever formed in this state by the film men and already is tightening wires around some who are not as sure pay as they might be.

Texas State News Letter

By N. E. Flanagan, 516 North Ervay St., Dallas, Texas.

Local Exchange Notes.

DALLAS, Texas.—Tom N. Parker arrived in Dallas Wednesday, Feb. 14, and assumed the new management of the World Film. Nat Barach, former manager, has been assigned special work in the southern division.

E. C. Jansen, southern district manager of the World Film Co., arrived in Dallas Monday, Feb. 11, after visiting Atlanta, Ga., and New Orleans. The World has started a big sales campaign through the South with quite gratifying results.

Local People at the Little Rock Conference.

Carl H. Pierce, representative of the Paramount, his wife, and C. E. Tandy, general manager, were present at the meeting of exhibitors at the Adolphus hotel, Dallas, preceding the Abilene convention. Luncheon was served and informal talks were made as to better cooperation with the exhibitors. Representatives from Amarillo to Galveston and the furthest points of Texas were present. Mrs. Grace Veil, editor of the "Weekly Review," Paramount official organ, published at Atlanta, Ga., was also there and C. A. Chivers, sales manager of Atlanta, was a visitor.

The party went to Oklahoma to attend the State Exhibitors' League Conference, held Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Feb. 11-14. The party was augmented from Dallas by W. B. Scott, sales manager of Paramount in Texas, R. W. Lynch, manager of Texas Co., J. F. McTyer, W. F. Wilkinson, and Albert Russell, managers of the Metro Pictures, Max Osborne, special representative of the World Film, G. F. Smith, representing Vitagraph Co.

A large party of exchange men from Dallas left on a special car of the Sunshine special for the Exhibitors Conference in Little Rock, Arkansas. Among the party were E. C. Leaves, C. H. Wurz, J. A. Cressey, Cliff Reed, C. R. Scott, H. M. Henry, Albert Russell, W. F. Wilkinson, Nat Barach, C. C. Clegg, Jack Burke, Earle Larson Morrow, and W. G. Underwood.

Wuerz exhibited Max Linder's first comedy. Over 150 exhibitors were present. Following the Arkansas conference the party attended the Oklahoma conference.

Texas Theater Notes.

Frost, Tex.—Dorbrandt Bros., of Athens, have bought the Lyric theater at Frost.

Fort Worth, Tex.—P. C. Levy, manager of the Hippodrome and Strand theaters, Fort Worth, is spending a week in New York City, looking over current releases.

Longview, Tex.—T. C. Clawson has sold the Rembert theater at Longview to D. L. Praul.

Italy, Tex.—J. C. Couch of Italy has sold his Elk theater to Hammer. Couch has been in Italy several years. He will retire temporarily.

Visitors in Dallas.

F. L. Cauvey of the Gem theater, Frederick, Okla., was in town last week. Mr. Mudd of Waurika, Okla., was also here. Other visitors were Polemanacher of the Crown theater, Houston; Sam Schwartz of the Aztech theater, Eagle Pass; J. M. Robb of San Angelo; K. C. Cox of the Majestic theater, Ozono, and A. V. Wade of Lewisville.

W. R. Wilkinson, with the McClurg Co., has brought "The Seven Deadly Sins" to the Triangle offices in Dallas and is selling to exhibitors. T. F. McTyer, formerly of Atlanta, is traveling out of the Triangle office in Dallas.

"Idle Wives," Universal feature, shown at the Old Mill theater, Dallas, this week, attracted large crowds. E. H. Hulsey has contracted for "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea." He has booked this for a month and it will be shown through his whole circuit in Texas.

Films at Minneapolis's Theaters.

The Minneapolis Aster and St. Paul Starland have booked the Selznick feature, "Vera, the Medium," featuring Kitty Gordon.

The Lyric began its second week with "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," Feb. 18, to a good business.

The Strand enjoyed a good business the week of Feb. 11, with the Winnipeg-St. Paul dog derby drivers appearing in person in connection with pictures of the race, and "The Americano." Twenty-five cents admission was charged. The Strand this week is running "The Truant Soul" at 15 cents.

The New Garrick did a good business with George Beban in "His Sweetheart," and Vivian Martin in "The Wax Model," the week of Feb. 11, at 15 and 10 cents.

The St. Paul Alhambra extended its run of W. S. Hart in "The Gun Fighter" two days to accommodate the crowds.

With Northwest Exhibitors.

Fargo, N. D.—Mr. and Mrs. William McCarthy, of the Isis theater here, became the proud parents of a handsome baby girl Friday, Feb. 16.

Wausau, Wis.—W. O. Sawyer, of Grand Forks, has bought the Majestic from F. M. Rehffus and has taken charge.

Bemidji, Minn.—E. M. Ney has taken over the management of the Rex theater here. Virginia, Minn.—The new theater now being built will be named the Royal, according to Manager Springer.

Minneapolis, Minn.—President D. W. Chamberlain, of the American amusement company, has opened offices in the Jewelers' exchange here. The American company controls theaters in Minneapolis, Mankaton and Fargo.

Washburn, Wis.—Walter F. Smith has sold his Gem theater here to R. W. Smith, and has gone to Minneapolis to exploit a film feature.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Among the visitors to local film exchanges the week of Feb. 11 were: Stanley Smith, Princess, Sioux Falls, S. D.; H. L. Walker, Walker, Aberdeen, S. D.; W. F. Smith, Gem, Washburn, Wis.; Manager Weaver, Iris, Edgeley, N. D.; H. A. Rolbiecki, Strand, Winona, Minn.; Thomas Furniss, Rex, Duluth, Minn.; S. H. Whitmore and C. Klock, Crescent, Minneota, Minn., and Clara Albright, Princess, St. Cloud, Minn.

Wisconsin Senate Passes Sunday Option Bill

Act Would Leave It to the Several Localities Whether to Have Shows on Sabbath or Not—Measure Scares One Legislator.

By Frank H. Madison, 626 S. Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

MADISON, WIS.—By a vote of 15 to 8 the Wisconsin State Senate passed the amended bill which will permit the operation of moving picture shows on Sunday. There was considerable opposition in the upper house. "It has been said here that certain measures would be in defiance of the constitution," pleaded Senator Henry Roether. "This act proposed to reject the commandments of God, written on stone, in Mt. Sinai. It would repeal the divine law, to remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy."

This measure leaves it to localities whether they will permit amusement on Sunday. Senator Bennett, one of its opponents, cited an opinion by the attorney general given two years ago with a similar measure in which the attorney general gave it as his opinion that the bill was delegation of legislative authority. The act as it was amended gives the power to village boards and city councils to legalize wholesome Sunday entertainment under proper restriction.

Must Pay Expressage Both Ways

Minneapolis F. I. L. M. Club Notifies Exhibitors in Territory That They Will Be Charged for the Carriage of Films—Sunday Closing in North Dakota Is a Possibility to Be Guarded Against—Other Notes.

By John L. Johnston, 604 Film Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Members of the F. I. L. M. Club at their last meeting here voted to notify exhibitors of the territory that within two weeks they would have to pay expressage on films both ways, and that in the future exchanges would charge for all paper and photographs. The F. I. L. M. Club is composed of representatives of practically every film exchange in the city, and President W. K. Howard states the decision to demand expressage both ways from exhibitors was reached only after a lengthy discussion of both sides of the question. The exchange-men state the cost of bookkeeping and checking of express charges and paper shipments is too high, and that by paying their own express exhibitors may be able to get their films a trifle cheaper—although this was not mentioned at the meeting.

Waking Up to Sunday Closing Law.

Mandan, N. D.—Exhibitors of North Dakota are being urged to get up petitions against the Sunday closing law and send them at once to President H. L. Hartman, of the North Dakota Exhibitors' Association here. If the Sunday closing law is not battled immediately it will undoubtedly go into effect, and in such event would hurt exhibitors of the Flickertail state more than a little. Petitions can also be sent to J. Walker McGuinness at Williston, N. D.

Changes Among Local Exchange Managers.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The changing of exchange managers still continues, and the city's film row is rapidly becoming to look like a court house the week after election—new faces everywhere, and old men in new positions. The post office may have to put on a new man to change addresses of film men if the constant switching around does not cease soon.

Jesse Fred Cubberley, who recently left the Zenith exchange to become manager of the Universal exchange, has resigned the latter position, and is now in the East making arrangements for his own states rights exchange and features for it.

Ralph E. Bradford, for some time manager of the local Triangle exchange, has resigned to accept Mr. Cubberley's position with the Universal. Mr. Bradford's successor has not been named as yet, but an out-of-town man, it is said, will likely be given the berth.

E. C. Davies, who resigned from the Triangle and Lochren exchange a few months ago to become manager of the American Maid Film Company exchange, has resigned that post, and is now a free agent. Mr. Davies' successor has not as yet been named.

Charles C. Knapp, former manager of the General exchange, and more recently road man for the Universal, has resigned and gone to Detroit, Mich., to spend the rest of the winter and some of the summer.

The visit of Victor C. Hodupp, C. R. Seelye's right hand man, here last week brought forth the announcement that J. E. Schwartzbein was made permanent manager of the Pathe exchange, of which he has been acting manager since H. E. Friedman resigned a month ago.

C. Cuthbert Starts Exchange.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Clarence Cuthbert, for some time connected with the General exchange here, has started a film exchange of his own at 614 Boston block, and will handle war films exclusively. Mr. Cuthbert has secured for his first two pictures "Victory" and "Destruction of the European Nations," and negotiations are under way for other productions of this type.

Minneapolis Exchange Notes.

The Lochren film corporation has begun the making of animated cartoons under the direction of J. L. Johnston and E. H. Camp.

Julius Bernheim, of the Bluebird exchange, has announced that he will handle "Hell Morgan's Girl" in this territory.

The Supreme exchange's Unity department is boosting its "My Country First" feature, starring Tom Terriss, and has received a good many bookings for it to date.

Manager Lee A. Horn, of the Selznick exchange, has announced that Clara Kimball Young features and "War Brides" have been booked to the Walker circuit of theaters, Aberdeen, S. D.; Homestead, S. D., and Garden theater, Rochester, Minn.

Green & Steffes, who recently bought rights on "Ignorance," have opened offices in the Loeb Arcade building.

Manager Benjamin Friedman, of the Friedman Enterprises, Inc., is in New York, where the big private showing of his film, "The Mormon Maid," was given.

Manager S. N. Robinson, of the Fox exchange, has booked his program in the Rex theater, Bemidji, Minn.

W. W. Cutter, K-E-S-E roadman, has returned to Minneapolis after being snow-bound in the Dakotas for several days.

After being snow-bound at Marshfield, Wis., for two days, H. R. Harrison, of the Favorite exchange, went to Milwaukee for a good start to get to Minneapolis.

Manager B. F. Benno, of the Fargo, N. D., Mutual exchange, has returned to his desk after three days' rest at Hankinson, N. D., where he was snow-bound.

Harry E. Rawson, roadman for the Independent, has been shifted to the Milwaukee branch office. He is booking "The Yellow Menace" through Wisconsin.

Making the Best Films Its Policy.

Waukesha, Wis.—Mrs. H. A. Jones, manager of the Colonial theater, is making an experiment of "pure and educational" romantic films. The first of these, "Ramona," received the endorsement of the Waukesha Municipal League, which appointed a committee to pass upon moving pictures. The film was booked for Saturday and Sunday at 25 and 50 cents. A 10 cent matinee for school children.

Plan to Eliminate Nudity.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Milwaukee exchanges and exhibitors are working in harmony with the Milwaukee commission on motion pictures in its plan to eliminate nudity in films after May 1, according to Guy R. Radley. "There is no intention of hampering art in the moving pictures," he said, "but there is a determination to cut out that which, under the guise of artistry, is but mere sensual appeal."

A Distinctive New Orleans Picture Theater

Under the Management of L. H. Bernard the Beautiful Theola Has Become a Model Downtown Picture House—Its Seating Capacity is 1,500.

By N. E. Thatcher, 3801 Canal St., New Orleans, La.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—The success of the Theola theatre since it has passed under the ownership of Theodore Lala, and the management of L. H. Bernard, gives a practical illustration of what can be made of a motion picture theater when modern methods are employed to commend it to the public. There was a time when the atmosphere about the Theola was not the same as it is now.

The house was originally built for a dramatic theater at a cost of nearly $40,000. It was fitted with every appliance for poration of Atlanta, who, in a measure were concerned with the pleasurable sojourn of Mr. and Mrs. Carl A. Pierce, of the Paramount. Mr. Pierce is on a trip south to make personal observations of the field and to get into more intimate touch with the conditions here. He is making a close study of the subject of publicity on his trip and already has asked for opinions of more or less expert consequence.

Southern Ideas of Advertising.

He was quite surprised to note the deliberation with which the Southern people form their judgments and the tenacity with which they hang to them when once they are formed. If there is one form of publicity which the South detests, it is the bombastic, ballyhoo style of exploitation. A perfectly good attraction can be killed very quickly by a too zealous press agent and many a good picture has lost its chance by being announced as the greatest thing that was ever produced. The Southern people read their newspapers religiously and they accept the newspaper reports upon the quality of any attraction as final. Mr. Pierce manifested great interest in this phase of the situation here and he noted with evident relish the propensity of the people of the South to have a good time and to be entertained. They like motion pictures and it is a surprising fact that a feature production frequently draws much greater crowds after it has gone to the second run houses than when it first comes from the producer.

The people wait until judgment is passed through channels upon which they depend. That is one of the reasons the suburban houses are so prosperous, and Mr. Pierce was quite surprised at the liberality with which these houses use newspaper advertising. He found the same conditions to be true of the territory which is supplied from the New Orleans film exchanges, and he found many other things that were of material interest to him. The Paramount party made a short visit to Dallas, Texas, but returned to New Orleans in time to see the Mardi Gras parades and some of the races. They have been delighted with their trip and their reception in the South.

School Children and Good Pictures.

New Orleans, La.—During the week of February 11, two notable feature films of especial educational value were exhibited at local theaters, the one being the Arctic pictures taken by Dr. John Raskin on his last trip to the frozen North to aid in the rescue of the Steffenson party, and the other being "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea." Dr. Raskin endeavored to interest the schools in his picture, but was unsuccessful, the objection being that an admission was being charged to see the picture, although a special low rate was suggested for school children. The matter drifted along until one of the newspapers took a rather strong editorial position in favor of allowing the children to see the actual moving pictures of the Arctic life and also of any other films that might present the element of scientific discovery or accomplishment. There was a marked change thereafter. Teachers in the schools advised their scholars to see the pictures, and a very noticeable increase in the number of juveniles in the audiences where these features were being shown was the result, and both of the productions had a phenomenal run.

Local Triangle District Defined.

New Orleans, La.—Manager Owens, of the Southern Triangle film exchange, has had his duties multiplied. There is always a sort of a rivalry between Atlanta and New Orleans exchange men in the matter of getting business, and the contentions sometimes approach open strife. Territorial boundaries are jealously watched, and any attempt at poaching has brought swift trouble. In order that a more equitable division of business might be the result the northwestern part of Florida; western Tennessee and southern Alabama have been assigned to the New Orleans office of the Southern Triangle, and Manager Owens is already getting his forces shaped for the campaign in his new domain.

Saenger Interests Extend.

Texarkana, Tex.—The Saenger amusement company has taken over the Grand opera house at Texarkana, and is refitting the house to provide for the showing of motion pictures. A regular program will be presented, but in event that good road attractions are offered reservation is made for the offering of theatrical entertainments upon occasional dates. The Saenger interests are extending their operations at a very lively rate, and are acquiring some very fine locations.

Baldwin and Suttle Open Booking Office.

New Orleans, La.—Messrs. Baldwin and Suttle, owners of the special film, "The Little Girl Next Door," have found it necessary to open an office at 415 Carondelet street, to take care of their increasing bookings. Without attempting to analyze the case, this feature has had a very generous patronage in this section. It is said to have cleared over $5,000 on its showings in this city alone and it is still going strong. It is one of the "moral lesson" pictures which the public appears to accept.

The Old Carrollton Makes Room for the New.

New Orleans, La.—The Carrollton theater, one of the oldest and best of the suburban photoplay theaters of the city, presented its last picture on Wednesday, February 14, and immediately work of demolishing the building to make way for the new Carrollton projected by the Sobel, Richards & Shear Amusement Company, was commenced. Under the management of Mrs. Al. G. Shear the Carrollton has been running for more than five years and she has made a notable success of the business. The last offering was in the nature of a farewell reception for citizens of the neighborhood.

Jeanerette, La.—A. S. Carlos, of the Bijou theater at Jeanerette, La., has just completed the fitting up of his theater with two new projecting machines and other appliances which places his house among the best equipped in his section.

Hattiesburg, Miss.—A. J. Xydias has purchased the Lomo theater at Hattiesburg, Miss., and is contemplating the purchase of other houses so that he may have a chain in which to exhibit the pictures which he is releasing from his independent exchange in this city.

Theola Theater, New Orleans.

the presentation of the best attractions and for a time was a popular place of amusement. In the course of time it reverted to a motion picture theater and passed under successive managements. A few months ago Mr. Lala secured control of the building and at once proceeded to put it in the best possible shape for the modern showing of motion pictures. The house was renovated from foundation to garret and every appliance for the proper projection of pictures was installed.

Nothing that would add to the attractiveness of the theater or to the comfort of its patrons was overlooked with the result that the Theola is one of the leading and most popular suburban theaters in the city. It has a seating capacity of over 1,500 and there is seldom a night when the house is not filled, it being the rule to stop selling tickets on account of the crowds more frequently than it is the exception. There has been a marked improvement in the size as well as the character of the audiences.

None but the very best releases are shown and the management insists that every employe shall contribute his full share to the air of decorum and refinement which is a distinctive quality at this house. The Theola is situated in one of the most populous sections of the downtown, or what is known as the French side of the city, and the residents are extremely fond of amusements. This in no small measure has contributed to the marked success which has been enjoyed by this theater since its reopening under the present management.

Atlanta, Ga.

Selznick Branch Coming to Atlanta.

ATLANTA, GA.—The establishment of a branch house of the Lewis J. Selznick interests in Atlanta was announced by Sam E. Morris, representative of that company, who is in Atlanta to superintend the opening of offices in the Moore building on Walton street.

Simultaneous with the opening of distributing houses in several of the larger cities of the United States, it was decided to make Atlanta the "fighting mast" from which the operations of the Selznick interests in Dixie should be directed.

A. C. Bromberg is manager of the Atlanta branch, Mr. Bromberg formerly was manager of the Triangle film corporation and Mutual film corporation, and his acquaintance among southern exhibitors will help. Mr. Bromberg is the dean in point of service of the exchangemen of Atlanta.

The Criterion theater has contracted to screen the Selznick output, and the first of these features will be Norma Talmadge in "Panthea," which will be shown there four days beginning February 28.

New Criterion Film Co. Formed.

Atlanta, Ga.—The Criterion film company, organized to distribute over Southern territory super-productions only, was formed Monday with offices in Atlanta.

The company was formed by Sig Samuels, managing director of the Criterion theater, and Willard C. Patterson, manager of the same house. The first production to be handled will be "The Conquest of Canaan," starring Jack Sherrill and Edith Talliaferro. This picture first will be shown in Atlanta the first four days of the week at the Criterion, and from then on its route is being mapped out through practically every city in the southeastern states.

Other productions of similar magnitude are being contracted for and will be sent through this territory.

Miss Clementine Takes the Chevrolet.

Atlanta, Ga.—Miss Clementine Marlin, Dawson, Ga., who won first prize in the Southeastern Land Show's motion picture screen contest, has notified the management of the show that she will take the Chevrolet automobile in preference to a two weeks' visit at a motion picture studio. She shows good sense.

W. T. Murray on Road for Arcraft.

W. T. Murray, formerly manager of the Oden theater, in Atlanta, is now on the road for the Arcraft productions, and is one of the most enthusiastic road men now working out of Atlanta.

W. C. Brandon, manager of the Arcraft branch in Atlanta, left Thursday for a tour of Alabama and Tennessee.

"A Daughter of the Gods" played to S. R. O. at the Lyric theater the past week.

Nebraska Theater Notes.

Omaha, Neb.—A co-operative moving picture theater may take the place of the Dundee theater in Dundee, a suburb. This house, which was owned and managed by A. C. Hartman of the Omaha film exchange, has been closed. Business men of the suburb realized that a good moving picture theater was an asset to a community and evolved the co-operative idea. Former Manager Hartman, Judge Slabaugh, W. R. Adair, Harry Deuel and D. W. Johnson are interested in the plan to include selling stock among the residents. After the house has been financed the profits will be used in securing high class pictures.

Callaway, Neb.—Gavin Robertson has sold the Star theater to W. E. Reeder.

Scotts Bluff, Neb.—The Queen theater has been sold to Harry Debuque.

Movie Ball in Kansas City Shaping Up

Belles From the Smaller Towns to Come and Compete for Honors as "Queen of the Ball"—Will Get a Chance to Act in Films.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—The Movie Ball, planned and being pushed by the Kansas City Screen Club, is progressing finely. Exhibitors of the small towns will be asked to choose several pretty girls, one of whom will be sent to Kansas City at the time of the ball to compete for the chance of entering the pictures. One girl is to be crowned "Queen of the Ball," and several of the best-looking ones, picked by a committee, will be sent to Frisco with the opportunity of getting in the films. On the night of the event several well-known stars will appear. So far it is not positively known who will be procured, although the committee has a good lineup. All the money made by the ball will go to the Kansas City Screen Club to be used in improvements at the club. Quite a bit of local interest is being stirred up over the event, and all indications point to a clearance of several thousand dollars. The committees and directors are:

Frank Newman, owner of the Royal and Regent theaters, president; R. C. Cropper, manager Universal, Kansas City, vice-president; Phil. Ryan, assistant manager, Standard Film Corp., chairman house committee.

C. G. Bard, formerly owner of Columbia and Rialto theaters, manager of directors; Leo Forbstein, musical director; Jack Rothbaum, treasurer Ball Fund; F. L. Kiltz, manager of Mutual exchange, head doorman; W. Hardin, manager of Metro exchange, stage director.

J. H. Gilday, former manager of Willis Wood, floor manager; Sam Forbstein, chief usher; C. R. Buckingham, Apollo theater, box manager; Mr. Riess, assistant manager of Universal exchange, grand marshal of parade.

Several big vaudeville acts from the Hippodrome will be booked to entertain and after the program and selection of girls will be a general dance. At midnight the carnival will take place and confetti be thrown.

Demand for Educational and Religious Films Is Growing.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Kansas City exchanges are making, more and more, a specialty of their educational and religious films. A. D. Flintom, president of the Kansas City feature film company, says: "It is incredible the number of educators who are equipping to give motion picture entertainments, and 95 per cent. of them are making a profit for their trouble." Other exchange men are saying the same thing. Consequently, they are beginning to cater to this phase of the trade. For example, the Baraca Bible class, of the First Baptist church, Topeka, has arranged to give a whole series of such picture entertainments, in their own auditorium, with their own equipment. They have contracted for the "Sign of the Cross" and for South American travel pictures with the Paramount. Similar photographs are being asked for more and more all over the country. Women's organizations and religious societies are sending their representatives to Kansas City in quest of such pictures, and particularly for films suitable for children alone.

T. E. Crozier Goes to Paramount.

Kansas City, Mo.—T. E. Crozier, who for some time has been employed on the staff of the Kansas City Star, has accepted a position as assistant manager in the publicity department of the Paramount exchange.

Chas. Nichols Special Representative for Serial.

Kansas City, Mo.—Chas. Nichols, who has for the past few months been selling Metro film out of the Kansas City office, has been appointed special representative for "The Crimson Stain" and will travel out of Kansas City into Kansas and Missouri towns in the interest of this film.

Bonaventure Theater's Egg Benefit.

Kansas City, Mo.—Eggs, two for an adult and one for a child, were the price of admission at the benefit performance given by the Bonaventure theater recently for Mercy hospital. The children in this hospital have long been deprived of eggs, and this novel scheme was hit upon. In return for the eggs, a nine-reel program was given, and in addition to singing and dancing.

Many "Snow White" Shows.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Paramount exchange is still rejoicing over the Star's "Snow White" party in Kansas City, for the fever has spread. In addition to the Topeka and Des Moines papers doing the same thing, the Sedalia Democrat has followed suit. W. J. Brill was in charge. Thousands, coming from miles around, saw the picture.

Kansas Film Show Notes.

Sabetha, Kan.—C. W. Robinson, manager of the Royal theater, has sold out to Herman A. Kock. Mr. Kock says that he intends showing three features a week.

Burns, Kan.—Frank Garrety, well known in the Southern and Central parts of Kansas, among the exhibitors, recently sold the Novelty theater, Burns, to Eikin & Lathrop. This firm also runs a newspaper at Burns.

Altamont, Kan.—C. M. Miller, principal of the Altamont high school, recently installed moving picture apparatus and was in Kansas City contracting for various educational features.

Emporia, Kan.—P. J. Concannon, owner of the electric theater, is giving Saturday morning performances for children and is making a great success, several hundred children having attended each show.

Syracuse, Kan.—M. G. Gleary is handling the educational and religious pictures which are so popular in that section of the state.

Cottonwood Falls, Kan.—Mrs. Jabin Johnson has sold her theater building to R. H. Cross of Wichita.

McPherson, Kan.—The Tournay building is being remodeled into a most up-to-date picture show.

Bird City, Kan.—Bird City has a fine new opera house which is equipped for a picture show and will soon be opened.

Hays City, Kan.—Work is progressing rapidly on a new theater building for Hays City.

Beverly, Kan.—Roy Horry has moved his picture show to the new hall.

Walnut, Kan.—Fire recently destroyed the opera house here. It was used for pictures.

Missouri Notes.

Kansas City, Mo.—G. M. Hood, special representative of the Vitaphone Film Co., who has been traveling in Missouri, says that, owing to poor crop conditions, some of the houses are showing only three nights a week.

Fredericksburg, Mo.—A. H. Thost, manager of the Gem theater, has been obliged to close his house on account of the epidemic of smallpox which has struck that part of Missouri.

Bolivar, Mo.—R. K. and R. M. Long, recently of Harrisonville, Mo., have purchased the Cossy theater.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Nelson Bros., Rialto theater, are the first to handle "Whoso Taketh a Wife."

Rocky Mountain Club Rewards Huffman

The Smashing Success of the Club's Screen Ball Was Due in Large Measure to the Efforts of Secretary Harry Huffman—Vociferated Appreciation.

E. C. Day, Denver Correspondent.

DENVER, COLO.—The threatened American-German hostilities can only be tame at best alongside of the stormy scene staged at the weekly luncheon of the Rocky Mountain Screen Club at the Albany hotel Feb. 15. It was brief but full of fire and the members present would have done justice to a real moving picture drama had a camera man been cranking the scene.

Harry Huffman, secretary of the club, was the "victim" of the occasion. His connection with the recent screen club ball, as manager, was the cause of the fracas.

The ball, which was the club's first attempt, was such a howling success that the members felt that Mr. Huffman deserved some reward. It was decided that the weekly luncheon was the proper time and place.

A committee of exchange men and exhibitors "framed" up a deal whereby Mr. Huffman was called home by the serious illness of his wife just as he was about to leave his office to attend the luncheon. He raced home anxious for the welfare of his spouse. When the secretary reached his home he found that there was no illness. He could not understand the emergency message, but when his wife suggested that maybe he had been called through a mistake in telephone numbers he hastened back to the business district. He was late but not too tardy to maintain his unbroken record of continuous attendance at the luncheons.

A sentinel had been placed and when Huffman's approach was signaled the fireworks began. He entered the room to look upon scenes never before witnessed at the usually quiet gathering. He found the film men pounding on the tables, hurling injectives, and all talking at once. Everyone was too busy to notice him and he was at a loss to account for the unusual situation. Finally he heard W. E. "Bill" Foley holler out in unmistakable words "I think it was the worst farce" ever staged. A minute later he learned that the Screen Club ball was the subject of the row. Criticism of the manager of the affair was most vitriolic. At first he planned to make a quiet getaway but then decided to fight when President Nolan rapped for order and got it. Some one "discovered" that Huffman had arrived in the meantime and one of his supporters moved that he be given a chance to say something. It was voted down. Then a motion was made that a committee be appointed to take the case of the dance manager in hand. Some one wanted to know what could be done to the manager; why he should be blamed entirely for the "fiasco." The chair announced that the committee would decide that.

The committee retired and a few moments later returned with a beautiful electrolier which was presented to Mr. Huffman in appreciation of his efforts. He was so overcome that when he attempted to thank the club members tears welled in his eyes and his voice failed him.

The electrolier will be installed in Mr. Huffman's new home, which is now nearing completion. It was selected with the help of Mrs. Huffman, who was in on the secret from the first.

C. W. Young Heads Local Fox Exchange.

Denver, Colo.—The Fox Film Corporation has a new manager in Denver. He is C. W. Young, formerly of Kansas City. He succeeds Albert W. Eden, who has been transferred to Seattle.

Harry Lenhart, Western manager, supervised the transfer in Denver and accompanied Mr. Eden to the Northwest, where he will oversee the reorganization of the Seattle office.

Mr. Eden had been in Denver for almost a year and made an enviable record. He recently captured first prize in a nation wide business getting contest, in which all Fox exchanges competed.

Mr. Young, the new manager, has been associated with the Fox Corporation at Kansas City since the opening of the office there.

Denver Exchange Items.

T. Y. Henry, manager of Artcraft for the Rocky Mountain region, has just returned from a trip to Salt Lake on business. He now has Pickford pictures running in eight houses in Utah.

The Paramount and World exchanges are sporting new dresses. Each is beaming under a coat of fresh, bright paint. Managers Cohn and Rosefield also are swelled up over the installation of new vaults in their respective quarters. The companies have adjoining offices and the vaults were installed simultaneously.

Mrs. Gertrude Morgan, assistant booker for Pathe in the Denver exchange, is convalescent after an operation last week for appendicitis.

John Messina has been appointed assistant booker in the General Exchange, to succeed Joe Gerbase, who recently became assistant manager of the new America theater.

Dillon, Mont.—W. B. Hartwig's new Pastime at Dillon will be opened in about a month and will be one of the show places in this vicinity. The building has been erected especially for the theater and represents an investment of over $60,000. Mr. Hartwig is a son of W. J. Hartwig, owner of the Antlers theater, Helena, and interested also in the Orpheum and Liberty of that place. With one son at Deer Lodge, and another at Hamilton, the Hartwigs are very prominently identified with the picture industry in Montana.

Denver's Newest Downtown Theater Opens

Saturday, February 10, Sees the Premier Show at the New American Theater—Seats 1,600 and Will Be Managed by A. G. Talbott.

Denver, Colo.—The America theater, Denver's newest downtown moving picture house, was opened Saturday night, February 10. A record house witnessed the first performance, at which E. H. Sothern in "An Enemy to the King" was the attraction.

The America seats 1,600 people and is said to incorporate the latest and best thoughts in the construction of moving picture playhouses. It is located at the corner of Sixteenth and Curtis streets—the busiest corner in Denver—and has entrances from either street.

The theater has a ground floor and a balcony with an elevator to carry patrons to the upper floor. Drinking fountains are strewn abundantly about all floors.

The lobbies leading from either entrance are decorated with fine mural paintings of Western scenes from the brush of Allen True.

One of the features of the America that is entirely new to Denver is the choralcelo, a musical instrument which contains attachments not possessed by the moving picture organ. Carl S. Perley operates the choralcelo, while in addition the America has an orchestra of twelve men directed by Nels M. Dahl.

The America was built and is owned and operated by the Bishop-Cass Investment Company. A. G. Talbott is manager of the theater.

R. P. Crist Joins Denver General.

R. P. Crist, formerly of the Triangle, has joined the Denver forces of the General Film. He is in charge of the selling department. Since severing his connection with Triangle Mr. Crist has been touring the Rocky Mountain territory with a state rights picture.

Harry Knotts Now With Vitagraph.

Harry J. E. Knotts, a brother of William Knotts, well known to the moving picture industry in Denver through his long association with the World Exchange, has joined the Vitagraph forces in Denver. He is on the road at present.

Hope for Admission Rise in Spokane

Need Is Felt of Increasing Rates and Local Exhibitors Are to Hold a Meeting in Endeavor to Get Together on the Matter.

By S. Clark Patchin, E 1811 Eleventh Avenue, Spokane, Wash.

SPokane, Wash.—A boost of admission prices to motion picture theaters, from the nickelodeon to the aristocratic cinema palace, is a possibility in Spokane. A growing sentiment among local picture exhibitors that an advance is necessary has been crystalizing and a meeting will be held soon to take action on the question.

The exhibitors agree that the business is becoming so burdened with increased expense that some remedy must be found in order to protect their business. As now formulated by some of the exhibitors who favor boosting prices, nickel houses will raise to 10 cents and the theater charging a dime will add 5 cents. Some favor making the advance on night shows only. The plan calls for a boost to 25 cents by the larger houses.

"The picture men are talking about advancing rates and have been for some time," said Ralph Ruffner, manager of the Liberty theater. "It is absolutely true that the increased cost of every material used in our business is making the expense of conducting a picture theater burdensome and the picture men are looking for some remedy.

"As far as the Liberty is concerned, I may say that I am not going to boost prices except when I have a show that warrants it. I have a number of big features booked, some of which will require an admission of 50 cents. I am not in favor of arbitrarily taxing the patrons of the theater."

Spokane Film Notes.

Spokane, Wash.—Mary Pickford played to capacity houses at each performance at the Clemmer theater, Spokane, in "The Pride of the Clan." Several members of the Scottish Society played the bag-pipes in front of the theater every evening.

Improvements have been started at the Rex theater, including alterations both inside and on the outside. A pipe organ and a new booth will be installed and several other important changes are contemplated.

"Intolerance" played to large houses, in the Auditorium theater, Spokane.

WESTERN CANADA NOTES.

Suit Over Competitive Ads.

Vancouver, B. C.—A dispute between two Vancouver exhibitors, involving the right of a theater manager to advertise his coming attractions, is exciting considerable comment among local film men, pro and con being represented—with con predominating.

The Rex theater, W. P. Dewees manager, has the franchise for its choice of current Paramount subjects, running one for three days each week, and using a Triangle for the other three days. W. P. Nichols, managing director of the National Amusement Company, is running the other Paramount of the current week at the Globe theater, and for the remaining three days uses a second-run Paramount, previously shown at the Rex. During the run of "Snow White" at the Rex theater, the Globe issued a program giving its attractions for the week, and also for the week following—this including "Snow White."

Mr. Dewees contended that the Globe should not be permitted to advertise a feature until its engagement at the Rex was completed. He immediately took the matter up with the Famous Players Film Service, threatening to cancel his service if the objectionable advertising again appeared under the same conditions. Mr. Dewees stated to the Moving Picture World correspondent that the Globe management was in turn notified by the exchange that in the event of a repetition of the "offense" their service would be cancelled by the exchange.

Bills That Packed the House.

Vancouver, B. C.—The biggest day's business done by a Vancouver theater for many months was registered at the Rex theater on a recent Saturday, when Douglas Fairbanks in "Manhattan Madness" and Charlie Chaplin in "Easy Street" formed the bill. The house, which seats 1,000, was packed from opening until closing time, and they "stacked them out" from 1:30 in the afternoon until after 9 o'clock at night. And, an important fact to be considered, it was raining at the time.

Vancouver, B. C.—Especially good business was done during a recent week by Manager Muir of the Dominion theater, who put on Theda Bara in "Under Two Flags" for a full week.

Calgary, Alberta.—G. E. Fleming, manager of the Starland theater at Lethbridge, was a recent visitor to this city. Mr. Fleming has arranged to show the Clara Kimball Young and Artcraft productions.

Writ by Parent Metro for Films

Home Office Joins With Canadian Subsidiary in Effort to Secure Possession of Subjects Held by the Standard of Vancouver.

By E. C. Thomas, 821 Rogers Bldg., Vancouver, B. C.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—The Metro tangle in Canada, which is now being fought out in this city, has taken a new turn, and recent events have placed the entire matter in a new light. Following the Metro Picture Corporation's cancellation of the Canadian franchise formerly held by Metro Pictures, Ltd., C. W. Craig of the legal firm of Craig & Parkes, who have been acting as counsel for Metro Pictures, Ltd., in that company's attempt to secure possession of the Metro films held in concealment by the Standard Film Service, Ltd., was also appointed to represent the New York company, and has just issued a writ in the Supreme Court in this city, in furtherance of the determination of the parent company to step in and secure possession of the films itself.

The writ is directed against Herbert Lubin, Charles Handford and the Standard Film Service, Ltd., and the statement of claim reads as follows: "The plaintiff's claim is for a declaration that all the rights which the defendants or any of them had or may have had in respect of the use of distribution of Metro pictures and accessories in the possession or control of the defendants are terminated; and for an injunction restraining the defendants from in any way dealing with or using the same; and for damages."

It is considered likely that the actions brought by the two Metro companies against the Standard will be joined. The last legal step taken by the Canadian Metro company was for the examination of Herbert Lubin for discovery, but the latter's indisposition necessitated a postponement. Now, however, both Mr. Lubin and Mr. Handford have followed the example set by the films themselves, and have disappeared, presumably to avoid service.

A man in close touch with the situation informed the World correspondent that from present indications neither Metro Pictures, Ltd., nor the Standard Film Service would in future control the Canadian distribution, and that the New York company would handle the Eastern Canadian territory direct. This statement, however, was denied by Andrew P. Keegan, general western manager for the Specialty Film Import Limited, who makes the claim that if any one distributed the Metro subjects in Canada it would be his company.

G. G. McGeer, attorney for the Standard Film Service, was not prepared to say what line of action he would now take in behalf of his clients.

Move Toward Ticket Tax for Hospital Fund.

Vancouver, B. C.—The city authorities, at the suggestion of local women's clubs, have under consideration the taxation of all theater tickets sold in this city, and it is announced that sanction to levy such a tax will be sought from the provincial legislature at its coming session. The present intention is to place the tax at a flat rate of one cent, although the proposition of levying a certain percentage of the value of the ticket has also been discussed.

At a recent meeting of the civic health committee Aldermen McIntosh and Kirk fathered the amendment, and explained that it was proposed to devote the proceeds thus secured to hospital or war funds. The proposition will be submitted to the entire council at its next regular meeting, and in the meantime the city solicitor was authorized to inaugurate the necessary six weeks' advertising before the session of the legislature.

Suburban Theater Rates Advance.

Vancouver, B. C.—Although the fifteen-cent admission price is well established in the downtown section of this city, it was not until recently that suburban theaters also decided to go to the higher price. R. J. Dawson, manager of the Kitsilano theater, has just raised to 15 cents, and Frank Gow of the Broadway preceded him by a couple of weeks. The primary cause of the advance was a raise in the price of film service made by the Famous Players exchange, whose pictures both houses are using. G. Corriveau of the Grandview theater, running a variety of other productions, stated to the World man that he had definitely decided to maintain his present price of ten cents, and it is thought that for the present, at least other suburban houses will do likewise. On a recent trip about the city, the writer found all the outlying houses doing good business. Manager Dawson of the Kitsilano inaugurated his raise to fifteen cents with the installation of a four-piece orchestra.

Shows Value of Sunday Shows Conclusively

Opinions of Jealous Sabbatarians Will Not Keep Benefits of Sunday Pictures for Camp Hughes.

Winnipeg, Man.—Although there are strict Sunday closing laws in force in the province of Manitoba, the moving picture theaters at Camp Hughes, the summer military camp near this city, will be open regularly on that day, according to an announcement just made by Lieutenant-Colonel A. C. Gray, assistant adjutant-general for Military District No. 10. Referring to the movement by the Lord's Day Alliance for a better observance of Sunday at the big training camp, Colonel Gray stated that no shows were open during church parade hours or while a church service was in progress in any part of the camp. Civilians were not allowed to enter the theaters on Sunday, and the proprietors hired special attendants last summer, their duties consisting of keeping out of the houses any except soldiers.

Colonel Gray said that he did not think the shows would ever be closed while the camp was in use, regardless of any agitation that might be made by bodies or persons opposed to the policy. "It has been clearly shown," he said, "that the picture shows were not only a benefit to the men socially, but also from a military standpoint. If the men were not allowed to attend these shows they would be in the tents, and most of them would be gambling, because a soldier, like every other man, must occupy his time some way."

Vancouver Theatrical Federation Elects.

Vancouver, B. C.—A meeting of the Vancouver Theatrical Federation was held recently, and the following officers were elected for the current year: President, J. Rundle of the Musicians' Union; vice-president, J. R. Foster, of the Moving Picture Operators' Union; secretary, A. O. Hansen, of the Moving Picture Operators' Union; treasurer, A. N. Harrington, of the Stage Employees' Union; sergeant-at-arms, W. Euper, of the Musicians' Union.

Wants Special Children's Shows in Canada.

Vancouver, B. C.—Severe criticism of present-day films as entertainment for children was voiced at a recent meeting of the Parent-Teachers' Association held at a local school house, and addressed by Miss Jamieson, a teacher in the local high school. She deplored the policy of allowing children to attend moving picture theaters of their own choosing, and advised parents to ascertain the character of the films being shown before allowing a child to enter the theater. While the pictures might not be harmful for adults, she said, they produced a very bad effect in those of tender years. The children often came to school, said Miss Jamieson, with their minds full of some picture they had seen, instead of their studies. She called attention to the special children's shows being put on in American cities, and urged that something of the sort be attempted here.

Saskatchewan Mutual Office Closed.

Regina, Sask.—The local office of the Mutual, formerly under the management of Ben Witham, has been closed, and the Saskatchewan exhibitors are not being served by the Winnipeg office.

"Brownie" for Bluebirds.

Portland, Ore.—Hobart H. Brownell, well known on Portland's Film Row, has been appointed road man for Bluebirds, also booking "The Eagle's Wings." He recently returned from a trip through the southern part of the territory and reports conditions there looking up. He says that the popularity of photoplays in southern Oregon, hitherto somewhat doubtful, is coming back in grand style, due to exhibitors enlarging on their advertising. At Eugene, says Mr. Brownell, the returning popularity is particularly noticeable.

Heard on Film Row.

Kelso, Wash.—The Kelso theater has been sold by S. M. King to R. Fisher.

Portland, Ore.—J. B. Washtock, Victoria theater, reports that he gave a successful Boy Scout benefit at his theater recently.

North Bend, Ore.—The Joy theater here is enlarging and new projection machine and generator set have been installed.

Portland, Ore.—Among the week's visitors on Film Row were W. D. Ingles, American theater, Condon, Oregon; J. B. Sparks, Star, Heppner, Ore., and C. C. Ferguson, Baker, Newberg, Ore.

Visitors in Kansas City.

Kansas City, Mo.—Recent visitors at the Kansas City exchanges were: Grady & Pickett, Auditorium, Miami, Mo.; Simmons & Collins, the Idle Hour, Willisville, Kan.; Wm. M. Palmeroy, Westmoreland, Kan.; M. W. Ranky, Orpheum, St. Joseph, Mo.; H. H. Dimmett, Lyric, Wyomere, Neb.; Jack Truitt, Moberly, Mo.; Herb Thatcher, Salina; S. Wilkenson, Hoisengton, Kan.; C. Houston, Columbus, Kan.; Mrs. Chas. Barran, Augusta, Kan.; A. B. Potter, St. Joseph, Mo.; John Flynn, Bartlesville, Okla.; Phil Potter, well-known film man, very popular with Kansas exhibitors, has joined the Mutual. He was formerly with the Universal.

Signs of Co-operation

Oregon Exhibitors See Indications That Manufacturers Are Awakening to Their Needs—Local Exchanges Are Talking About New Policies—Business on a More Businesslike Basis Is Now Anticipated.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Building, Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, Ore.—During the past two months of changes and uncertainty in the moving picture industry, Oregon's exhibitors have gathered the idea, perhaps from rumors from the East, that when the industry is again settled to smooth, running, its business is going to be done on a strictly businesslike basis in the same manner as that of successful mercantile enterprises. Interviews with road men and managers returning from business trips indicate that this feeling of expectancy exists throughout the state.

"Exhibitors I have met in my travels are sore on the game in general," frankly admitted one road man. "Many of them feel that the stars are running away with the money and look for the manufacturers to remedy that condition before the industry again settles down to smooth running."

And the exchanges in Portland are alive to the demands of the state's exhibitors. Down on Film Row they're talking "new policies" and in one instance, "big changes," the keynote, "a businesslike basis," pervading throughout.

Sex Films in Disfavor.

Portland, Ore.—Reports have come in that a circuit of towns in the Willamette valley has practically boycotted the so-called sex film with which the market has of late been flooded and which has been playing percentage. It is not merely because they are sex films that they are tabooed, however. Percentage pictures usually demand an increase of admission price. The so-called sex title and the paper help draw the patronage, but so many of the shows themselves have been ordinary or less that audiences have been disappointed and the managers have eventually lost money.

The really big percentage pictures are as popular with the valley exhibitors as ever.

F. M. Simonton Convinces Club.

Portland, Ore.—F. M. Simonton, of the Standard Feature Film Company, and treasurer of the Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association, spoke before the Oswego Women's Club, a branch of the Portland organization, February 14, on censorship and its practice in Portland.

Mr. Simonton used the arguments made in the campaign for an appeal censorship here last summer and reports that after the moving picture men's side of the case had been stated, the women were convinced of the injustice of the censorship intolerance here.

M. G. Winstock Visits.

Portland, Ore.—Melvin G. Winstock, pioneer photoplay theater manager, was in Portland for a few days as special representative for Triangle. Mr. Winstock's capacity is along efficiency lines and he was here making a survey of the territory.

Mr. Winstock's visit here is another indication that manufacturers are awakening to the necessity of cooperation between the exchange and exhibitor.

KALEM.

THE MIRROR OF FEAR—(An Episode of "Grant, Police Reporter").—The cast: Grant—"Chronicle" reporter (George Larkin); Major Chenilworth (Cyril Courtney); Lois Trent (Ollie Kirkby); Jardyce (Harry Gordon); "The Spider" (Robert Ellis). Written by Robert Welles Ritchie. Directed by Robert Ellis.

Twenty-eight years before the story opens Major Chenilworth was forced to shoot a fellow officer in service with him in India. At the subsequent court-martial he was acquitted. He is now a nervous wreck. An eye-witness of that deplorable affair now serves in his household in the capacity of butler. Jardyce, the butler, aided by the "Spider," a crafty old cripple of the underworld, conceives a plan to force the Major to name him in his will.

The Major's niece, Lois Trent, chances to meet Grant, police reporter on the "New York Chronicle." She tells him that she suspects a deep-laid plot to bring about the death of her uncle. Grant, disguised as a gas inspector, discovers in the basement of the Chenilworth home a motion picture machine which can be raised through a trap door to the kitchen floor level.

On guard that night, Grant sees the cook under Jardyce's direction thread up the motion picture machine with a reel of film and focus it upon the door leading into the Major's study. The lights go out and there, before his gaze, Major Chenilworth sees a reproduction of the scene where he unwittingly killed his fellow officer years before. Before it has faded out Jardyce has had the will altered in his favor.

At this instant, Grant and Miss Trent burst into the room and the butler flees. Leaping into an auto Jardyce gets the jump on Grant, who is following on a bicycle. As pursued and pursuer draw near the railroad tracks, the butler has trouble with the engine and the car slows up. Grant leaps from the bicycle to the rear of the auto and gives battle. Just as a train comes thundering down upon them the engine is stalled and Grant leaps out barely in time to save his life. Jardyce pays the price for his plotting and Major Chenilworth recovers his health.

THE BLACK RIDER OF TASAJARA—(An Episode of "The American Girl"—Two Parts).—The cast: Madge King (Marin Sais); Roger King—father (Frank Jonasson); Amos Durston (Ronald Bradbury); Wild Bill (Edward Clisbee); Larry Kerwin (Edward Hearn); Aunt Harriet—King's sister (Mrs. Dunbar). Story by Frederick R. Becholdt. Directed by James W. Horne.

The Black Rider of Tasajara is holding up the overland stage. When the stage arrives at Tasajara inn the proprietor, Amos Durston, offers a five thousand dollar reward for the bandit's capture.

The following day Durston calls upon the Kings to pay his respects to Roger King's daughter. Aunt Harriet, a spinster sister, is alarmed over the bandit's operations and turns over a valuable necklace to Durston to be forwarded to a city bank for safe-keeping during her visit to the Los Alamos ranch. Durston invites the Kings to spend a few days as his guests at the Tasajara inn. They accept.

As the stage leaves on its return trip Madge determines to follow it on the chance of picking up a clue to the identity of the Black Rider. Her father and Larry Kerwin, a visitor from the East, follow her, fearing for her safety.

Madge stops to fix her saddle girth and when she overtakes the stage learns that it has been held up. Aunt Harriet's necklace was a part of the Black Rider's booty. She gets a glimpse of the highwayman ahead. He waits and shoots Madge's horse. Recovering from her spill, Madge is found by her father and Larry and they return to the inn more determined to outwit the bandit. Durston expresses anxiety over Madge's recklessness and warns her not to attempt single-handed the capture of the Black Rider.

Wild Bill, a bit the worse for liquor, tries to shoot up the town, but Durston rushes out and disarms him. As he does so, Aunt Harriet's necklace falls to the ground. Wild Bill is locked up. Madge is not so sure of his guilt. She has picked up a striped stocking fashioned into a mask that the bandit dropped the day before and decides to do a bit of sleuthing.

Next day, when it becomes known that Wild Bill has escaped, a posse is made up to scour the mountain trails for him. Durston, King and Larry ride off in one direction and at a certain point they separate. Larry's horse returns to the inn riderless and Madge, alarmed for his safety, rides out to investigate. She finds Larry tied to four stakes.

Out of nowhere the Black Rider appears to threaten Madge and Larry. Just at that instant the other searchers come into view and when the bandit starts to run he is surrounded. Madge tears the mask and false beard from his face. It is Durston, the wealthy innkeeper. His confession follows and then his sudden extinction as a bullet speeds from a nearby thicket into his heart. Wild Bill is vindicated. Madge King is the heroine of the hour.

IN THE PATH OF PERIL—(An Episode of "A Daughter of Daring").—The cast: Helen (Irene Gibson); Engineer Compton (L. T. Whitlock); Gypsy Joe (George Routh); Anita—Gypsy Queen (Lillian Clark); The Sheriff (G. A. Williams). Story by Herman A. Blackman. Directed by Walter Morton.

Gypsy Joe and his band go into camp near the Lone Point station. Anita, the Queen, and one of the other women, spy Helen chatting with Engineer Compton, enter the station and offer to tell Helen's fortune. The young engineer, who admires Helen for her pluck in sticking to this outpost of civilization, rewards the gypsies for their very flattering word picture of him in the role of the successful suitor.

Back at camp they tell Joe that only a girl stands between them and the money in the station safe. Waiting until the freight has pulled out, Joe leads his men in an attack. Compton's fireman spies the gypsies. As the fireman takes the throttle Compton jumps off and puts the band to rout. Joe is locked up in the jail. Anita contrives to pass him a saw in a bunch of flowers. That night he files the bars and escapes.

Joe later plans to wreck the freight, climbs aboard and puts Compton out of the way. Near Lone Point he throws the switch when the train is but half over it. Instead of derailing the cars, the rear truck of a flat car takes the siding and is torn loose. Unconscious of the accident, the engineer proceeds with his train broken in half and the flat car dragging on the ground.

Helen is informed of the wreck by telephone and immediately sets out on her motorcycle to overtake it before the limited shall crash into it. Seeing the dragging flat car she puts on a burst of speed and rides up the slanting surface, abandoning the machine to catch the ladder grips of the freight car ahead. In a few moments she has reached the engine cab, freed Compton and brought the runaway to a stop. The gypsies are apprehended and Helen is thanked by the crews of both trains.

EFFICIENCY EXPERTS?—(Ham and Bud Comedy).—Ham and Bud are asleep on the top of their steam-propelled lawn mower. Dad, who is taking a nap on the lawn, gets a free shave, while Bessie, his daughter, amuses herself with her unbidden callers. But Slumber's call cannot be denied and while their puffing automower frolics about the lawn, Ham and Bud give themselves over to napping.

Bessie sends in a call for the electrician. Arriving he sets to work in the basement to repair some broken wires. What's this? A note stating jewels are buried 'neath the chestnut tree? Leaving the wires sparking against a water pipe, the electrical worker rushes out.

Seeing our heroes asleep, Bessie decides to give them a bath from the garden hose. As she touches the pipe a shock stretches her senseless. Ham and Bud, thinking their lawn-mower had killed her, deposit her limp form beneath the tree and cover it over with grass.

The electrician returns. As he digs he unearths the fair Bessie. Ham and Bud see her return to the house and they dive into the bathroom window through fright.

Bud touches the electrified pipe and before many seconds elapse the entire household has felt the effects.

THE GREAT TREASURE (Two Parts).—The cast: Jack Curtis (Gaston Ferguson); Henry Rowland (Fred Eckert); Dorothy Rowland (Maybelle Spaulding); Edwin Stevens (F. Hamilton); Red (M. Von Betz). Written by Anthony McGuire. Directed by Otis B. Thayer.

Two "river rats," Red and Skinny, incur the gratitude of Jack Curtis because they buy food for his dying mother.

Henry Rowland, facing ruin through a slump in the stock market, borrows $150,000 from Edwin Stevens, a former rival, on stock certificates which have been entrusted to him by the court. Stevens secretly informs the court that Rowland has realized money on the securities, and Rowland is summoned. Unless he can get possession of the securities, Rowland knows he is lost. He determines to have Jack Curtis, who lives in one of his tenements, to rob the safe, and he does so.

Jack has wandered into a settlement mission where he sees Dorothy, Rowland's daughter, and through his trials and tribulations, retains a sweet memory of the girl. He finally presents himself at Rowland's office, explains his desire to go straight and is given the opportunity.

After two years of reformation, he has won the love of Dorothy. The girl's father discovers this fact and denounces Jack as a thief, forgetting that it was he, Rowland, who had urged the man to steal the securities.

Later, Dorothy realizes through the instrumentality of one of the "river rats," that Jack Curtis has been shielding her father at the sacrifice of his own happiness and the lovers are once more united.

A BROTHER'S SACRIFICE (Feb. 24).—The cast: Marv Madden (Lillian Hayward); Tom Madden (Chas. Wheelock); John Madden (Lafayette McKee); Bessie Bowman (Edith Johnson). Written by C. Chester Wesley. Produced by F. J. Grandin.

Mrs. Madden, on her deathbed, exacts a pledge from John that he will always care for his younger brother, Tom. Tom is a ne'er-do-well, and resumes his unruly habits, and through weakness for liquor, loses his position. His sweetheart, Bessie Bowman, also breaks her engagement with him.

John has never forgotten the promise and he follows Tom through his many temptations, finally winning for him another position with the railroad for whom John works. They go out on the same train. The train breaks in two. Someone must leap from one section to the other to apply the brakes before a section crashes into an oncoming passenger train. John makes the leap at the risk of his life, applies the brakes and saves hundreds of lives.

But, through his daring, John becomes an invalid for life. His act has brought a sense of responsibility to Tom, who vows never to take another drink. He finally marries Bessie Bowman, and together they make a happy home for faithful John.

Universal Film Mfg. Co. IMP.

THE PERILS OF THE SECRET SERVICE (Episode No. 1—"The Last Cigarette"—Two Parts—March 9.) The cast: Yorke Norroy (Kingsley Benedict); Carson Huntley, his "left hand" (Jay Belasco); Minna Ober (Vola Smith); Her father, a murderer (Malcolm Blewins); Saxonian chief (Clyde Benson). Scenario by Luther Reed. Produced by George Bronson Howard.

In the Bergenschloss the heads of Saxonia's secret service are in consultation over the fate of one of their men who has failed in his mission to a South American republic, on account of the watchfulness of Yorke Norroy, a diplomatic agent, and the cleverest man in the American secret service, who poses as a man of fashion. The Saxonian chiefs lay plans for his destruction. Minna Ober, whose father has been sentenced to death for murder, comes to plead for clemency. The chief offers the man a chance for his life if he will dispose of Yorke Norroy. Ober accepts.

The papers have given publicity to the escape of Max Ober, and Huntley Carson, the confidant of Yorke Norroy, warns Norroy that Ober is after him. They attend the reception at the Saxonian embassy in Washington some time later and recognize Ober. Norroy is apparently absorbed in a flirtation with a stranger, who in reality is Minna Ober. Her father is counting upon her to lure Norroy to an empty house. Minna is successful. Norroy is roughly pushed into a room and falls. He rises, brushes his clothes, annoyed by the dust and Ober informs him that unless he discloses the history of his defeat of their plans he will be put to death. He insists upon Norroy's writing the story in detail.

Norroy complies, but asks permission to smoke a cigarette. He takes out his case and sees in its polished surface that Ober gives directions to shoot him when he has finished writing. He lights a cigarette, and smokes it in the intervals of writing the story. Then he lays the cigarette on the table and proceeds. The cigarette explodes, and Norroy makes his escape. When the smoke has cleared away, Ober and his daughter read on the paper "Tell your chief that Yorke Norroy sends Max Ober back to the Bergenschloss to pay the penalty."

THE MAN OF MYSTERY (Two Parts—March 11.) Two policemen, standing on a corner, observe a man acting strangely. When they attempt to question him they discover he is apparently suffering from amnesia. They take him to the station house and question him. He is unable to respond with an intelligent answer. A physician declares that the man is under the influence of an opiate.

The man is dressed like a sailor, but his hands are soft, and his skin is of an odd sort of tan. The fellow keeps brushing his hand over his lips. When King, the detective, is called in, he says that the man had a mustache a short while ago. He believes there is a crime back of the strange man's condition. By observation King is convinced that he is not a sailor, but a man of refined habits, that the tan skin was produced by a stain, and that tattoo marks have been painted upon him.

Depough, a prosperous broker, has a twin brother, a sailor who has been the black sheep of the family. There was a clerk in Depough's office who had been discharged for dishonesty. Returning from sea and learning of the brother's good fortune, the twin joins with the clerk in conspiring to rob the broker by changing identities. They were to get the broker out of the way, then have the sailor impersonate him.

Doped cigars put the broker in a state of coma. Then the clerk with the aid of the sailor, took the insensible man to the latter's room where the transformation was performed. They then turned the drugged man loose on the street and from a distant doorway observed the police take him away.

The sailor, dressed in his brother's clothes, went to the brokerage office, where he and the ex-clerk cashed large checks. They were just about to leave when apprehended by King. The broker's sweetheart is told about what has happened and is brought to the office, where later he regains control of his faculties.

DESPERATION (Three Parts—March 6). The cast: Katherine (Elizabeth Risdon); Mrs. Crichton, her mother (Henrietta Watson); John Staffurth (Frederick Groves); Richard Furness (Guy Newall); Mr. Crichton (Hugh Croise). Produced by Maurice Elvey.

Katherine Crichton marries the scientist, John Staffurth. She has plenty of time to kill, and welcomes the visits of the friend of her girlhood, Richard Furness. John is busy and is glad for the young man to "amuse" her, and is distressed when Furness is called abroad. Katherine knows her continued friendship is scarcely wise. She corresponds with him, however.

A slight injury brings about serious developments. Specialists tell her husband the worst is to be feared and that she has only two years to live. John determines that she shall never know the truth.

But Katherine does know, for she has been suspicious and has listened at the door. She resents John's lack of faith in her and will not let him know she has overheard the verdict. At times she is driven almost mad by the knowledge which she is bearing alone. She has no idea her husband, who seems to be absorbed in his own interests, is working in search of a cure for her.

So when Furness returns from abroad she gives herself up to the pleasure of his company. She does not, however, like the idea that her letters have been kept, and Furness promises to give them back if she will go to the opera with him.

At a crucial moment in Furness' flat, Katherine draws back. But fate interposes and arranges that John shall have his door barred against his wife. Contrasting Furness' adoration with her husband's indifference, Katherine hastily writes a letter of surrender. On the morrow when John, tardily enlightened, is forcing Furness to give up the letters, Katherine is hearing from her doctor that her husband has discovered a cure for her and that there is a lifetime of health before her.

When John comes in, radiant over the good news, his wife shrinks from him. She has no thought but for the letters. When she finds that the packet is complete, that the last one has not been opened, she is overwhelmed with emotion. She gives the letter to John, but he tears it to pieces unread and holds out his arms to his wife.

BIG U.

A SOLDIER'S DREAM (March 7.)—John, an army lieutenant, is in love with the general's daughter. They are stationed at a remote post on the frontier. John dreams one night that he, with the assistance of the girl, places mines all around the fort and that the Indians attack and by pressing a button he sets off the mines, which blow the savages to pieces. When the fort is really threatened John tells the general of his plan. The officer is impressed and rewards him with the hand of his daughter.

GOOD-FOR-NOTHING GALLAGHER (March 8). The cast: Marshall Gibbons (T. D. Crittenden); Silas Hawkins (Fred Montague); Good-for-Nothing Gallagher (William V. Mong); Silver (Rex Rosselli); Marcia Young (Roberta Wilson); Howard Gray (Paul Byron).

Gibbons, an author, is sitting on the porch of a country hotel. He says there is a story in everything, and the landlord disagrees. He says there is no story in the funeral of Good-for-Nothing Gallagher, which is passing. Silas Hawkins says he is mistaken and tells the story.

Gallagher loved Marcia Young, but she refused him, so he took to drink. She accepted Howard Gray, who had organized a town militia company. He would not have Gallagher, as he said his was no "Coxey's Army." They were celebrating the Fourth of July when an alarm came in that the convicts in the prison had broken out of jail.

Gray declared that it would be suicide to fight such desperate men, but Gallagher knocks him down, takes his uniform and leads the boys to fight the convicts. He is killed by the treachery of their leader, after they have surrendered. Marcia turned against Gray when she saw his yellow streak appear. As Gallagher is brought back, she bursts into tears as she realizes that she has accepted the wrong man. That is the story in the funeral of Gallagher.

L-KO.

FATTY'S FEATURE FILLUM (Two Parts—March 7).—The cast: Egbert (Fatty Voss); Blanch (Gladys Roach); Desmond (Richard Smith). Directed by Fatty Voss under supervision of J. G. Blystone.

Fatty, the featured actor of a motion picture company, is dining in a restaurant when he sees a party of girls watching him, and decides to give them a treat. He sends a card, on which is written, "I am featured at the Bazoo." Then he goes grandly out, trusting them to follow, which they do. He takes up a prominent position at the box office of the theater and watches the nickels as they go in.

First on the screen is the "Cuckoo Weekly," with battle scenes "Nowhere in France," and the launching of the Dreadnought, guaranteed to do 470 knots per—hops, in which the bottle of champagne crashes through the hull. Then come the latest styles from "Vug," which close the weekly. Then comes the feature film, "Sunshine and Shadows."

Egbert calls on his sweetheart, Gladys, little dreaming that a vulture is following. Desmond the villain is scheming to possess the maiden. He goes to work to get the mortgage on her home, and then force her father to give him the girl. Egbert is outmaneuvered and the villain seizes the girl. So he goes to the side of the stream to commit his body to the waters.

The villain's cigarette sets fire to the house and the smoke is blown to Fatty. He suspects the trouble. He rescues the girl. As the picture runs its course, Fatty is seated in the audience between the two charmers and explaining the fine points, leading the applause at the thrilling places.

JOKER.

WANTA MAKE A DOLLAR (March 10).—The cast: Gale (Gale Henry); Milt (Milburn Moranti); Bill (William Franey); Lillian (Lillian Peacock); Cripple and blind man (John Cook). Written by Jack Cunningham. Produced by W. W. Beaudine.

Gale, a suffragette, is addressing a meeting when she catches sight of an advertisement

"Insurance Against Spinsterhood." The terms are five dollars a week until $1,000 has been paid. The meeting breaks up in disorder. Bill the insurance broker is in love with his secretary, Lillian. Gale breaks in upon them, and pays her thousand. Bill goes out and offers a dollar to each man he sees, a cripple, a fruit vendor, a blind man.

All, however, after one look at Gale, refuse to become her husband. Bill is in despair. Gale calls a policeman and says Bill has taken her money and failed to provide her with a husband. The policeman says he must live up to the terms of the contract, and he is about to be married to Gale when Lillian rushes in and claims him. All this time a mysterious character has been watching outside the door, continually changing his disguise. He comes in and Gale recognizes Milt, her long lost husband. She demands the money from Bill, but he says that he has provided a man for her after all.

NESTOR.

A BUNDLE OF TROUBLE (March 5).—The cast: Detective Potts (Lee Moran); Eddie (Eddie Lyons); Olga (Edith Roberts); Russian Ambassador (Harry Noland). Written by Karl R. Coolidge. Produced by Louis Chaudet.

The Russian Ambassador receives a message of warning that there will be an attempt on his life. His daughter, Olga, advises him to consult the famous Detective Potts. He sends for Potts, who is about to bestow a diploma on his pupil, Eddie. They both go to the Ambassador's house. On the way they see a suspicious looking package dropped into a barrel, and take it for a bomb. The Ambassador has disguised himself. Eddie puts on a Russian disguise and Potts takes him for the anarchist. He follows him.

Olga is terrified by the appearance of three men who insist upon seeing her father. He enters in his disguise and she does not know him. He snatches it off, just as Eddie and Potts enter, too. They recognize each other, and, peeping through the curtains, see the Ambassador about to raise a bottle to his lips. They rush in, only to learn that the three men have called to get the Ambassador's opinion of a substitute for Russian vodka. In Eddie's bundle is found a pair of woman's stockings.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE (Issue No. 9—March 9).—Issue No. 9 of the Universal Screen Magazine begins with views of Dr. Edward F. Bigelow, the noted bee culturist, who instructs Boy Scout Masters in the art of handling bees with security. The doctor has never been stung, though he has handled millions of bees.

Cutting ice on the upper reaches of the Hudson river for storage is the next subject. The third shows the making of frankfurters and sausages, under the rules of inspection of the New York Board of Health.

Casting the death mask of Admiral Dewey is then shown. The sculptor, Ulric S. J. Dunbar, who made the masks of McKinley, Garfield and Grant, and many other famous men, is seen working on the mold, filling the cast with plaster of paris, and breaking the mold when it has hardened. A few minutes with Willie Hopkins and his animated sculpture close the reel.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE PURPLE MASK (Episode No. 11—"The Garden of Surprise"—Two Parts—March 11).

—The cast: Patricia Montez (Grace Cunard); Detective Phil Kelly (Francis Ford); his Assistants (Pete Gerald and Jerry Ash); Pat's Aunt (Jean Hathaway). Written and produced by Grace Cunard and Francis Ford.

When Patricia found herself gazing down the barrel of Kelly's revolver, she complied with his command to exit from her motor. Defiantly she declared the detective would never have overtaken her if her gasoline had not given out. Covering Pat with his overcoat (for she is dressed in thin tights, cape and cap) Kelly takes her to a deserted cottage.

Here Kelly and Pat wait until a machine comes along. In response to Kelly's hail the chauffeur, who is alone, refuses to carry passengers, but will take a letter. Kelly has prepared such a note, but Pat substitutes a note of her own. The chauffeur delivers the note and an automobile filled with Pat's men soon arrives. They take her back to town, and leave Kelly to accomplish the long walk back. On leaving Pat tells him she has a date at the Garden Cafe that night. She has been informed that a "fake" benevolent society is collecting funds and spending them in revelry.

Pat leads her Apaches to the Garden and at the point of pistols makes the members of the "fake" benevolent society disgorge. The next day the money is distributed to the poor. In an attempt to escape, two of Pat's men are pounced upon by Kelly and his assistant and taken to police headquarters.

When Kelly calls the next morning to appear against them the chief taunts him with his failure to capture "The Purple Mask," declaring that one of the prisoners "squaled." On the information thus gained the chief declares that he will lead his men to "The House of Mystery" and capture the girl.

No sooner has the chief entered the grounds than Pat causes a runaway to be let down in the side of the house, which decoys the detectives into a hall leading to a large room. As the detectives enter, an iron grate falls behind them. The chief is compelled to write a note releasing Pat's men from prison, and when the detectives are disarmed, Pat's men escort them out of the house and advise them to "keep on traveling." Going back to headquarters the crestfallen chief admits failure and tells Kelly the task of capturing "The Purple Mask" must again be left to him.

BISON.

THE DRIFTERS (Two Parts—March 10).—The cast: "Cheyenne" Harry (Harry Carey); Dora Mason (Claire Du Bray). Story and Scenario by Edna Schley. Produced by Fred Kelsey.

Dora Mason, in boy's garb, has lost her last nugget playing the roulette wheel, and "Cheyenne" Harry, never guessing her to be a girl, notices that something is wrong. He tells her to wait outside the saloon and begins to play. Suddenly he shoots out the lights, grabs the stakes and banker's pile and dashes for the door. Failing to see the girl, he rushes to his horse and rides down the road.

At dawn Harry is resting, for he has eluded his pursuers. Suddenly hearing a noise, he calls "Halt," but the figure continuing to run, he fires. Dora falls. Recognizing her scream as a woman's, he is horrified. He runs down to help her. She tries to be brave, but is frightened at the sight of her own blood. He places her on his horse and takes her to a deserted shack, where he binds her wound and attempts to soothe her. She tells him she was left alone when her father, a miner, died, and has dressed as a boy, for it was easier than being a girl in the desert. Realizing the seriousness of her injury, he rides to town, in spite of her efforts to stop him from taking such a risk.

Entering the saloon, he forces the bartender to give him a bottle of whisky, then grabs the man's apron and dashes back to the shack, aware that he is being followed by the cowboys. Instructing the girl to stick a pole with the apron tied to it out the window as soon as he has had time to escape, "Cheyenne" bids her good-by.

The cowboys starting to fire the shack see the flag of truce and cautiously enter the building. They find the girl, who pretends to faint, and forget they are hunting a criminal and carry her back to the town. "Cheyenne" sees the men leaving with Dora and smiles at her cleverness.

MR. FULLER-PEP—HIS DAY OF REST (March 11). Mrs. Fuller Pep asks her husband to take mother-in-law for a ride in her wheeled chair. She has not walked a step in twenty years. Fuller decides to show her some real speed. The chair gets away from him and he is worried, but reassured when he finds she has not even awakened. He leaves her in the path of an eight-cylinder automobile, but the car leaves her chair unharmed. The chair runs into a sewer, and mother-in-law discovers that she can walk after all and chases Fuller to his home.

THE MYSTERIOUS CITY (On same reel as foregoing).—Imperial Peking is the mysterious city, photographed by Doctor Dorsey, first showing a panoramic view, and later details, such as the main gate, the National Museum, formerly the Imperial Palace, with some of the Chinese curios; the Summer Palace, with the famous Porcelain Pagoda, erected for a Mongolian prince.

THE AMAZING ADVENTURE (Two Parts—March 8.) The cast: Eleanor Ferrol (Roberta Wilson); Maid (Miss Gillette); Geoffrey Harland (Charles Perley); Detective (Hayward Mack.) Scenario by Harvey Gates. Produced by Burton George.

Because of her wealth, Eleanor Ferrol is besieged by suitors, but she will have none of them. One day a detective in her employ gives her some information. She orders her motor and makes a trip through the park. She approaches a shabbily dressed man, Geoffrey Harland, and suggests that he waive an introduction and dine with her. He does so.

After dinner she proposes that he marry her and he consents, still wondering. She makes him promise that he will never speak of their marriage. They start on their honeymoon. Harland is soon in love with her and tries to solve the "why" of it all, but cannot seem to arrive at any solution.

One day he sees her talking to a man at a hotel, but she disclaims knowing anyone there. This angers him. He accuses the man of knowing his wife, but he disclaims any knowledge of knowing Harland's wife. The man is the detective who had been in Eleanor's employ.

She feigns illness and goes to her room, followed by the now angry Harland. Then she confesses that she has loved him since the time when as a child he had saved her life during one of his prospecting trips. She tells him she employed the detective to follow him.

IT MAKES A DIFFERENCE (March 11.) The cast: Genevieve (Dorothy Davenport); Will Hardy (Ed Hearn); Martha (Irene Hunt); Jerry Holden (J. Morris Foster.) Scenario by Charles J. Wilson, Jr. Produced by Ruth Ann Baldwin.

Genevieve, the head saleslady of the Elite Cloak Store, is admired by the manager, Jerry Holden. But she treasures in her heart her love for Will, who had several years before married Martha, a timid little woman. A bargain sale is in progress at the store and Martha is examining the dresses, which are reduced to twelve dollars. Genevieve, not knowing who Martha really is, hastens to her, and the little woman, shabbily dressed, says she will come again with her husband.

Soon afterward, Genevieve meets Will and accepts his invitation to dinner. The following day, she is delighted to receive a note from him urging her to accompany him again. She has listened to his recital of how his wife hen-pecks him and nags at him from morning until night, and has the sincerest sympathy for "big, generous Will," as she still thinks him.

Martha enters the store with Will. Genevieve is horrified to think that this timid woman is Will's wife. She insists that Martha buy a $150 gown. Will is afraid to refuse.

Genevieve suggests to Jerry that he rent a larger store and that they go into business together and for life.

GOOD MORNING NURSE (March 6.) The cast: Nurse (Eileen Sedgwick); Fred (Eugene Walsh); Dr. Hurts (Ralph McComas); Doctor's Wife (Margaret Whistler.) Scenario by Maie B. Havey. Produced by Allen Curtis.

Eileen Little, the prettiest nurse in Dr. Hurts' sanitarium, is seen coming from the hospital one day by Fred Biggers, a rich young man. Smitten, Fred goes to the hospital, but the door is slammed in his face. He hires the driver of a jitney to run over him. He is carried into the hospital, where Eileen is ordered to attend him.

Dr. Hurts is in love with Eileen and soon becomes jealous of Fred. Fred commences to groan and the doctor orders an immediate operation. A specialist is summoned and Eileen and Fred are locked up in the sickroom to prevent their escape.

Fred is rolled on a wheeled table into the operating room. Dr. Hurts enters with a most satisfied expression. Fred then places the doctor on the operating table and pours all the

THE BEAUTY DOCTOR (March 9.) The cast: His Wife (Sylvia Ashton); Mr. Mason (Billy Mason); Mr. Hope (William Musgrove); Mrs. Hope (Betty Hatton); Got Rox (Henry F. Crane); His daughter (Elsie Mason); Prince (Wadsworth Harris). Written by James Day-ton. Produced by John Stepping.

Billy and the wife, stranded in Thinville, decide to open a beauty parlor for thin women. He poses Sylvia as a wonderful example of before and after taking. He learns through a beauty column in the newspaper that watermelon seeds are a great fattener. He buys a large supply of melons and tucks up his beauty doctor sign.

A husband and wife in Thinville get notice that an eccentric uncle in his will has left orders to give the couple the wife's weight in gold. She decides to take the treatment of Billy. A young girl is engaged to a Turkish Prince, but when he sees how thin she is he refuses. She also takes the treatment.

After a few weeks both the thin women are thinner and poor Sylvia is fatter than ever. The husband of the thin woman, the father of the thin girl and the Turkish Prince all go to bring vengeance on Billy. A battle with the watermelons ensues and results in Billy and Sylvia taking passage for other parts.

RED FEATHER.

THE GATES OF DOOM (Five parts—March 5).—The cast: Indore (Claire McDowell); Francis Duane (L. C. Shumway); Terence Unger (Jack Connolly); Sir Ethelbert Duane (Mark Fenton); Florence Duane (Tommie Dale); Grand Duke Alexis (Alfred Annen); Jang Sahib (Francis MacDonald); Agatha, as a child (Lena Baskette). Written by J. Grubb Alexander. Produced by Charles Swickard.

Captain Unger is relating the story of his love for the Hindoo woman, Indore, to Captain Duane and begs him if anything should happen to care for their little girl. When the officers leave the room a Hindoo sent by Indore's husband poisons the decanter of wine. Unger returns and is astonished to see Indore, who has made her way to him. He consents to take her away, drinks the wine, and falls dead. Indore lifts the glass to her lips to die with him, but it is snatched from her by the native, who carries her back to his prince. She is reduced to slavery in the harem. Duane takes the child, Agatha, to England.

Agatha develops into a beautiful woman. She is reading a message from Duane with a heavy heart, for it says he is on his way with his bride, Florence, to join his father on his journey to India. En route they meet the Grand Duke Alexis, who has known Florence in the past. Alexis, perceiving that Florence is jealous of Agatha, forces her to think her husband loves the Indian girl. In India, Alexis informs Agatha her mother is not dead and that she might see her. Guided by a native, Agatha confronts the prince and asks for her mother; he parries her question. Looking at her with a lustful smile, he draws near and she retreats in terror. Struggling fiercely, the girl screams as he overpowers her.

Indore hears the scream, slips into the room and stabs the prince. She recognizes her child and clasps her in her arms. Thus the guard finds them. Jang Sahib, the hunchback, rushes in when he hears the guard's shriek, and orders the native to spread the news that their prince has been murdered by an English infidel. Soon there is a riot and many white men are slain. Captain Duane, discovering that Agatha has gone to the palace, hastens with a few horesmen. Jang Sahib tells Duane Agatha is not there. Duane fights.

Meanwhile Florence, convinced by Alexis of her husband's infidelity, has left on a steamer with him, leaving a note for Duane. While crossing the desert in Sahib's caravan, Indore jumps over the cliff. She is later picked up by some traders still alive, but has lost her memory. At the Walled City Sahib compels Agatha to marry him. On the wedding day she grasps him by the throat and chokes him to death.

Duane, crushed by despair, shuns the haunts of white men. He wanders into a native dive, and is startled by the sight of a dancing girl. He staggers to her and, in spite of the curses of the people, leads her out. It is Indore, whom he mistakes for Agatha.

She does not even remember her child's name, but when left alone in Duane's home is stabbed by the prince's servant. She is shocked into her right mind and demands to know where Agatha is imprisoned. At the head of a troop, Duane goes to the Walled City in time to snatch Agatha from the funeral pyre into which she is being forced by the subjects of the murdered Sahib. They escape and begin their journey back. Duane and Agatha are happy at seeing each other again.

THE FLYING TARGET (March 8).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); the outlaw (Ray Lincoln); the captain (M. J. McCarty); Jane (Helen Gamore). Directed by Milton H. Fahrney.

Two I. W. W.'s offer Jerry five dollars if he will deliver a package to the police station. Jerry accepts. The police captain discovers it to be an infernal machine, but before he can cast it away it explodes, wrecking the building and piling the occupants beneath the debris. Jerry witnesses the explosion, appropriates a motorcycle and leaves the scene with the policemen following.

On a country road his motor stalls as Bad Bill the outlaw, rides toward him. Jerry quickly starts the machine again, but Bad Bill compels him to stop and makes him change clothes; also change the motorcycle for Bill's horse, the Flying Target, so called because it has a sign of a target on its head.

Jerry continues his course and meets a stage coach. The occupants assume him to be the outlaw and throw out their valuables. Jerry picks them up and goes into town. Meanwhile the police are having a hard time with their automobile. Arriving in town, Jerry is surprised to see the loungers scatter as soon as he comes into view. He enters the gambling house and another exodus follows.

The stage coach comes upon the police patrol and the passengers report having been held up by the Flying Target. As Jerry is in the gambling hall Bad Bill enters and demands the return of his clothes. Jerry attempts to escape and the outlaw fires after him, throwing poor Jane into a state of terror. For refuge she crawls under her bed.

Jerry rushes upstairs into Jane's room and crawls under the sheets. Bad Bill starts after him. The police patrol arrives. Bad Bill also enters Jane's room and crawls under the sheets where he compels Jerry to change some of his clothes again. The police are frightened and none wants to enter. Straws are drawn and it falls to the captain's lot to lead the way.

Jane, in hysterics, comes from under the bed, rushes to the closet and grabs a shotgun with which she covers Bill. Jerry makes his getaway by jumping from the window. The police enter, but they do not recognize Bill as the outlaw until Jane enlightens them. They take him away and inquire about Jerry. A road scene shows him astride his motorcycle riding up the road.

GAUMONT.

REEL LIFE No. 44 (March 4).—The first subject of this reel is "Strange Industries of the Arabs." The primitive methods of the people are well displayed in pictures of wool winders, the makers of wooden bowls, the weavers of carpets and knife grinders, who turn the stone with their feet.

"Conch-Artistry" displays the method of using shells and other products of the sea in the manufacture of ornamental objects. The skill of Benvenuto Cellini himself seems to be rivaled by modern processes of silver plating the exquisite shells.

A vegetable protein called autocyelin is presented to the public in a section of this reel which asks "Will this cure cancer?" In the United States 130,000 die annually of cancer.

"Making a Rubber Shoe" begins with placing within reach of the operator the various pieces cut to the proper size. A cloth lining is placed on the last, the insole and joining strip are then attached, the toe strip is put on, and soon the other parts are fastened, the special rubber cement applied, and the shoe is ready for the wearer.

This issue of "Reel Life" concludes with a short subject called "Criminal Cuteness." The puppy is left to play with the baby and succeeds in getting most of the milk from the baby's bottle.

REEL LIFE No. 45 (March 8).—Moving the day of release of "Reel Life" from Sunday to Thursday brings two issues of this entertaining single reel to the screen the week of March 4. The second release, No. 45, will appear March 8, Thursday being the new release day. First in importance is "Furs: From Trapper to Wearer." The spectator is shown the purchase of the pelts from Alaskan trappers, their manipulation in the factory, and the finished fur pieces and garments offered for sale. The processes by which the furs are finished for market are very interesting. Among the fur coats shown is one of 125 matched Russian sable skins valued at $50,000.

The second section of the reel shows how hard restaurant proprietors work to cater to the tired business man. Food seems to be only a minor requirement compared with the vast sums spent for music, professional dancers, decorations, and odd entertainments. One unusual feature that appeals to the companion of the tired business man is a ride about the restaurant upon an autoped, driven by one of the dancing directors.

For nature lovers the section devoted to "The Wonderful Pelican" will be particularly entertaining. This ungainly bird, with its enormous bill, capable of holding a 3-pound fish has a U. S. government "Pelican Home" on two islands off the coast of Florida. The pictures show the birds in this protected retreat.

"Artistic Vases" are pictured as they are made on the Jouan gulf in southern France. The various operations of the artistic potters are shown.

REEL LIFE No. 46 (March 15).—What may come to be part of the equipment of every policeman is pictured in this issue of "Reel Life." This is the new police club-rifle, a weapon of deadly precision, contrived from the officer's revolver and a special club. The club has been "rifled," and by its use the revolver gains remarkably in effectiveness. There is a sporting type barrel for other than police use.

"Making the Cactus Useful" is an enlightening exposition of the various uses to which this plant may be put. Few persons know that when the spines have been burnt off a certain variety makes excellent fodder for cattle. From another a rubber gum is obtained which is used in making automobile tires. A third variety, the "water barrel" cactus, is used in making candy. From the spines of the "water barrel" cactus phonograph needles are made. The "maguey" cactus is the base used by Mexicans in making their national intoxicating drinks, mescal and pulque.

Wonderful microscopic studies of the blood are offered under the title of "The Fluid of Life." The circulation is shown in the veins and arteries of a frog. The leucocytes are pictured, and then the blood of a chicken and the blood of a human being are compared. Parasites in the blood are seen under the microscope.

"Gold Mining in Alaska" shows the various methods used in the far north. There is first the beach mining in a "rocker," and then the sluice method used during the gold strike. Dredging and hydraulic mining are pictured with great particularity.

SEE AMERICA FIRST No. 78 (March 7).—Knowledge of the remarkable scenery that makes the coast of the state of Oregon one of the beauty spots of America has been the property of comparatively such a small number of people that the Gaumont company is rendering a distinct service in showing pictures of the rocky coast in this issue of "See America First." The pictures have been taken in the vicinity of Tillamook Rock Lighthouse, a landmark on the coast about fifteen miles south of where the Columbia river runs into the ocean.

Among the beautiful pictures so characteristic of the coast are views of the giant step stones at Chapman's Point, Lost Cave at Ecota Point, the Needles, an interesting rock formation; Tillamook Rock, rising 80 feet above the sea; Arch Cape, Castle Rock, Hug Point, Camel Rock and Haystack Rock. The names themselves are descriptive of the shapes into which wind, water and weather have carved the coast during countless ages.

Pretty summer cottages nestle among the pines along the shore above the beach, the woods are traversed by many trails, and strong winds have twisted the pine trees into grotesque shapes. Tillamook Rock, several miles at sea, is so rugged that not even a small boat can land there. There are attractive pictures of sunlight ripples on the water just before a storm, the breakers at Arch Cape, and the old Iron cannon washed ashore with the wreckage of the U. S. S. Shark, which was broken up here by the waves in 1846.

On the same reel is a Gaumont Cartoon Komic entitled "Rastus Runs Amuck." It is a quaint little oddity of pickaninny life animated for the screen by Harry Palmer.

SEE AMERICA FIRST No. 79 (March 14).—The Mississippi river, the nation's most important waterway, well deserves a prominent place in Gaumont's "See America First." The trip starts with the departure of the steamer from New Orleans. Typical levee scenes are shown, and then come pictures of the towns that line the river bank. Baton Rouge, capital of Louisiana, is next viewed, there being pictures of the state Capitol building and the Southern University, an industrial school for negroes. The pictures of the Baton Rouge National cemetery include a view of the monument erected by the state of Massachusetts. Amite river, with its swift current and moss-covered trees, gives one an excellent idea of the tributaries of the Father of Waters in the southern states.

On the same reel is a Gaumont Cartoon Komic, animated for the screen by Harry Palmer. It is called "They Say Pigs Is Pigs." This is a picture of the humorous adventures of a string of sausages which are stolen from a butcher shop by a dog, purloined from the canine by a cat, and eventually turned into pigs in a miraculous fashion.

TOURS AROUND THE WORLD No. 18 (March 6).—The scenes pictured are extremely timely, being views of Munich, the Schonbrunn Castle at Vienna, and Rustchuk, Bulgaria. Munich is the third largest city of Germany. The spectator is shown the Bavaria monument, the Karlplatz, the double towered town hall, the Frauenkirche (Women's Church) with its spires 326 feet high; the university, the Hofbrau beer garden, and typical street and market scenes.

Schonbrunn Castle has been the scene of a myriad of imposing ceremonials in the life of the Austrian court. It is the favorite summer residence of the imperial family of Austria. It was here that Napoleon had his headquarters when he upset Europe. The beautiful Giorlette gallery is one of the views shown, a favorite resort of Empress Marie Theresa. The fountain of Neptune is another work of art that is well known. Napoleon's son, the Duke of Reichstadt, died here in 1832.

Rustchuk, on the Danube, in northern Bulgaria, is a city of 40,000 population. It has been a fortified city since it was an outpost of the Roman empire. The pictures include views of the Prince Boris Lyceum, the mosque, and the monument to the independence of Bulgaria. There are typical Bulgarian street scenes.

TOURS AROUND THE WORLD No. 19 (March 13).—Variety is offered in this issue of "Tours Around the World." There are two series of views, the reel depicting Koursk, a Siberian frontier village, and the oasis of Gabes on the edge of the Desert of Sarah. Koursk has the air of a town in western Canada or the northwestern part of the United States. It will come as a surprise to those who regard Siberia as a land of ice and snow, squalor and convict misery, to find the citizens of Koursk well dressed and the town itself enjoying an air of evident prosperity. To see camels so far from their native deserts startles one, yet here they are in Koursk harnessed and doing the work of horses. The town has telephones and electric street cars, and is a station on the Trans-Siberian railway. A picture is also shown of the fishing rod market at Ouraisk, a small Siberian village.

The village and oasis of Gabes, at the extreme northern edge of the desert of Sahara, has a population of 20,000. The oasis is watered by a small stream which flows into the Gulf of Gabes. This is one of the most interesting places in all Tunis. There are pictures which show the typical industries of the natives. The Bedouins raise millet, the chief food product of desert countries, and dates, which grow in abundance in the oasis. The women make urns and weave cloth. The principal article of export is dates.

MUTUAL STAR PRODUCTION.

THE GIRL FROM RECTOR'S (Five parts—March 5).—Loute Sedaine, a French dancer and known along Broadway as "The Girl From Rector's," attracts the attention of Andy Tandy, a man about town, who has little regard for the reputation of the girl. Richard Lawrence also meets her and for the time being thinks that he loves her and protects her from the advances of Tandy. Complications arise and in the end the fact that Tandy has a wife and daughter is disclosed and also that "The Girl From Rector's" is a happily married woman who has become a dancer only because of the love of art and thirst for adventure.

Channing. Jack's mother died when the girl was born. King Channing desired a son when Jack arrived. He accordingly raised his daughter as a boy. At 16 she still continued to be dressed in boy's clothes. One day she met Bob Ridgeway, son of Channing's aristocratic neighbors. Shortly after King Channing died. His will bequeathed his fortune to Jack, to be held in trust, with her two maiden aunts as guardians of the girl, until she shall become of legal age or shall marry.

Life with Jack's maiden aunts is almost unbearable. They decide that she be sent to boarding school, and for a time, in her new surroundings (being now properly dressed in girl's clothes), Jack is contented. But the restraint finally palls upon her and she runs away from school. She finds board and lodging with a woman who has, as another paying guest, a girl who has just left a position in the office of Ridgeway & Son. Jack is advised to apply for the position. This she does and is given employment.

The affairs of Ridgeway & Son have been going from bad to worse. They are nearly at the point of disaster, when matters take an unexpected turn. There is a valuable piece of mining property they can secure at a great bargain. Bob goes West, and secures from the owner of the property his promise to sell at a definite figure—but Bob cannot secure an option. The secrets of Ridgeway & Son have been "leaking" through the conduct of the chief clerk, who sells to a rival firm the information he cunningly contrives to secure.

That Ridgeway & Son want to buy the copper property becomes known to their business rivals. The Ridgeways are lacking in funds. Jack has a plan, and proposes it to Bob. They shall marry and draw enough of Jack's fortune to pay for the property. The proposal is so daring that it fairly takes Bob's breath, but he has loved the girl from the day he met her in the woods, and she has likewise loved him.

Bob and Jack marry, but when it comes to going West with the money to close the deal the elder Ridgeway is so ill that Bob cannot leave him. So Jack makes the trip, beats the Ridgeways' rivals to the property and secures the deed. When Jack returns home the elder Ridgeway is restored to health, largely a result of Jack's cleverness in saving the firm from bankruptcy. The closing scene shows Jack moving in social life.

HELL MORGAN'S GIRL (Special—Five Parts—March 5).—The cast: Lola (Dorothy Phillips); Olga (Lillian Rosine); Oliver Curwell (Joseph Girard); Roger Curwell (William Stowell); "Hell" Morgan (Alfred Allen); Sletter Noble (Lou Chaney). Scenario written by Ida May Park. Directed by Joseph De Grasse.

When Oliver Curwell disowned his son Roger because he declined to abandon art and go into business, Roger gradually drifted from bad to worse until he was a derelict on the streets of San Francisco. In his art-student days a girl of the name of Olga had shown interest in him, believing he would inherit his father's millions, but when he was cast off the girl abandoned her pretense of affection.

One evening Roger wanders into "Sailor's Rest," a saloon and dance hall run by "Hell" Morgan. A work of art hanging behind the bar Roger denounced as a "daub." Morgan resented this remark and was beating Roger when Lola saved his life by her interference. Morgan's daughter continued to befriend Roger and finally prevailed upon her father to give Roger the job of playing the piano in the dance hall.

Roger painted Lola's portrait and they fell in love with each other. Sletter, a tough politician, objected, for the reason that he coveted Morgan's daughter. Olga leads a party of friends to "Sailor's Rest" on a slumming tour. She sees Roger at the piano and sends for him, as she read in the newspapers of the death of Oliver Curwell, who willed his millions to his son.

Roger joins Olga's party, and the old days are recalled. He forgets his love for Lola, and makes advances which Olga reciprocates. Lola goes to the party of slummers, and takes physical toll of both Roger and Olga. As a result Roger leaves "Sailor's Rest" and Lola resigns herself to Sletter.

But when he attempts to collect his reward, Lola rebels and resists his advances. The tumult in Lola's room attracts "Hell" Morgan. He dashes upstairs, and in an encounter with Sletter is shot and mortally wounded. Lola drives Sletter from her room and escapes, dragging her father down a fire escape.

The Gold King Screen

THE PATENT

The screen that causes our competitors to lose sleep, and is causing some of them to circulate a lot of unfair advertising to the Exhibitors, threatening them with Law Suits, and telling them they are infringing on their rights by buying and using the Gold King Screen. Mr. Supply man and Exhibitor are you going to swallow all of this kind of stuff handed to you by those people; are you going to allow them to simply scare you into buying whether you want it or not? Why should they threaten the Supply men and the Exhibitor if they have the only patents on Gold Finish Screen? Why don't they bring suit against the Gold King Screen Company for infringements? They have not even notified us that we were infringing on their rights.

We are making and selling our screens by permission of the United States Patent Office, under Patent No. 1082123 issued to Samuel H. Jones of Altus, Oklahoma, on the 23rd day of December, 1913, and the Gold King Screen Company has set apart $5,000.00 in the City National Bank of Altus, Okla., for the purpose of fighting any suits brought against any supply dealers or exhibitors for selling or buying Gold King Screens.

Hardly have they reached the ground when San Francisco's earthquake and fire break loose. "Sailor's Rest" tumbles in a burning heap. Helping her father, Lola reaches the Presidio, where refugees are assembling. Her father is near death and she seeks a doctor in the crowd. Roger has been drawn back to "Sailor's Rest" by his love for Lola, and when he finds the place in ruins he likewise wends his way to the Presidio. Fate brings them together as "Hell" Morgan dies.

WORLD PICTURES.

THE WEB OF DESIRE (Five Parts—March 5).—The cast: Grace Miller (Ethel Clayton); John Miller (Rockcliffe Fellowes); Mrs. Langley (Doris Field); Stuart Mordant (Richard Turner); Thomas Hurd (Edward M. Kimball); Marjorie (Madge Evans); Robert Elwell (William Williams). Directed by Emile Chautard.

John Miller has invested all his money in the Western Power and Development Company, of which he is president, and, together with the stock which his wife has inherited from her father, is in control of the company. When the water rights owned by the company are declared valid, John becomes a millionaire and moves to New York with his wife, Grace, and little daughter, Marjorie.

After a year John neglects his wife. Hurd, one of the directors, desires to amalgamate the company with the Eastern Syndicate, with which he is also secretly allied. John opposes this, and Mordant, a lawyer, agrees to get control of the stock for half a million dollars.

Grace's loneliness causes her to mingle with a Bohemian set, and on being invited to Elwell's, a business acquaintance of John's, Grace is snubbed by the hostess. Mordant invites her into the conservatory, persuades her to drink, and later at dinner, her boisterous behavior attracts attention. John excuses his wife's "illness," and Mordant offers to escort her home in order that John may remain for a business conference.

The next night Mordant calls on Grace while John is away, and persuades her to elope with him. However, the entrance of Marjorie, her little daughter, causes her to change her mind. Mordant becomes impatient and enters the room just as John returns, and then hides on the balcony. John is suspicious on seeing Grace in traveling costume and becomes contrite when she says she was going to leave him. A noise on the balcony causes him to investigate and he sees a man running away. Grace refuses to reveal who it is.

Later, Mordant persuades her to meet him at a questionable road house, and contrives that her pocket book be left behind, and returned to her when John is at home. John again demands the name of the man, and, when Grace refuses, forces her to leave the house. She goes to Mordant, who persuades her to sign an order transferring her stock to him, in order to secure redress from her husband. As she is leaving, John enters. She listens, and finds she has been tricked. She makes her way into the directors' meeting, tears up the paper, and, pointing to Mordant, says to her husband, "This is the man you wished me to name." John rushes at Mordant, but is held back. He then pushes a pistol toward him, saying "There is but one course open to you."

Mordant leaves the room, a shot is heard, and a note is found exonerating Grace, and stating Mordant is leaving for Europe. John and Grace decide to unravel their tangled destinies together.

METRO PICTURES CORP.

THE BARRICADE—(Rolf Photoplays, Inc.—Five Parts—March 5).—The cast: Hope Merrill (Mabel Taliaferro); Amos Merrill (Frank Currier); John Cook (Clifford Bruce); Gerald Hastings (Robert Rendell); Flower girls (Lorna Molare and Mary Doyle); Butler (Emil Collins). Directed by Edwin Carewe.

Amos Merrill, president of the United Securities company, has been speculating with the corporation's money, and is on the verge of discovery. He has been the undisputed business leader, but suddenly finds himself supplanted by John Cook, a young man from the West. Merrill's daughter, Hope, attends a ball, where she meets Cook and snubs him. As Cook has been made much of by other women, he becomes interested in Hope. Merrill finds his defalcation has been discovered broods over his trouble, and his manner arouses the suspicions of the butler. When Hope returns she and the butler break into his room and are just in time to prevent him from committing suicide. He tells his daughter Cook has ruined him. Hope urges her father to have courage, as she is determined to avenge the wrong.

She begins to be charming and gracious to Cook. Out of pity for her father's plight Cook has made good Merrill's deficit, giving him three months to pay him back. When Cook proposes to Hope, and she accepts him, he releases Merrill from all liability.

After a brilliant wedding Hope loses no time in letting Cook know the real condition of affairs. Although he presents her with a large bank account and securities, she tells Cook she intends to be a wife in name only, and that she has married him in a spirit of revenge. Going to her apartment she locks the door communicating with her husband's room after showing him a revolver which she says she will use if he tries to annoy her.

Husband and wife meet only at dinner and on formal occasions. Hope perfects her plans for ruining her husband financially. A business rival, Gerald Hastings, is her frequent companion. She enters into a conspiracy, using her knowledge against her husband. She studies the stock market and blocks Cook's move. She is openly disdainful in the hope of making him angry, but he maintains perfect courtesy and good humor, robbing her of the satisfaction she has in thwarting him.

Finally Cook is ruined, his fortune passing into his wife's hands. She is in the office of Hastings rejoicing over her success, when her father returns from a vacation. When she tells him what she has done he is horrified and tells her that instead of being his enemy Cook has really proved to be his best friend. Hope is overcome with shame, realizing the nobility of her husband's character. She reaches home just in time to prevent him from leaving for the West, asks for his forgiveness, and as it is readily granted the barricade is raised, and the two at last come into the happiness that is their rightful due.

GREATER VITAGRAPH.

INTRIGUE (Five parts—Feb. 26).—The cast: Peggy Dare (Peggy Hyland); Grand Duke (Bobby Connolly); Richard Carr (Marc MacDermott); Mrs. Carr (Mrs. Remley); Prince Toursville (Templer Saxe); Prince Henri (Brinsley Shaw); Pierre (Harry Southwell); Princess Alice (Miss Curley); Marie (Nellie Spitzer). Directed by John Robertson.

Peggy Dare, an American heiress, is journeying to her sweetheart in the capital of the Grand Duchy of Bonaluria. A boy is thrown at her feet as the train pulls out. Peggy is so taken with the child that she takes care of him as a note pinned to his waist asks. The child gives his name as Manouche. At Bonaluria Peggy foils an attempt to kill the child with a bomb and learns from her sweetheart Richard Carr that the boy is the Grand Duke of Bonaluria.

Peggy goes to Carr's home, to live with his mother, until she and Carr are married. The little Duke pines for Peggy, and is very lonely. Peggy is presented at Court, decorated for saving the Duke's life, and upsets Court etiquette by hugging the little Grand Duke. Later, the same mysterious power Prince Henri causes the Grand Duke to be abducted. Henri is wildly in love with Peggy, but she repulses his advances.

Manouche, the little Grand Duke, when Henri imprisons him places on his cloak a pin that Peggy has given him. When Henri calls Peggy sees the pin and understands. She agrees to fly with Henri, who is leaving the country that night (taking the little duke with him). He takes her to his castle, where Manouche is a prisoner. Carr, told of their having gone off together, follows and confronts them, but is thrown in a cell by Henri. Toursville and Royal Guards who have been summoned by Peggy arrive and rescue Manouche. Carr apologizes for his suspicions. And a little later, Peggy and Carr marry and sail for America, while the lonely Grand Duke waves farewell to them: "Some day you'll come back when I'm more grown up."

THE SECRET KINGDOM (11th Episode, "The White Witch"—Two Parts—March 12).—Prior to the escape of Phillip, Ramon and the others, Senor Ortiz, a wealthy planter, was told he would die by the same hand that would slay the Voodoo priestess.

The parties separate—Phillip, Juan and Julia appeal to Ortiz for shelter. But when Tom, a negro servant, sees Julia he flees in terror. Cornered by Ortiz, he relates how the priestess died by the "silent death" when Princess Julia, pointed her finger at her. Terrified, Ortiz recalls the prophecy.

Tom hands Ortiz a knife and urges him to slay the "White Witch." Meanwhile Julia, her nerves shattered by the experiences she has undergone, suffers an attack of sleep-walking. As Ortiz enters, she rises, steps forward, eyes closed, face placid, one finger pointing directly at the terror-stricken Ortiz. He tries to raise his knife, but cannot do so. The terrible shock brings on heart failure and he drops dead.

Ramon and Mme. Savatz arrive and Juan rushes out, but before he can do anything Julia has been seized by Ramon, who races away on horseback with Savatz. Phillip and Juan pursue. Reaching the coast, Ramon hurries Julia aboard the sloop and starts away. Phillip and Juan give pursuit in another boat—the sloop is wrecked, and Phillip and Juan arrive in time to save Princess Julia, while Ramon and Madam Savatz, washed overboard, barely manage to swim to shore.

KIDDING SISTER (Feb. 26).—The cast: Young sister (Billie Rhodes); the boy (Harry Ham); mother (Stella Adams); older sister (Ethel Lynne). Directed by Horace Davey.

A young man helps Ethel out of trouble with her car and she asks him to call. But Ethel has a sister, Billie, a little younger and pretty, so Ethel fears she'll have no chance. Mother says "We'll dress Billie as a child until you land him." Billie objects, but Mother and Ethel carry out the plan. Harry calls and takes a great fancy to the "child." He brings her candy and toys and dolls, while Billie rages inwardly.

There is to be a party and Billie insists upon going, so vehemently that Harry overhears her, and learns the secret. Mother refuses, but Billie slips off and Harry falls for her harder than ever. Next day he determines to have some fun, so he says, "Come, sit on my knee, my child." She does and each one thinks they are kidding the other. Stella and Ethel catch them and are horrified. Harry's love-making gives him away and he proposes. They drive to the minister, who refuses to marry such a child to anyone. Ethel and mother have followed, and when Harry says, Billie or nobody," mother consents to the marriage.

SEVEN DEADLY SINS No. 5.—"Passion"—Five Parts—Feb. 26. The cast: Eve Leslie (Shirley Mason); Adam Moore (George LeGuere); Leonidas (Clifford Bruce); Monks (Bigelow Cooper); Eugenia (Ruby Hoffman); Aunt Annie (Mabel Strickland); Leonidas' wife (Edith Wright); "Crude Oil" Biddle (Edmund Dalby); Zobeiski, wrestler (Harry Gripp). Directed by Richard Ridgely.

Escaping from "Pride," Eve Leslie next is tempted by the sin of "Passion." Eve goes to Coney Island and there sees Leonidas, a handsome strong man who is appearing in an athletic exhibition which includes a number of diving girls. In spite of Adam Moore's protests, Eve contrives to meet Leonidas, who employs her as a member of his troupe.

Leonidas is a despicable person always posing, but Eve does not realize that. She does not know, either, that Leonidas is married and that he has practically deserted his wife.

Eve finds herself in rough company. She thinks she loves Leonidas and she is blind to real conditions. She surmounts one difficulty after another, she passes through a series of thrilling scenes culminating with the evening at Madison Square Garden when Leonidas defeats the world's champion wrestler in a grueling battle.

Through Adam's aid, Eve, who has unconsciously got herself into a terrible predicament, is saved from herself just as she was about to marry Leonidas, who had cast off his wife.

HER CIRCUS KNIGHT (Sennett Keystone—Two Parts—March 4).—The cast includes: Ora Carew, Andy Anderson, Joseph "Baldy" Belmont, Joseph Callahan, Mal St. Clair, Lige

Model "V" Orchestra Installed in Orpheum Theatre, Cincinnati, O.

Mr. A. J. Hettesheimer, Manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Cincinnati, says:

"The Wurlitzer Hope-Jones Unit Orchestra installed in this Theatre has been the greatest purchase we have ever made. We have used competitive instruments, but we believe that the Wurlitzer Instrument is the one musical combination in the world that could fill our large house and do justice to the high character of our films."

You may read similar testimonials to this from the most leading Theatre managers in the country.

If You Want to Make More Money Fill Your Empty Seats

The money that you lose every day in empty seats proves that the pulling power of YOUR Theatre has not been strong enough to have kept those seats filled. You need an additional Pulling Power to do this.

The Wurlitzer (Hope-Jones) Unit Orchestra Will Positively Fill Those Seats

The interest of your films, reinforced by the magnificent musical effect of the Wurlitzer Hope-Jones Unit Orchestra, makes the picture doubly interesting. This means that the investments you have already made are doubled in value by this musical attraction. Scores of the foremost Theatres throughout the country testify to this fact.

Crommie, Nick Cogley, Blanche Payson. Directed by Walter Wright.

Ora Carew, a street orphan, becomes weary of her prosaic life with an unprincipled guardian who is always in trouble with the police, so she runs away and joins the circus. She observes that Blanche Payson, who is scheduled to make a parachute drop from Joseph Belmont's flying machine, does not appear. Without warning, Miss Carew decides to do the drop, and in a few moments is high in the air. When Mr. Belmont cuts the parachute loose, the frightened little girl is dropped to the ground. She reaches the ground unhurt and the circus manager gives her a chance to learn to ride a horse and to do trapeze work.

The aviator falls in love with Miss Carew. One day when her guardian, Andy Anderson, comes to the circus and recognizes the ringmaster as an old friend, complications follow in which the girl is stolen. She escapes, however, and returns to the circus. Various episodes of circus life are shown and the girl is finally rescued from her pursuers by her lover, Belmont, the aviator.

THE TIGER WOMAN—(Five Parts—Feb. 19).—The cast: Princess Petrovitch (Theda Bara); Prince Petrovitch (E. F. Roseman); Baron Kesingi (Louis Dean); Count Zerstorff (Emil Du Varny); Steven (John Dillon); Edwin Harris (Glenn White); Mrs. Mark Harris (Mary Martin); Mark Harris (Herbert Heyes); Their Child ("Kittens" Reichert); Father of Harris Boys (Edward Holt); Marion Harding (Florence Martin); Marion's Father (George Clarke); Marion's Mother (Kate Blanke). Scenario by Adrian Johnson. Directed by J. Gordon Edwards.

Princess Petrovitch, the wife of a Russian noble, is consumed with a desire to live only for money and priceless jewels. For the love of money and illicit passion for her husband's friend, Count Zerstorff, she hands her husband over to the Russian secret police, after she overhears a conversation between him and a Japanese spy, and sees a half million rubles passed for important revelations involving the Russian government. After the arrest she takes the bribe money and leaves for Monte Carlo with the Count.

Count Zerstorff loses the money and implores the Princess to sell some of her jewels. She refuses and the Count threatens to leave her. She then places poison in the Count's breakfast coffee. She tells the police that the Count killed himself following his losses at the gaming table. The Princess leaves for the United States. On board the liner she makes the acquaintance of Edwin Harris, the son of an American millionaire, and upon their arrival in New York the Princess invites Harris to dine with her that evening. His father and brother try to dissuade him, but he keeps the appointment. In the main dining-room of the hotel the Princess is the cynosure of all eyes. Harris sees his fiancée, Marion Harding, who passes him by. Later she breaks off the engagement. Harris senior warns his son that he is taking the wrong path. There is a quarrel and the result finds the young man disinherited.

Short of money, the Princess urges her lover to get more. He is in the act of rifling his father's safe when he is surprised in the dark by an unknown person, whom he feels. He returns to the apartment of the Princess and hands her the stolen money. He is arrested and learns that he has killed his father. Later he is convicted and sent to prison for life. In attempting to escape he is killed by one of the guards.

Having lost young Harris, the Princess sets about to capture the elder brother, Mark, who has a wife and a little daughter. Through a ruse, she invites him to her apartment and soon has him in her toils. He leaves his family and installs the Princess in a pretty villa.

A former servant in the Princess' Russian home attempts to extort money as the price of his silence. She agrees and tells him to call for it at night. When he arrives she has him arrested, telling the police that she surprised the intruder in the act of robbing her home.

Thinking herself safe, she is suddenly confronted by the servant, who has escaped. Fearing his vengeance, she offers him her jewels and money. Frightened, she picks up a dagger. And as she is about to plunge it in his breast the servant grasps her wrist and buries the dagger in her own heart. Mark enters the room. Horrified, he is about to kneel beside the SISTER AGAINST SISTER—(Five Parts—March 5).—Two sisters, Katherine and Anne, are parted when their poor but respectable parents separate after a family quarrel. Katherine goes with her father and is dragged to the bottom of the social pit. Her father is killed in a saloon row, throwing the girl into the slums. Anne has lived in the refining influence of her mother.

Years pass and environment has done its work. Katherine appears as a bejeweled product of the netherworld. Hate is her ruling passion. Her master, or toy, is Huxley, a manufacturer.

A big political fight is on. Dunsmore is candidate for governor on a child labor platform. From their council room in a hotel the manufacturers telephone to Huxley to spike Dunsmore's guns.

Anne, at the switchboard, overhears the plan. She leaves her place and warns Dunsmore while he and Huxley are conferring. Dunsmore drives Huxley from his home. Love awakens between him and Anne.

Anne's leaving the switchboard costs her her job. She gets a place as governess in the home of Mrs. Raymond, Dunsmore's sister. Dunsmore is surprised to find Anne there. He asks her to marry him. Mr. Raymond tells Anne she could best show her love by withdrawing from Dunsmore's life. She goes.

Smarting under his defeat Huxley plots to "get" Dunsmore through a woman. As Dunsmore enters his hotel Katherine approaches him. Mistaking her for Anne, for whom he has been searching, Dunsmore rushes to her.

Katherine leads him to Huxley's apartment. While there Huxley enters. After abusing Dunsmore he draws a gun. As he aims Katherine pulls a revolver from a bureau and fire. Huxley falls dead. Dunsmore, thinking she is Anne, lets Katherine escape. He is arrested as the slayer.

At the trial Dunsmore hides the name of the mysterious woman. Anne gives herself up as the murderess. On the stand her testimony shows she knows nothing about the murder.

Visions of Huxley drive Katherine, half-crazed, to the courthouse. Staggering into the courtroom, she cries, "I am the woman. I am guilty." She confesses all.

When Dunsmore sees the fatal resemblance between the two sisters. As he realizes that Anne was offering her life for him, he rushes to embrace her and they leave the courtroom together. Katherine is led to a cell.

A BON-BON RIOT—(Two Parts—Foxfilm—Feb. 26).—The cast: The Candy Maker (Hank Mann); His Assistant (Lee Morris); Proprietor (Sidney De Grey); Cashier (Edyth Hoskins). Directed by Hank Mann.

Mann, the candymaker, is peacefully sleeping in the candy kitchen until a lot of taffy hanging from a hook drops and lands on his face.

A freight elevator which connects with the floor on which ice cream is served attracts Mann's attention and for several moments he apparently defies the laws of gravity thereon. His assistant, lanky Lee Morris, goes to sleep on a slab and Mann absent-mindedly pours a kettle of molten candy over him. When Morris awakens he is stuck.

Mann then pulls taffy and throws a loop through the elevator opening and lassoes a lady customer about the ankles, pulls her into the basement and endeavors to bring her back to consciousness by turning the stream from a tank of carbonated water over her. The police interfere, but one of them is blown through the roof by the force of the tank.

EXQUISITE LAKE LOUISE (Feb. 26). The most picturesque spot of all Canada is, without doubt, Lake Louise. From Banff Mr. Holmes asks you to go with him through a scenic wonderland through beautiful canyons overshadowed by snow-capped mountain peaks, from one of the most up-to-date hotels of today to the lovely chateau which was so placed on the banks of Lake Louise as to give the tourist the most perfect outlook. On the way from Banff you will encounter a shower followed by a rainbow.

In addition to Lake Louise, Mr. Holmes takes you to Lake Agnes, Mirror Lake and to Lake O'Hara and Moraine Lake in the Valley of the Ten Peaks, and on other days up mountain trails to lakes in the clouds—literally up in cloudland besides following a real Swiss guide over the surface and to the ice cave of Victoria glacier.

THOSE WITHOUT SIN (Lasky—Five Parts—Feb. 26). The cast includes: Blanche Sweet, Tom Forman, C. H. Geldert, Guy Oliver, James Neill, Charles Ogle, George Beranger, Mabel Van Buren, Dot Abril, Edna Wilson and Little Billy Jacobs.

Melanie Landry lives with her father, a government clerk, in the South at the time the civil war breaks out. Bob Wallace, just out of West Point, is in love with Melanie. At a dance Melanie meets Henry Melon, head of the office in which Melanie's father is a clerk. Melon manipulates Landry's accounts in a way that will compromise him and calls on him. He offers to make good this supposed shortage under certain conditions. Melanie leaves while Melon tries to restrain her. She is seen by gossiping women and Chester, Bob's crippled brother. Chester demands to know why Melon attempted to detain the girl and when denied this information slaps Melon.

Melanie tells her father of the insult, and as Melon is preparing to leave in answer to a summons from Washington, he is caught, tarred and feathered and ridden out of town on a rail.

That night Sumter is fired upon and the young men join their respective companies. The Union army is rapidly approaching Richmond and the citizens are preparing to leave. A Confederate officer gives Melanie dispatches to take through the line and dummy dispatches to Chester. At a roadside tavern they are captured by Federal soldiers under command of Melon, who orders Chester shot as a spy, but he escapes. The Union officer agrees to let everyone go if Melanie will stay with him.

Melanie, to save her neighbors, consents, but when Melon attempts to approach her, blinds his eyes with pepper. Chester, in the meantime, has reached safety and Bob has been warned of the presence of the Federal troops. Melon recovers his eyesight and is about to attack Melanie when Bob shoots him. The Union soldiers are put to rout and the lovers are saved.

THE FORTUNES OF FIFI (Famous Players—Five Parts—Feb. 26). The cast: Fifi (Marguerite Clark); Cartouche (William Sorelle); Durvent (John Sainpolis); Julie (Yvonne Chevallier); Mme. Bourcet (Kate Lester); Louis Bourcet (Jean Gauthier); The General (J. K. Murray).

Fifi is seen as Pierrot in a French play that is a failure despite her effort to put ginger into the rest of the cast. Among the few in the last audience was Cartouche, a veteran, who had become an actor when his wounds no longer allowed him to follow Napoleon. Through Cartouche's efforts Fifi is employed at the Imperial theater in Paris. He takes her to his lodging, determined to protect her.

Fifi fails to understand how much Cartouche is doing for her, and when he gives her money to buy clothes she purchases a toy dog called Toto. The veteran buys a lottery ticket and gives it to Fifi. The ticket bears the winning number and Fifi finds herself in possession of a fortune. Cartouche decides Fifi must be educated. He applies to his old general, who suggests that Fifi be sent to the home of Louis Bourcet, an attorney who lives alone with his mother.

Instead of putting her money in the bank Fifi hides it and startles the Bourcet family by her extravagance. They decide she has even more money than they thought and Louis begins to see in the wealthy Fifi a very acceptable wife. He makes love to the girl, and she accepts his proffer.

Then she sets about to make him break the engagement by squandering her money, realizing she is in love with Cartouche. Accordingly she buys the most impossible things, scandalizing the Bourcet family into a complete renunciation by giving the remainder of her wealth to a charitable benefit for old soldiers. Ejected from the house by the angry Mme. Bourcet, Fifi returns to the Imperial, where she demands more money for her services because she has been publicly thanked by the General for her donation to charity.

She tells Cartouche she loves him, but the old soldier refuses to permit her to "throw herself away" upon him until Fifi gets an inspiration of her own.

SPEED (Black Diamond—March 5).—Susie Speed loses her job in a lawyer's office and gets another one as waitress in a restaurant. Her slowness nearly drives the manager crazy. A chappie enters and sits at Sue's table without removing his high hat. After several attempts to remove it Sue places it on his chair and he sits on it. She then throws it through the service window, where it lands on a tray, and another waitress serves it to Herr Tonik, a scientist. He tries to eat it and on discovering his mistake, angrily leaves. Sue and Maggie start a fight. The manager throws Sue out.

Sue sends a sign "Stenographer Wanted" at the "Chemical Research Laboratory" and applies for the job. Herr Tonik engages her. As she dawdles over her typing he recognizes her as the girl from the restaurant and determines to speed her up. His experiments evolve a "speed powder" and he tries it out on a dog. The dog jumps out of a third story window, climbs a tree, sits in the branches and howls.

Satisfied, Herr Tonik gives some to Sue in a box of candy. She speeds up, fairly burns the typewriter. Tonik dispatches Sue to the factory with a bag of the powder in his car. Failing to start the car by cranking, Sue gives it some of the powder, whereupon it goes so fast that it runs into a wooden Indian. Frightened, Sue gives the Indian some of the powder and he comes to life and threatens to take her. She escapes on a wooden horse which she brings to life in the same way.

The factory manager refuses to believe the powder is as wonderful as Sus says. She throws a pinch of it into the street and the traffic begins to move like mad. She blows some toward the river and the boats go crazy. A ferry boat loops the loop and dives into its slip. The drawbridge opens and shuts in a flash as boats and trains dash by. This tickles the office boy. He wants to see real action and throws the bag out of the window. Sue escapes as the factory begins to rock and dashes out while the powder starts a cyclone which whirls across the city, tearing up trees and houses and destroying everything in its path.

She reaches the laboratory just ahead of the cyclone and tells Herr Tonik. In the midst of this the office begins to whirl and Sue wakes up as Herr Tonik calls her down for sleeping on the job.
